(c) A decree against the person and other property of the defendants (including the purchaser) in case the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property were less than the decretal amount. The purchaser pleaded inter alia that his person and other property and the mortgagee rights of the mortgagor were not liable. His defence was allowed. A decree nisi under section 88 of Act IV of 1882 was passed allowing the sale of the mortgaged property with the exception of the mortgagee rights of the mortgagor. In execution of his decree, Jamna Das had the mortgaged property sold but the sale-proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the decree. He then applied for a decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act against the person and property of Pandit Ram Autar Pande. The prayer of the decree-holder was refused and his petition rejected. The decree of the first Court was affirmed both by the High Court of Allahabad and the Privy Council. Their Lordships of the Privy Council delivered a short judgment. "The action" they said, "is brought by a mortgagee to enforce against a purchaser of the mortgaged property an undertaking that he entered into with his vendor. The mortgagee has no right to avail himself of that. He was no party to the sale. The purchaser entered into no contract with him, and the purchaser is not personally bound to pay this mortgage-debt. Therefore, he is not a person from whom, in the words of the 90th section of the Transfer of Property Act, the balance is legally recoverable."

The principle upon which the case of Jamna Das was decided has no application to the present case. Had it been decided in that case that Jamna Das could not enforce his mortgage against the mortgaged property in the hands of Ram Autar Pande, the purchaser of the equity of redemption, because the latter was no party to the contract of mortgage, the argument for the respondent would have been relevant. All that was decided in the case of Jamna Das was that he could not recover the balance of his debt after selling the mortgaged property from the person and other property of the purchaser of the equity of redemption on the ground that by the terms of the deed of sale, some of the sale price was left with him for payment to the mortgagee. In the present case, the plaintiffs-appellants do not seek to recover anything more than the property mortgaged to their ancestor, Manak Chand. The contention for the respondent fails.

The second ground of objection is that Manak Chand not being a transferee or an assignee of the decree of the 30th of November 1870, the suit is not maintainable. The objection has been urged on the basis of the argument for the appellants that as Manak Chand was not a transferee or an assignee of the decree of the 30th of November, 1870, the plaintiffs-appellants could not execute that decree taking that decree to be a decree capable of execution and not a declaratory decree. The respondent, accepting the argument of the appellants, says that as they do not represent an assignee of the decree in favour of Mehdi Hasan, dated the 30th of November, 1870, they cannot maintain the suit. The contention for the respondent involves the assumption that a suit on the basis of a decree can be maintained only by the decree-holder or by his assignee or transferee and not by a person in whose favour less than the right awarded by the decree has been transferred. It may be that a person in whose favour a partial right out of the decreed right has been transferred may not, under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, execute the decree but no law or authority has been cited in support of the argument that such a person cannot maintain a suit to enforce the partial right conveyed to him by the decree-holder. In fact there are cases on record where lessees for a term of years from persons holding decrees for maintenance have sued and obtained decrees against the parties in possession of the estate charged with the payment of the maintenance. Vide Nawab Wala Qadar Vazir Mirza v. Khuda Bakhsh (10). We find that the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants is maintainable.

The appeal prevails. The decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the decree of the first Court is restored. Costs of all the Courts are allowed to the appellants.

Appeal allowed.

Rent suit—Exchange of patta and muchilikas—Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865), s. 7—Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 53—Accrual of right—Limitation.

A landlord is entitled to maintain a suit for rent under the Estates Land Act without tendering a patta. Even under the Rent Recovery Act, the exchange of pattas and muchilikas or the tender of a patta was not necessary to give the landlord a right to the rent, and section 7 of the Act did not lay down any rule of limitation.

The effect of section 7 was to make the tender of a patta a condition precedent to entitle the landlord to institute legal proceedings to enforce the terms of a tenancy and not a condition necessary to complete his right to the rent.

BISHESHAR TEWARI v. BISHESHAR DAYAL.

The right to each instalment of rent accrues on the date fixed for the payment of the instalment according to the contract between the parties or according to usage and not when a patta is tendered. Limitation would run from that date.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 159 of 1909, presented against the decision of the Court of the Sub Collector at Parvatipur Division, in E. S. No. 34 of 1908.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiff, a land-holder, instituted a suit for rent of Faslis 1315 to 1317 and of a portion of Fasli 1318. The Sub-Collector passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour which was reversed by the District Court, so far as the rent for Faslis 1315 to 1317 was concerned on the ground that the plaintiff did not tender a patta to the defendant for those Faslis, and the suit for rent for those Faslis was, therefore, unsustainable under the provisions of section 7 of the Rent Recovery Act, VIII of 1865. That section provided that "no suit brought, and no legal proceedings taken, to enforce the terms of a tenancy shall be sustainable unless pattas and muchilikas have been exchanged as aforesaid." The effect of the section was to make the tender of a patta a condition precedent to entitle a landlord to institute legal proceedings to enforce the terms of a tenancy. It did not make the exchange of pattas and muchilikas, or the tender of a patta, necessary to give the landlord a right to the rent of the land in the tenant's possession. That right was complete when the tenant obtained from the land his landlord's share of the produce. It was held, while Act VIII of 1865 was in force, in cases where rent was payable by instalments, that the right to each instalment of rent accrued on the date fixed for the instalment and that limitation would run from that date. The District Judge observes:—"If the terms of section 7 of the Rent Recovery Act were not complied with, within the Fasli, suits brought to recover arrears of rent were barred by time. This suit, for arrears of rent for Faslis 1315 to 1317 was barred by time under the Rent Recovery Act as no pattas admittedly were tendered within any of those Faslis."

We cannot agree with the Judge that section 7 laid down any rule of limitation. The limitation for a suit for rent is three years from the time, when it accrues due and it accrues due when it is payable according to the contract between the parties or according to usage, and not when a patta is tendered. The tender of a patta is only a statutory pre-requisite to entitle the landlord to take legal proceedings against his tenant and not a condition necessary to complete his right to the rent. This condition has now been dispensed with by the Estates Land Act. Section 53 of that Act makes the tender of a patta necessary only when the landlord wishes to distrain and sell the tenant's moveable property or to bring the holding to sale. The result is, the landlord is now liberated from the necessity of doing an act which was necessary when the old Act was in force. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to maintain his suit for rent of Faslis 1315 to 1317 without tendering a patta.

We must, therefore, allow the appeal and award to the plaintiff rent for Faslis 1315 to 1317 also to the extent claimed in the appeal.

The District Judge allowed interest at 6 per cent. per annum. This modification will stand as it has not been disputed by the appellant. The parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

One S. owned a 4 anna share in a village. He died leaving a widow, P., and three sons, G., D. and B. G.

BISHESHAR TEWARI v. BISHESHAR DAYAL.

died leaving a son T. who also died leaving no issue. On 5th January 1893, D. and P. as guardian of her minor son B. executed a deed of sale in respect of the 4-anna share in favour of the defendant-appellant. The vendee had been in possession of the share over since. On 11th September 1909, B. instituted this suit to recover possession of the whole share conveyed by the sale-deed of 1893 on the allegation that the sale was made for a fictitious price without any legal necessity during his minority.

It was found as a fact by the Courts below that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he came of age within three years before the institution of the suit:

Held, that the case was governed by Article 144 and not Article 127 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act;

The word "share" in Article 127 is used as a verb and not a noun. The suit contemplated by Article 127 is a suit by a member of a joint family against other members of the joint family to be restored to joint enjoyment on the allegation of having been unlawfully excluded from it. The Article does not apply to a suit where the alleged joint family property has passed by sale to a stranger.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated 5th July 1910, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated 29th March 1910.

Mr. F. G. D. Lincoln, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ahmad Jamil, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Sital Prasad owned 4-annas share in the village of Dostpur Raghu, Pargannah Mangalsi, District Fyzabad. He died some time prior to 1893, leaving a widow Musammat Phuljhari and three sons, called Ganesh Prasad, Dargahi Lal and Bisheshar Dayal. Ganesh Prasad died leaving a son, Tameshar Prasad, who is also dead. He left no issue. On the 5th of January 1893, Dargahi Lal and Musammat Phuljhari as guardian of her minor son, Bisheshar Dayal, executed a deed of sale in respect of the 4-annas share left by Sital Prasad in favour of Bisheshar Tewari in lieu of Rs. 1,700. The vendee has been in possession of the said share since. On the 11th of September 1909, Bisheshar Dayal, the plaintiff-respondent No. 1, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad to recover possession of the share conveyed by the sale-deed of the 5th January 1893, on the allegation that the sale was made for a fictitious price without any legal necessity during his minority and that he had attained majority only on the 14th of September 1906.

The claim was brought against Bisheshar Tewari, the defendant-appellant and Dargahi Lal. The latter was impleaded as a defendent in the case on the assertion that he had declined to join as a plaintiff. Dargahi Lal did not appear to defend the suit.

Bisheshar Tewari, the defendant-appellant, resisted the suit. He denied that the sale in question was made without any legal necessity and for a fictitious price or that the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 had attained majority on the 14th of September 1906. On the contrary, it was alleged that he had attained majority several years before the date given in the plaint and that the claim was barred by limitation.

The Court of first instance found for the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 on the question of legal necessity and against him on the plea of limitation. It held that the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 had failed to prove that he became major on the 14th of September 1906, and hence the suit was barred under Article 144 Schedule II of Act XV of 1877. The claim was accordingly dismissed. Bisheshar Dayal preferred an appeal to the District Judge who disagreed with the first Court both on the point of limitation and the question of legal necessity. He agreed with the first Court that the claim would be out of time if Article 144 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act were applicable as the plaintiff respondent No. 1 had failed to prove the alleged date of his attaining majority. But the learned Judge held, on the authority of the case of Lal Gauri Kant v. Shankar Baksh Singh (1) that the case of the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 was governed by Article 127 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, as the claim was for a share in joint family property. And, as the defendant-appellant had failed to prove that the claim was brought more than twelve years after the knowledge of the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 about his exclusion from the property in suit, the claim was within time. On the question of legal necessity, the learned Judge was of opinion that the sale of the 5th January 1893, was made to pay off a mortgage created by Sital Prasad, the father of the plaintiff-respondent No. 1, and was good to the extent of the mortgage-money. The claim was, therefore, decreed on the payment of the mortgage-money. Bisheshar Tewari, the vendee, filed a second appeal in this

(1) 2 O. C. 348.

Court which was heard by Mr. Chamier on the 9th of March 1911. Mr. Chamier considered the decision of Mr. Blennerhassett in Lal Gauri Kant v. Shankar Bakhsh Singh (1) of doubtful accuracy and referred the appeal to a Bench.

The appellant challenges the decree passed against him by the lower Court on two grounds, viz., that Article 144 and not Article 127, Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, applies to the case and that if the sale was made for legal necessity it should not have been set aside on the payment of mortgage-money.

To take up the question of limitation first. Article 127 of Schedule II of Act XV of 1877 is as follows :—

"By a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to share therein."	Twelve years.	When the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff.

The language of the Article shows that five things are required for its application, viz:—

1. There must be a joint family.
2. There must be a joint family property.
3. Plaintiff must be member of the joint family.
4. Plaintiff must have been excluded from the enjoyment of the joint family property, and
5. Plaintiff's suit must be for restoration to joint enjoyment.

In the present case, it is in evidence that long prior to the institution of the suit, the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 had separated from his brother, Dargahi Lal, vide the evidence of plaintiff-respondent No. 1, page 20. Nor was there any joint family property at the time of the institution of the suit. The claim of the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 was not to enforce a right to share in the joint family property, but to recover the entire joint family property from a third person to whom it had been conveyed long ago. The fact that at the time of sale the family was joint and the property conveyed was joint family property, would not bring the case under Article 127, Schedule II of the Limitation Act. As remarked by Mr. Justice Candy, Article 127 is meant to apply to suits for partition, vide Raoji v. Bala (2).

The observations of Straight and Mahmood, JJ., in the case of Amme Raham v. Zia Ahmad (3), make the point much clearer. They say that the plaintiff in a suit under Article 127 prays to enforce his right to share in and not to a share of the joint family property, that is, the plaintiff sues to restore the status quo ante of enjoyment that by his exclusion he has been deprived of. The suit contemplated by Article 127 is a suit by a member of the joint family against other members of the joint family to have restoration to joint enjoyment on the allegation of having been unlawfully excluded from joint enjoyment. The Article does not apply to such a suit as the present where the alleged joint family property has passed by sale to a stranger — vide Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (4). The case reported as Lal Gauri Kant v. Shankar Bakhsh Singh (1), relied upon by the learned Judge, appears to have followed the case of Issuri Dutt Singh v. Ibrahim (5).

It appears that the learned Judges, who decided the two cases reported as Issuri Dutt Singh v. Ibrahim (5) and Lal Gauri Kant v. Shankar Bakhsh Singh (1) took the word "share" in the phrase "to share therein" in Article 127 for a noun and not a verb. In later cases, some of which have already been referred to, it was pointed out that the word "share" in the phrase quoted above is used as a verb and not a noun. And we think that is the correct interpretation of the Article under discussion. We hold that the present case is governed by Article 144 and not by Article 127, Schedule II of the Limitation Act. And as there is the concurrent finding of fact of the two lower Courts that the plaintiff-respondent No. 1 has failed to prove that he came of age on the 14th of September, 1906, his claim stands barred under Article 144, Schedule II of Act XV of 1877.

In view of our finding on the plea of limitation, it is unnecessary for us to express an opinion on the question of legal necessity.

The appeal prevails. We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court. Costs of all the Courts are allowed to the defendant-appellant against the plaintiff-respondent No. 1.

Appeal allowed.

THE MAHARAJA OF VIZAYANAGARAM —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

MAHASWARAM RAMABHADRAYYA AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 6—Ryot in possession—Prior possession of another person for 12 years.

When a person dispossesses another from land, of which the latter was in possession for the statutory period and acquired a prescriptive right, he cannot resist a suit for possession simply because he happened to be in possession at the time the Estates Land Act came into force.

The object of section 6 of the Act is only to confer on the tenants in possession as against the landlord an occupancy-right. It is not intended to destroy the occupancy-right which vested prior to July 1908, in favour of another person wrongfully in possession in July 1908.

Second appeal against the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge's Court of Vizagapatam, in A. S No. 111 of 1909, against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Rajam, in O. S. No. 273 of 1907.

FACTS.—Suit to recover a piece of land. The suit land was surveyed as a part of the jerayati land of the Rajah of Vizayanagaram and was leased by the Rajah, the 3rd defendant, to the 1st defendant who entered into possession in 1906. The plaintiff claimed it as his inam and also alleged long possession until his dispossession in 1906.

The lower Appellate Court found that the suit land was originally jerayati but that plaintiff had been in long possession and on this ground gave plaintiff a decree. The 3rd defendant appealed.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

(1) The 1st and 2nd defendants obtained a cowle from the Rajah in 1906 and were in possession of the land at the date when the Estates Land Act came into force. They are entitled to rights of occupancy in it under section 6 of the Act.

(2) The Subordinate Judge erred in holding that plaintiff was entitled absolutely to the land. I will be entitled to levy rent under section 45 of the Estates Land Act.

(3) The suit is barred by limitation under section 13 of the Madras Survey and Boundaries Act.

[N. B.—There was no order by the survey authorities.]

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first point urged is that as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were in possession of the land in question on the date when the Estates Land Act, I of 1908, came into force, they acquired the right of occupancy in the land under section 6 of the Act, and that the plaintiff is, therefore, not entitled to recover possession from them. It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff was in possession of the land for more than the statutory period before he was dispossessed in 1906. He had, therefore, acquired by prescription either the absolute right to the property or the right of a ryot. We are clearly of opinion that the object of section 6 of Act I of 1908 was only to confer on ryots in possession as against the landholder the occupancy-right in the land and that it was not intended to destroy the occupancy-right which vested, in our opinion, prior to July 1908, in favour of another person wrongfully in possession of the holding in July 1908. This argument cannot, therefore, be upheld. It is next argued that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in holding that the plaintiff acquired an absolute title to the land by his possession and that under section 45 of Act I of 1908, the 3rd defendant would be entitled to recover rent from the plaintiffs. It is unnecessary to decide in this case what interest in the land the plaintiff acquired by prescription and whether under section 45 of the Act he would be bound to pay to 3rd defendant the rent fixed for the land. The plaintiff is clearly entitled to recover possession in any event. It is argued that the suit is barred under section 13 of Act IV of 1897, but there was no order passed under the Act. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

In re HAROLD TUCKER.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.
January 15, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Chitty.
In re HAROLD TUCKER—PETITIONER.

Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872), ss. 41, 46—Jewess—Divorce—Intended marriage with Christian—Registrar, refusal by, to solemnize marriage—High Court—Direction to solemnize marriage.

A Jewess was married and subsequently divorced from her husband according to the Jewish law. She desired to marry a Christian who applied to the senior Marriage Registrar of Calcutta to marry them, but the Registrar refused to do so without an order of the High Court. In the circumstances, the High Court directed the Registrar to take the necessary steps to solemnize the marriage.

This was an application in the matter of an intended marriage between Harold Tucker of 32, Chowringhee Road, in the town of Calcutta and Isabella Landeman of No. 14, Corporation Place, in the said town of Calcutta.

It ran as follows:—

1. That your petitioner, Harold Tucker, is a British subject and resident of the town of Calcutta and that he is a Christian by religion and by profession a caterer and has attained his full age being at present of the age of 36 years.

2. That Isabella Landeman is a Jewess and has also attained her full age being at present of the age of 47 years.

3. That the said Isabella Landeman was some time ago married in Calcutta to one Marco Landeman, a member of the Jewish community, according to Jewish rites and ceremonies but subsequently and on the 20th day of January 1909, the said Isabella Landeman obtained a divorce from the said Marco Landeman according to the Jewish rites and ceremonies as will appear from the affidavit made in the above matter of Solomon Tweuna, who was the Priest who granted the said divorce. The said Isabella Landeman having obtained the said divorce is now a single woman and at liberty to marry again.

4. That your petitioner, being desirous of being married to the said Isabella Landeman, applied to the senior Registrar for Marriages at Calcutta to marry them under the provisions of Act XV of 1872 aforesaid; your petitioner and the said Isabella Landeman gave the necessary notice required under the said Act to the said senior Marriage Registrar of Calcutta and further explained to the said Registrar that the said Isabella Landeman had formerly been married but had obtained a divorce according to the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish community and requested the said Registrar to take all necessary steps to solemnize the said marriage with as little delay as possible and to issue the necessary certificate, but the said Registrar refused to take any steps in the matter of the said proposed marriage or to issue the said certificate without an order of this Honourable Court.

5. That your petitioner submits that the said dissolution of marriage of the said Isabella Landeman is valid and subsisting and is of full effect and virtue under the Jewish Laws, customs, rites and ceremonies and that the said Isabella Landeman is now a single woman and free and competent to marry your petitioner.

6. That there is no lawful impediment to the marriage between your petitioner and the said Isabella Landeman and that they are desirous and are ready and willing to be joined in matrimony and to abide by all the rules, rites and ceremonies prescribed for marriage solemnized by or in the presence of a Marriage Registrar and as such Registrar shall direct.

Your petitioner, therefore, humbly prays your Lordships:—

(a) That on the application of your petitioner or of the said Isabella Landeman or either of them for that purpose, the senior Marriage Registrar of Calcutta do solemnize the said marriage in due form under the provisions of the said Act XV of 1872 and do issue a certificate in terms prescribed in the said Act.

The application was supported by the affidavit of one Soloman Twsuna which ran as follows:—

I Solomon Tweuna a member of the Jewish community and one of the Priests of the said community and at present residing at No. 25, Chattawalla Gully, in the town of Calcutta make oath and say as follows:—

1. That I am and have been a Jewish Priest for over thirty years and as such am personally well acquainted with the rites and ceremonies that are necessary to be observed and performed for valid marriages and dissolution of marriages between the Jewish people and I say that I have in my capacity as such Priest on several occasions granted dissolution of marriages amongst the members of the Jewish community.

2. That I say that it is necessary in order to divorce two members of the Jewish community, who have been lawfully married according to Mosaic Law and to the rights and ceremonies of the Jewish community, to observe and perform the following conditions, viz.:

To ask if both parties are agreeable to being divorced and on each of them stating that they wished to be divorced, then the certificate of divorce is drawn up by the Priest before whom the parties have appeared and is signed by him and is handed by him to the husband who states to his wife in the presence of the Priest and the witneses that from this day she is no longer his wife according to the Jewish or Mosaic Law and he then hands the certificate to his wife which she returns to the Priest and the divorce is then complete and the parties are free to marry again.

3. That I know and am personally well acquainted with both Isabella Landeman formerly Birnberg and Mordecai, otherwise called Marco Landeman, both of whom are members of the Jewish community and I say that I know that they were lawfully wedded according to the Jewish or Mosaic law, rites and ceremonies about eighteen years ago.

4. That I know that the said Isabella Landeman has obtained a valid divorce according to the Jewish or Mosaic law rites and ceremonies from the said Mordecai, otherwise Marco Landeman, and that the said dissolution of marriage was conducted by me and I say that all the rites and ceremonies necessary or required to be observed and performed as set out in the 2nd paragraph of this my affidavit were duly observed and performed and that nothing else is necessary to be done to dissolve the said marriage and the said Mordecai, otherwise Marco Landeman, and Isabella Landeman are now no longer considered as husband and wife by the Jewish community but are both at liberty to marry again.

5. That a marriage between a Jew and a Christian cannot be solemnized by a Jewish Priest and that the same cannot be held in a Jewish Synagogue as the Priest can only solemnize and grant marriages where both the parties are Jews.

Mr. J. E. Bagram, instructed by Messrs. Gregory and Jones, Solicitors, appeared for the Petitioner.

ORDER.—The senior Marriage Registrar of Calcutta do, under the provisions of Act XV of 1872, receive and publish the notice of the intended marriage given to him in writing in the form prescribed in and by the said Act and, upon compliance with the provisions of section 41 of the said Act take all of such steps as may be necessary for the solemnization of the marriage intended to be held between the said Harold Tucker and Isabella Landeman in the said petition named.

Mere misdescription of a proper party as legal representative would not in itself justify the setting aside of the order of revival.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, dated 14th day of March 1910, in Interlocutory Application No. 130 of 1910, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1909.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar and S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. V. Padmanabha Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This petition raises the question whether, when the sole plaintiff in a representative suit instituted with permission obtained under rule 8, Order I, dies before there has been any adjudication, the suit can be revived or continued by one of the persons having the same interest in the suit. The question is not directly covered by any precedent, and is one, by no means, easy to decide.

The suit, in which the order impugned by this petition has been made, was instituted with sanction obtained under rule 8, Order I by one Srinivasachariar, a voter in the Kumbakonam Devastanam circle, seeking a declaration that the election of the 7th defendant as a member of the Devastanam Committee is void and for an injunction to restrain him from exercising the office of such member. Srinivasachariar died before the date on which the case was posted for examination of witnesses and, on the application of the respondent, another voter in the Devastanam who wanted to proceed with the suit, it has been revived, and the respondent's name has been ordered to be entered in the cause title as the legal representative of the deceased Srinivasachariar. The respondent claimed that in law he was a representative of Srinivasachariar inasmuch as he was one of the voters on whose behalf Srinivaschariar instituted the suit. It seems to me clear beyond dispute that the respondent does not come within the definition of legal representative as given in clause (ii) of the definition asit has not been contended before me that he does. He cannot, in any way, be said to represent the estate of the deceased; in fact he has no concern with such estate. But if he is entitled to continue the suit, mere misdescription of the respondent in the order of the Subordinate Judge as legal representative of the deceased plaintiff would not in itself justify me in setting aside the order. The misdescription may be rectified, if necessary.

The substantial question, therefore, is whether the suit can be continued by the respondent. There can be no doubt that the right of the deceased plaintiff to sue in this case was personal to himself and so far as that right is concerned, it must be held to have come to an end on his death. Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar contends that with the cessation of the deceased plaintiff's right to sue, the suit itself ceased to exist or became dead, while the learned Pleader for the respondent contends that the action being a representative one, the other persons having the same interest, whom the deceased was allowed to represent, must be held for the purposes of continuing the action to be his co-plaintiffs. Before proceeding further, I may mention that Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar also contended that the sanction granted to the deceased plaintiff under Order I, rule 8 is itself bad inasmuch as the right of each voter is personal to himself. But as pointed out by Sheppard, J., in Srinivasachariar v. Ragavachariar (1), with reference to the corresponding provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 (and the language of rule 8, Order I is identical in this respect with the language of section 30 of the Code of 1882), this rule of procedure, which is founded on a rule of the English Court of Chancery, applies not only to cases where the concurrent interests are concerned but also where they are similar though distinct. Besides, the defendants never objected to the order granting sanction under rule 8. I will, therefore, deal with the present question on the basis of the sanction having been validly granted. I shall first examine the provisions of the Code. It cannot be said that either rule 2 or 3, Order XXII, in terms applies to this case; not rule 2 for the simple reason that it contemplates cases where there are actually more than one plaintiff or defendant on the record, and not rule 3 for the same reason so far as the first part of sub-rule (1) is concerned, and, so far as its second part is concerned, it could not apply as it deals with cases in which a sole plaintiff's right to sue survives to his legal representative, and here the right of the deceased to sue, in so far as it was for his own benefit, would not survive at all. Sub-rule (2) apparently deals with cases where an application could be made under sub-rule (1) and has not been made, though that is not expressed; but if the direction that the suit shall abate was to be taken to apply to cases other than those comtemplated by sub-rule (1), the result would be that the suit would abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. But as I have said, the Legislature does not purport by these sections to deal with the revivor, or more strictly speaking, the continuance of a representative suit instituted by a sole plaintiff.

Now, let us see what light is thrown on the question by rule 8, Order I, itself and the other provisions of the Code. The effect of the permission granted under rule 8 is to make the suit as one "on behalf of and for the benefit of" the deceased and other voters in the Devasthanam including the respondent. All the voters are to be given notice of the institution of the suit and any of them might apply to be made a party to such suit and would, subject, perhaps, to the discretion of the Court, be entitled to join. Sub-rule 2 does not impose any limit or condition as to the time within which the application must be made, but it is contended by Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar that one necessarily implied condition is that the suit must still be in existence at the date of the death of the plaintiff. He says that when Srinivasachariar died, the suit died with him, and, therefore, there would be nothing to revive or continue. No doubt that would be the result if the suit was instituted solely in his own right and not under the provisions of rule 8. The contention, however, is that the sanction obtained under that rule does not in any way affect the personal character of the action so far as its prosecution by the plaintiff up to adjudication is concerned, though after adjudication other members of the class will be bound by and entitled to the benefit of the decree, as provided by section 11, Explanation VI of the Code. It is only after adjudication that other intersted persons not parties to the suit would be treated as claiming under the person litigating and allowed, when necessary, to take part in the proceedings so that if the plaintiff dies after decree, any of the other persons on whose behalf the suit was brought can carry on the proceedings. But until adjudication, the plaintiff is dominus litis and not a trustee of the action, and, therefore, on his death the action, if his right to sue does not survive as in this case, must necessarily cease to exist. This, in substance, is the argument of Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar and in support of it he relies on a number of English rulings.

The provisions of the Code regarding suits of a representative character are apparently, as I have said, founded on the rules of Chancery practice in England, and as there is no clear and express provision in the Code relating to the particular question, I may appropriately refer to the English decisions to ascertain the principle which should govern this case. It stands to reason that, so far as the continuing or not continuing the suit is concerned, the plaintiff should have entire control of an action of this nature; he has, no doubt, obtained permission to prosecute the suit on behalf of the others, but has not bound himself to do so. In that sense, he is undoubtedly dominus litis and not a trustee of the action. He may, therefore, withdraw from the suit or compromise it with the defendants and it cannot be open to other persons to prevent him from doing so and to compel him to devote his time and money in prosecuting the suit for their benefit. This is what is laid down in Handford v. Stone(2), In re Alpha Company, Ward v. Alpha Company (3); Molff v. Can Boolan (4). But it does not follow, because the plaintiff on the record can withdraw from the suit or compromise it for his own benefit, that other members of the class have no interest in the suit In fact, they have a most vital interest as the adjudication will bind them equally with the plaintiff, and I see no reason why that interest should not be considered still subsisting after the death of the plaintiff to enable them to pursue the action. It is conceded that the suit may be continued when the plaintiff dies after decree, but why should it make any difference that he died before the decree. It is argued that after decree the plaintiff became a trustee of the action. But this is not so, though he would be a trustee of the fruits of the decree in his hands. At least in actions other than those involving administration of the estate of a debtor on behalf of all the creditors, i. e., creditor's actions, it cannot be said that the plaintiff who has obtained a decree in a representative suit is bound to go on with it. It is observed by

(3) (1903) 1 Ch. 203; 72 L. J. Ch. 91; 51 W. R. 201; 87 L. T. 646; 10 Manson 237.

Kekwich, J., in Ward v. Alpha Company (3), which was an action by a debenture-holder on behalf of himself and other debenture-holders:—"He cannot prevent another debenture-holder coming in and claiming benefit of the decree but he is not bound to go on because some other person may be entitled to the benefit of the action." He then points out that the reason why a second suit with the same object would be stopped after the first suit has been commenced is to prevent improper costs, and it seems to me clear that in this country, the Legislature having permitted the other members of the class represented by the plaintiff to apply to be made parties in the plaintiff's suit, it would be the duty of the Court to restrain a second independent suit.

As I have pointed out, the Legislature in sub-rule (4) rule 8, Order I, does not for obvious reasons impose any limit of time within which applications must be made to be made parties, as it may be necessary for the prosecution of their interests that other persons interested should be allowed to intervene at any stage of the suit.

See also Watson v. Cane (5). And it does not stand to reason why, if any member of the class is competent by a future application to come in as a plaintiff or defendant in order to safeguard his interest or to get rid of the effects of improper conduct of the suit by the plaintiff, he should not be allowed to do so in a case where the plaintiff is dead and his legal representative is not competent to maintain the suit. Why should all the proceedings already taken be treated as wasted, when the very policy of representative actions is to prevent a multiplicity of actions? On the other hand, the Court is vested with a discretion as to whether it should or should not grant an application under sub-rule (2) of rule 8 in the circumstances of a particular case.

In this case, the action, in my opinion, being continued, there can be no doubt that the respondent has been rightly allowed to continue it.

The petition must be dismissed with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 21 (last clause), application of—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 2, 3. 19—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, s, 18—Arbitration—Agreement to refer—Bar to suit.

The provisions of Act IX of 1899 apply to a case where a suit could be instituted in a Presidency town if the matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit.

Consequently, the last 37 words of section 21, Specific Relief Act, do not apply to an agreement to refer to arbitration in such a case.

Where no application for stay of suit under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, or under section 18, Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is made, the existence of the agreement to refer to arbitration does not bar the suit under section 21 of the Specific Relief Act.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, dated the 24th February 1909.

Lala Dharm Das Suri, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question on which the petitioner's Pleader has addressed us in this case is whether or not the plaintiffs-respondents' suit was barred by the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877. On behalf of the petitioners it is urged that the suit was so barred, on the grounds, (1) that on the date on which the suit was instituted in the lower Court, viz., the 16th October 1908, the new Civil Procedure Code, which, by section 22 of the second Schedule, has repealed the last 37 words of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act, so far as they affected an agreement to refer to arbitration to which the provisions, of that Schedule apply, had not come into force, and (2) that the plaintiffs-respondents had refused to refer the matter to arbitration before instituting their suit. In answer to this argument, the Pleader for the plaintiffs-respondents has referred to sections 2 and 3 of the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899, and with reference to these sections has contended (1) that the provisions of the said Act applied in the present case inasmuch as the Head office of the petitioners being in Calcutta, which is a Presidency town, the present suit could have been instituted in that town, and (2) that by virtue of section 3 aforesaid, the last 37 words of section 21 of the Sepcific Relief Act did not apply to the agreement to refer to arbitration which is relied on by the petitioners. We think that this contention is well founded and must prevail. In fact, the learned Pleader for the petitioners conceded that the present suit could have been instituted in the Presidency town of Calcutta and that the provisions of Act IX of 1899 were applicable to the present case. It is further conceded that no application under section 19 of the aforesaid Act or under section 18 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code was made to the lower Court for stay of suit.

We accordingly hold that the suit of the plaintiffs-respondents was not barred by the last clause of section 21 of the Specific Relief Act at the time the suit was instituted and we dismiss this revision with costs.

Revision rejected.

Hindu Law—Woman's estate—Adverse possession—Prescription—Stridhanam—Pleading.

When the possession of a Hindu woman is adverse, the question must be decided as to what was her animus possidendi:—Did she assert an absolute title in herself or did she claim to hold as the heiress of any person? The latter would be the ordinary presumption, and the heirs to her stridhanam must specially plead that by prescription she had acquired a title which would descend to the heirs as stridhanam.

Second appeal against the decree of Temporary Subordinate Judge's Court of Guntur, in A. S. No. 270 of 1908, presented against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Narasaraopet, in O. S. No. 1142 of 1906.

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—I see no reason to doubt that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right. It has been found that the 1st defendant's husband was adopted by Venkatalakshamma to her husband, Pedda Kamayya.

* * * * *

The next point raised is that, as it is found that Venkatalakshamma was in possession, the 1st defendant's husband's right to the property was extinguished and that the 1st defendant has, therefore, no right to retain possession now. An issue was raised in the Court of first instance with respect to the possession of the 1st defendant. The issue is in these terms: "Whether the suit lands were in the possession and enjoyment of the 1st defendant for over 12 years before the institution of the suit?" The wording of the issue is rather curious. If the object were to raise the question now argued before me, one could have expected it to be framed somewhat in these words:—"Whether the possession of Venkatalakshamma was adverse to the 1st defendant, and whether the 1st defendant's right was extinguished by Venkatalakshamma's possession?" The issue as framed would have been appropriate to a suit in ejectment by the 1st defendant against Venkatalakshamma or any one else who obtained possession from or through her. As it is, there was no question raised as to whether Venkatalakshamma's possession was on behalf of or adverse to the 1st defendant. The District Munsif did not deal with this issue at all. On appeal, the 8th ground in the memorandum of appeal was:—"The lower Court should have recorded findings on issues Nos. 4 and 5 and also decided the same in favour of the appellants." The Subordinate Judge merely finds that Venkatalakshamma obtained the land as the heiress of her husband and was in possession, and that she did not hold it as a maintenance grant from the plaintiff's grandfather.

In second appeal, Mr. Nagabhushanam, of course, perceived what was necessary to entitle his client to succeed, and took the point in his 4th ground of appeal that "the 1st defendant's husband having died more than 12 years ago, and Venkatalakshamma having been in possession prior, as well as subsequent, to his death, the right of the 1st defendant, if any, to the property in dispute has been extinguished." It is by no means clear to my mind that this point was really raised in either of the two lower Courts. If Venkatalakshamma was in possession adversely to the 1st defendant, then, no doubt, the 1st defendant's claim to recover possession from Venkatalakshamma would be barred at the expiration of 12 years. But even this would not be sufficient to give the plaintiffs a right to succeed on the death of Venkatalakshamma. The question would be, assuming Vankatalakshamma's possession was adverse to the 1st defendant, what was her animus possidendi ? Did she assert an absolute title in herself or did she claim to hold as the heiress of her son ? The latter would be the ordinary presumption, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary; and if she held as heiress of her son, on her death, the person entitled to succeed would be her son's heir, that is, the 1st defendant, and the plaintiffs would have no title to recover. It was incumbent on the plaintiffs, in order to disclose a title to succeed to the property on the death of Venkatalakshamma, to state that Venkatalakshamma by prescription had acquired a title which would descend to the heirs to property held by her as stridhanam.

This they did not do.

* * * * *

The point now put before me not having been raised in the Courts below, and it being one which would require an investigation of facts, I am bound to disallow it. I, therefore, dismiss this second appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Multan Division, dated the 21st May 1909.

The Hon'ble R. B. Shadi Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shah Nawaz, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this and in the two connected cases are fully stated in the judgment of the learned Divisional Judge. In each case plaintiffs claim to recover principal and interest in respect of a bond executed by defendant, Sheikh Kaura Khan, the total sum claimed in the three suits amounting to Rs. 9,026-13. The main defence in all these suits was that the bonds were executed by a person whose mind was at the time "unsound" within the meaning and for the purposes of section 12 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, and that consequently the so called contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant was in law no contract at all, and plaintiffs were entitled to no relief.

The District Judge found that "the whole of the evidence for the plaintiffs is full of incidents that show that the defendant lived in a whirl of drink, drugs and excitement and that he was quite incapable of understanding business matters" and that the contract was induced by undue influence. He further found that a total sum of Rs. 1,178 had been advanced by plaintiffs to defendant on various dates and he gave the former a decree for that sum together with interest at the rate of Rs. 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the loan to the date of institution of the suit. From the decree defendant appealed to the Divisional Judge and plaintiffs lodged cross-objections, and the Divisional Judge remanded the case for further inquiry as to whether defendant was of unsound mind, within the meaning of section 12 of the Contract Act, at the time when the bonds, upon which the suits were based, were executed.

Evidence was, therefore, taken by the Munsif with reference to this issue and as a result he reported that "it was clear that the defendant was of unsound mind" at the time.

The Divisional Judge, after consideration of the whole of the evidence on the record, held that "there does not appear to be any doubt that Kaura Khan was a person of weak intellect from his birth, and this weakness of intellect developed into insanity owing to the course of debauchery in which he embarked," and that Kaura Khan was not competent to contract at the time when he executed the bonds. The learned Judge was of opinion that it was very doubtful whether the sum of Rs. 1,178 had ever been paid to defendant, but that even if it had been paid, plaintiffs, whose father was the original money-lender and who must have known he was dealing with a person of weak intellect, who did not know what he was doing, were not entitled to claim recovery even of such sums as might have been advanced to defendant.

Plaintiffs' suits were accordingly dismissed in their entirety and from the decrees passed by the Divisional Judge they have preferred further appeals in the two cases in which they claimed, respectively, Rs. 4,718 and Rs. 3,592 and they have also applied for revision of the decree in the case in which they claimed Rs. 716. This judgment will dispose of all three cases.

We have heard Mr. Shadi Lal in support of plaintiffs' contentions and we have read the evidence upon the record. There is against plaintiffs a concurrent finding of three Judges who are all agreed that the defendant was, at the time of the execution of the bonds, a person of weak intellect and quite incapable of understanding business matters. With this finding, we are ourselves in entire accord, as it is abundantly proved, even by the evidence of witnesses called by plaintiffs themselves, that Kaura Khan was quite incapable of understanding the contracts made by him and of forming a rational judgment as to their effects on his interests. The evidence shows that he was naturally of weak intellect and that after the death of his father, who left him a very large property, he took to drink and drugs and indulged in other vices. In fact, he would appear to have been almost always drunk and we see no reason to differ from the Divisional Judge's finding that plaintiffs' father must have known that he was practically imbecile. Plaintiffs' witness, Tikaya Ram, a drink contractor, has had to admit that about the time when defendant executed the bond of the 28th September 1902, he was "surrounded by prostitutes and blackguards," "was usually drunk" and "used to get 2 or 3 bottles of spirit a day", and drank bhang as well. This witness also states that shortly after the execution of the said deed, the Deputy Commissioner was obliged to "banish" defendant from the city.

The rest of the evidence is very similar in its purport and proves conclusively that defendant was incapable of forming a rational judgment on matters of business and that all who came into contact with him (except possibly on rare and isolated occasions) must have known of his unsoundness of mind. Plaintiffs' father had frequent dealings with him and we cannot believe that he was ignorant of defendant's weakness of intellect.

We agree, therefore, with the findings of the lower Courts upon these points.

Mr. Shadi Lal contends that in any case plaintiffs are entitled to recover sums actually advanced by them to defendant, and in this connection relies upon the provisions of section 65 of the Indian Contract Act. But in a case of this kind, the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmo Das (1) is in point and upon its authority, we hold that these provisions are not applicable and that plaintiffs' claim even for a refund of sums advanced to the defendant must fail. We accordingly dismiss this and the connected appeal and application for revision with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Execution of decree—Application for execution of a decree by sale—Sale stayed by High Court—Warrant fees not paid—Application 'struck off'—Effect of such order—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 295—Realisation of assets.

An order passed on an execution petition ending with the words "Petition struck off" is an order not known to the law and its effect has to be determined by a consideration of the circumstances of the case and the terms of the order itself.

Where, therefore, an application was made for the execution of a decree by sale of a debt, but the applicants failed to pay certain warrant fees, as the sale had been stayed by an order of the High Court, and the petition was, consequently, "struck off," the order simply amounts to an adjournment sine die. Even if the warrant fees had been paid, the Court could not have proceeded with the application at that stage.

Where moneys are realised on a personal decree and in execution, they are assets realised under section 295, Civil Procedure Code.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura in Appeal Suit No. 527 of 1908, presented against that of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Madura, in O. S. No. 52 of 1908.

Mr. R. Subrahmania Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first question in this case is as to the effect of the order of the 31st January 1902, ending with the words "Petition struck off." It has been repeatedly held that such an order is not known to the law, and that its effect is to be determined by a consideration of the circumstances of the case and the terms of the order itself. In the present case, the application was for execution of a decree by sale of a debt, and as we read the order, it states that the applicants had failed to pay certain warrant fees into Court, and the sale had been stayed by an order of the High Court and then adds: "Petition struck off." We do not agree with the District Judge that the words regarding the stay of execution were written by a clerk and form no part of the order of the Court. If the applicants had made the requisite payment, the Court could not at that date have proceeded with the application, and there was, therefore, no reason for punishing the applicants for their default by the dismissal of their petition; and it would have been a reasonable exercise of the Courts' discretion to adjourn the matter pending further orders of the High Court.

We are of opinion that the terms of the order show that the Court merely declined to proceed further with the application at that time, and that it amounts to an adjournment sine die. We do not think that proceedings subsequently taken by the applicants have any bearing upon the question of what was the intention of the Court when it passed the order.

The second question is, whether the sum of which the appellants claim rateable distribution, was realised in execution. A compromise-decree was made in a suit to which the appellants were parties, which we construe as directing payment by the Rajah of Ramnad of a certain sum to the plaintiff therein, and that any monies recovered should be subject to rateable distribution among the creditors of the Rajah who might be entitled thereto. As trustee under a deed of settlement executed by the Rajah, the then plaintiff was bound to pay a monthly allowance to the Rajah, and the learned District Judge was apparently of opinion that the plaintiff should have withheld that payment from the Rajah, and distributed the amount among the parties to that suit. No such direction is, however, contained in the compromise-decree, and it would scarcely have been safe for the plaintiff to have paid away the trust monies in his hands otherwise than in accordance with the terms of the trust or the express order of the Court. The compromise decree is a personal decree against the Rajah and could only be enforced by the ordinary process of execution; and the monies in Court were realised under such process. In this view, there is no ground for the suggestions of the District Judge that the action of the then plaintiff amounted to a fraud upon the Court.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the monies distributed among the respondents were realised in execution within the meaning of section 295, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, at a time when an application by the appellants for execution was pending in the Court, and that they were, therefore, entitled to bring this suit for a refund. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. Having regard to all the facts of the case, we make no order as to costs, in this or in the lower Appellate Court.

Decree reversed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the vendee in a pre-emption suit against the 2nd pre-emptors, who have paid Rs. 6,000 and taken over the land, in respect only of an item of Rs. 700 disallowed from the price by the lower Appellate Court.

There is a cross-objection by the pre-emptors as to a further item of Rs. 426 allowed to the vendee in both Courts.

The first ground of appeal raises a question of the jurisdiction of the lower Appellate Court to deal with the case, based on the Full Bench rulings [Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (1) and Abdur Rahman v. Charag Din (2).] The ruling in Abdur Rahman v. Charag Din (2) is clearly not in point and need not be discussed. The question involved, with reference to the ruling in Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (1), has been considered at length in Iftikhar Ali v. Thakar Singh (3). It is observed that our brother Rattigan was a member of the Bench giving that decision and he was also one of the Judges composing the Full Bench in Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (1). Great weight attaches, therefore, to the construction recently placed on the Full Bench ruling, and we ourselves are entirely at one with the learned Judges who have decided the case of Iftikhar Ali v. Thakar Singh (3) and consider that their decision should be followed.

Our conclusion is, therefore, that for purposes of determining the course of appeal in pre-emption suits, we have to look only to the jurisdictional value of the suit, and not to the amount which the pre-emptors may have to pay. The Divisional Court rightly assumed jurisdiction to deal with the case.

On the merits of the two comparatively trifling sums covered by the appeal and cross-objection we need only say that after looking closely into these matters, we think that the learned Divisional Judge is right on both points.

Both appeal and cross-objection are accordingly dismissed, the parties paying their own costs in this Court.

Appeal and cross objection dismissed.

SINGANAMALA VENKATAMMA, MINOR BY GUARDIAN AND FATHER POTHI LAKSHMANACHARLU—RESPONDENT.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), ss. 4, 9—Minor—Applying through natural guardian—Issue of certificate.

A succession certificate may be granted to a minor on application made by him through his natural guardian.

Otherwise, section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act would stand in the way of the minor suing for the effects of the deceased father and no such suit could be filed during his minority.

Ex parte Mahadev Gangadhar, 28 B. 344; 6 Bom. L. R. 281; Gulabchand v. Moti, 25 B. 523; 3 Bom.L.R. 795, considered.

Kali Coomar v. Tara Prosunno Mukerjee, 5 C. L. R. 517; and Ram Kuar v. Sardar Singh, 20 A. 352, followed.

The provisions of section 9 of the Act can be satisfied by the guardian depositing the necessary security on behalf of the minor.

Appeal against order of the District Court of Kurnool, dated the 10th October 1910, in C. M. P. No. 166 of 1909.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised before us in this appeal is whether a succession certificate can be granted to a minor on application made by him through his natural guardian. We answer the question, which is not absolutely free from difficulty, in the affirmative. Apart from section 9 of the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889, which we shall consider presently, there is nothing in the Act which precludes a minor from applying for a certificate, while we find that sections 8 to 13 of Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, prohibit grants of Probate and Letters of administration to minors. If the minor is the heir of deceased, as is the case, the property will vest in him and he would be the person entitled to institute suits to recover debts due to the estate. Section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act lays down that no Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of the deceased person in favour of a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased except on the production by the person so claiming of a certificate issued under the Act. Now if where a minor is so entitled, the certificate were to be granted to his guardian, as suggested in Ex parte Mahadev Gangadhar (1), the requirements of section 4 would be satisfied; and if the certificate could not also be granted to the minor, as held in Gulabchand v. Moti Chatraji (2), the result would be that no suit could be instituted at all during the minority of the heir, a result which could not have been contemplated by the Legislature. Section 9, no doubt, lays down that, whenever the Court considers it desirable to take security from the applicant, it shall require him to execute a bond with two sureties, and it is argued that, as minor cannot execute such a bond, it must be held he is incompetent to apply for a certificate. But we think that execution of the bond by the guardian on behalf of the minor applicant would bind the minor and thus satisfy the provisions of section 9. In our opinion, therefore, this section does not present any serious difficulty. We may observe with reference to the Bombay decision that the attention of the learned Judges, who decided these cases, does not appear to have been drawn to the difficulty that would arise in collecting debts of the minor heir of a deceased person, if this view of the law were to be accepted as sound.

On the other hand, the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts have held in Kali Coomar Chatterjee v. Tara Prosunno Mookerjee (3) and Ram Kuar v. Sardar Singh (4) that a certificate can be granted to a minor. We think this is the correct view and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Courts have jurisdiction to determine the order of precedence in the distribution of honours in a temple and to protect, by an injunction, persons having a right to the first honours from such right being infringed by others who are entitled to the same honours subsequently.

Sri Rungachariar v. Rungasawmy, 32 M. 291, 5 M. L. T. 33; 3 Ind. Cas. 881, followed.

Where a long established usage in a tempie has determined the rights of particular persons to receive the first thirthams, such usage will be followed by Civil Courts, even though it may be an innovation on any prescribed rule of the Hindu Shastras, unless the text of the latter is of such coercive authority that it cannot be disobeyed.

Where, in the memorandum of objections put in by the respondents-plaintiffs in an appeal, only one plaintiff claimed damages for an infringement by the defendants of a right common to all the plaintiffs:

Held, that damages could be awarded to all the plaintiffs as the basis of the claim was common to them all.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 1484 OF 1909.

The plaintiffs in this case are persons who are entitled to the 1st, 3rd and 4th thirthams in the temple of Thirunagiri Ranganatha Swamy. Defendants Nos. 7 to 23 are entitled to thirtham along with them. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the trustees of the temple and defendants Nos. 4 to 6 are the Archakas, whose duty it is to carry on the daily worship of the idol. The object of the suit is to establish the plaintiffs' right to receive the thirtham first after the conclusion of the siva and Sathumurai, that is, after the recitation of Tamil Vedas and hymns. In the plaint, the plaintiffs ask also for the establishment of their rights to other emoluments appertaining to the office they hold, but the right to these other honours and emoluments was really not denied by any of the defendants. There was a previous suit by some of the defendants jointly entitled to the 1st thirtham along with the plaintiffs for the establishment of their right to the honours and emoluments attached to the office. That suit was against the trustees and the suit ended in a compromise which will be referred to hereafter. The plaintiffs stated that while that suit was going on, the trustees and the Archakas acting in combination introduced an innovation which consisted in the Archakas taking the thirtham before it was offered to the plaintiffs and the other co-owners of the first thirtham office. The plaintiffs state that at the time of the compromise in the previous suit, the parties agreed that this innovation should be put an end to, but it was considered unnecessary to enter this understanding in the compromise.

Both the trustees and the Archakas deny the particular right set up now, namely, that the Archakas should not take the thirtham before it is given to the plaintiffs. In the written statement of the Archakas in para. 6, they state:

"It is always the practice for these defendants to take the thirtham first and then serve it to the plaintiffs, etc. It is in consonance with the custom, the Shastras and practice. It is included in religious rights and ceremonies. The plaintiff has no right to ask for any relief in that regard in a Civil Court."

In addition to the issues relating to the merits, there was an issue as to the right of a Civil Court to take cognizance of the suit. Both the lower Courts have found as a matter of fact that according to the usage and practice of the temple, after the Siva and Sathumurai were over, the Archakas were not in the habit of taking thirtham themselves before making the distribution to the thirthamgars or to the various persons entitled to precedence in the distribution of the thirtham. That finding is based on the oral evidence in the case as well as on three documents. It has been contended in second appeal before us that these documents have been misconstrued; and in the course of the arguments it was also urged that two of these documents, namely, Exhibit B and Exhibit I, are not admissible in evidence at all against the defendants. Exhibit B is not of much importance. It is an agreement executed between the holders of the offices of the first and second thirthams and the defendants; the Archakas and trustee were not parties to it. The inadmissibility would really be a matter of no consequence, as it is stated that it was superseded by Exhibit I, which was executed in the year 1836. This document is an award passed by first and second defendants' father who was then the trustee of the temple. It set out the rights of the thirthamgars. It was apparently contended before the District Munsif that it would in no way bind the Archakas and trustees. But there was evidence before him showing that the Archakas were also parties to the dispute and that they made statements regarding their rights. The document does not contain any reference to Archaka's rights to take the thirtham first and both the Courts have drawn the inference from that fact that no such right existed at the time, as otherwise it would have been put forward. How far this inference is well founded is not really a matter for our consideration in second appeal. No objection was raised in the grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court to the admissibility of the document in evidence against the Archakas or the trustees, evidently because the document was put forward by the defendants themselves. The contest in the lower Appellate Court was about its effect as against the Archakas and the trustees. If the question of its admissibility had been raised, the District Judge would, no doubt, have had to consider whether, as found by the District Munsif, the Archakas themselves were not really parties to the dispute which was settled by the compromise. We cannot allow any question regarding its admissibility to be raised at this stage.

The 3rd document is Exhibit A, the compromise in the previous suit O. S. No. 100 of 1906. In that suit some of the first thirthamgars claimed the right to be given the thirtham first though no express statement was made in the plaint that the Archakas were not entitled to take it before them. In Exhibit IV, the written statement put in by the second defendant in that suit, the Archakas' right now put forward was alleged. In the compromise the right of the thirthamgars was stated in the term in which it was put forth in the plaint.

The Archakas' right was neither affirmed nor denied; but both the Courts believe the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs showing that Archakas' right was denied and that the denial was agreed to by the agent of the 2nd defandant, one of the present trustees who undertook to abolish the new practice. There is no question for consideration in second appeal with respect to the documents. None of these documents can be said to have been misconstrued. We must, therefore, accept the finding that according to the usage of the temple, the Archakas have not been taking the thirtham before offering it to the thirthamgars.

The point chiefly urged in the second appeal is that, according to the texts of Hindu religious books dealing with the way in which the puja and ceremonials in Vaishnava temples following vaikanasa sutra should be conducted, it is a part of the ceremonial enjoined that at the end of puja, the Archakas should sip the sacred water or thirtham and only thereafter distribute it to the Goshti, including those who have special rights of precedence. It is contended that a religious privilege like precedence in thirtham cannot be acquired in contravention of the rules of the Hindu Sastras and that, however long a practice in contravention of the Sastras may have been in existence, no one can acquire a legal right to compel either the trustees or the worshipping Archakas to continue to act against the injunctions of the Sastras and that these latter must be at liberty to rectify any practice that may be against the Sastras. For the respondents it is contended that usage is really the determining principle as to the ceremonial to be observed in a temple, that what has to be looked to is whether any particular text of the Sastras has been adopted in the usage of any temple and that there are no texts of such paramount authority as to make it impossible for a temple to adopt a usage which may be contrary to what is laid down by them. The texts produced by the plaintiffs have been interpreted before us in different ways by both sides. As we understand the contention raised by the defendants in the lower Court, it was, not that the defendants were entitled to introduce an innovation which would not be questioned by the plaintiffs, but that the practice of the temple was in support of the defendants' case. It would appear, no doubt, that before the District Munsif the contention was urged that, according to the Sastras, it was a part of the puja or the ceremonial of worship that at the conclusion of the puja, the Archakas should sip the sacred water. But it does not appear to us that this was relied on as justification for any innovation. The texts appear to have been cited partly to support the defendants' evidence as to the actual usage and partly perhaps to show that a right which is against the injunctions of the Sastras could not be legally acquired by a usage which was contrary to the texts. We are unable to say that it has been proved in this case that there are any texts of such coercive authority as to set aside a usage with respect to rights regarding thirthams, that is, that there are any texts the disobedience of which has been proved to make it impossible that the plaintiffs could have the right to the thirtham in preference to the Archakas.

In the course of the arguments, another point was put forward. Briefly, it is this:—the plaintiffs admittedly have the right to the thirtham only after the puja is over, the puja now including the Siva and Sathumurai. It is contended that a person, who is entitled to thirtham after the conclusion of the puja, cannot, by virtue of this right, object to any change in the puja which would be in accordance with the Sastras requiring or permitting the Archaka to sip the sacred water as a part of the ceremonial of the puja. This contention again it is unnecessary to deal with in this case. If the trustees or the Archakas have a right to introduce such an innovation and if in the assertion of such right they introduced it, it will then be time to consider whether the plaintiffs on account of their right to the first thirtham, can object to any change which would have the effect of postponing their getting the thirtham until the Archakas have taken it. As already stated, this was not the case of the defendants in the lower Courts. Their contention was not that they introduced an innovation but that the practice which they in no way violated allow the Archakas to take the sacred water first. On that question, the findings of the lower Courts are conclusive and must be accepted. With respect to the question of jurisdiction, the case of Sri Rungachariar v. Rungasami (1) is practically on all fours with this case. If the plaintiffs have a right to have their right to receive the thirtham first protected, then they are also entitled to ask the Court to decide for the protection of that right that the Archakas should not take the thirtham before them. As pointed out in that case, the question itself is one of precedence, and whether the plaintiffs are entitled to precedence over the Archakas or not it has necessarily to be decided by the Court. The objection taken to the finding, therefore, cannot be sustained.

The defendants complain that the form of the injunction granted by the lower Courts is likely to lead to inconvenience in practice. There is a negative injunction against the Archakas and the trustees that they should not interfere with the plaintiffs' rights, and there is also a positive injunction that they should show the plaintiffs the maryadas or honours, mentioned in the decree. We think that the plaintiffs' rights will be sufficiently protected by the negative injunction. The words, therefore, after "defendants Nos. 7 to 23", in clause 3 of the District Munsif's decree, will be expunged. In other respects, the decrees of the lower Courts will be confirmed. The appellants must pay the plaintiffs the costs of the second appeal.

S. A. No. 1590.

With respect to the memorandum of objections in S. A. No. 1590, both the Courts having found that the plaintiffs' rights have been infringed, it must be held that they are entitled to some damages. The District Judge disallowed the claim because the memorandum of objections before him was presented only by one of the plaintiffs, namely, the 12th plaintiff. But he was entitled to do so on behalf of all and there can be no doubt that he did act on behalf of all as he did not claim any damages individually. The District Judge also says that there was nothing to show which particular plaintiff suffered annoyance. But as he himself points out, the right to the damages arises from the infraction of the plaintiffs' right and it is immaterial whether any, and if so, which of them suffer any annoyance. We must, therefore, modify the decree by decreeing Rs. 5 damages against the appellants. There will be no order as to costs on the memorandum of objections.

Decree modified.

Hindu Law—Impartible estate—Succession—Maintenance—Remoteness of relationship.

The right of a family member to claim maintenance from the holder of an impartible estate must be decided on the footing of the estate being joint and must depend on the question whether, if the estate were partible, the person claiming the maintenance would be entitled to maintain a suit for partition.

The question of succession to an impartible estate discussed.

The degree of relationship for determining the right to maintenance out of an impartible estate must be taken to be the same as for determining the right to partition in the case of a partible estate.

The right to maintenance is not lost by reason of the fact that the person claiming maintenance is only an adopted and not an aurasa son of his father.

The fact that a member is removed more than three degrees from the common ancestor is not a bar to his succession by survivorship and, therefore, is not a bar to his right to maintenance.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in O. S. No. 20 of 1908.

Messrs. P. R. Ganapati Iyer and K. Y. Adiga, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar and S. Dorasawmy Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by the defendant, the jagirdar of Arni, in a suit instituted by the plaintiff to establish his right to receive maintenance from the defendant at Rs. 60 per month and for the recovery of arrears at the same rate from July 1905. The plaintiff is the adopted son of one Lakshmana Rao Saheb, who was the grandson of the plaintiff's grandfather's grandfather, Tirumal Rao Saheb. Tirumal Rao had two sons, Srinivasa Rao and Venkata Rao. The defendant is the grandson of Venkata Rao by adoption and the plaintiff is the great-grandson of Srinivasa Rao. The jagir of Arni is an impartible estate descendible to a single heir according to the rule of lineal primogeniture and is included in the schedule to the Madras Impartible Estates Act. The plaint alleges that the jagir is a joint ancestral hereditary estate of the family of the parties and is subject to the liability under the Hindu Law of providing for the maintenance of the other members of the family. It alleges further that whatever may be the nature of the estate, the defendant is bound to make suitable provision for the maintenance of the other members of the family according to the established usage. The plaintiff after the death of his father, Lakshmana Rao, made an application to the Court of Wards (which was then in possession of the estate on behalf of defendant) asking for the award of maintenance to him; but it refused to recognise his right and the Government confirmed the order of the Court of Wards. The defendant in his written statement denied that the jagir was common family property, out of which collateral male relations would be entitled to claim maintenance, and contended that even if it were a joint impartible estate; the plaintiff could not claim maintenance as he and the defendant were removed from each other more than three degrees from their common ancestor and the plaintiff was not in such a degree of relationship as would entitle him to claim partition if the estate were not impartible. The defendant also denied what he understood to have been alleged in the plaint that he was in possession of the other joint family property in addition to the jagir. Other contentions were also raised by the defendant which it is unnecessary to refer to for the purposes of this judgment.

The District Judge in his judgment says that "that the jagir is an ancestral hereditary estate of the family is admitted. The plaint says that it is joint only in the sense that there has been no division in the family and that the members of the family are entitled to maintenance." He held that the remoteness of the relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant did not deprive him of the right to maintenance and that he was so related to the defendant, that if the estate were partible, he would be entitled to enforce partition. He also held that the Government order which denied the plaintiff's right to maintenance did not affect him. In the result the lower Court decreed maintenance to the plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 55 11-8 a month and arrears to the period claimed at the same rate.

On appeal, Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar, the learned Vakil for the appellant, repeated the contentions urged before the lower Court that the plaintiff's relationship to defendant was not such as would entitle him to claim partition of the estate if it were partible. But he went further and urged a contention, which is apparently opposed to the admission made by his client in the lower Court, that the estate being impartible, it could not be held to be joint property of the family of the parties after the decision of the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), and that according to that decision, the jagir must be held to be the absolute property of each jagirdar and not liable to the maintenance of any other member of the family on the footing of its being common family property. He went a step further and urged that apart from the result of the decision in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), the jagir of Arni must be held to be the self-acquired property of the defendant and relied on the judgment of this Court in Appeal Suit No. 25 of 1871, in a suit instituted by the plaintiff's adoptive father against the defendant's grandfather, Tirumal Rao, for maintenance. We are of opinion that the defendant should not be allowed to set up this new plea relating to the character of the estate owned by the defendant. It is, no doubt, true that in Appeal Suit No. 25 of 1871, this Court observed that "it had been conclusively adjudged by the decision in the former suit between the parties that the property is self-acquired by the defendant under a sanad and awarded maintenance to Lakshmana Rao on the terms of the sanad which bound the jagirdar to provide for the maintenance of the members of the family according to usage and the orders of the Government." The former suit referred to in Appeal Suit No. 25 of 1871 was apparently Original Suit No. 76 of 1868. The view that then prevailed was that the holder of an unsettled palayam like Arni had no heritable proprietary right in the palayam and that each successive holder holds under a fresh title created by the gift of the Sovereign power. The view was set aside by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Marungapuri case in Collector of Trichinopoly v. Lakkamani (2), which decided that notwithstanding the absence of a permanent settlement, the holder of such palayam might be the holder of a heritable estate. The previous decision of this Court in Appeal Suit No. 25 of 1871 proceeded, therefore, on a view of the law which is no longer supportable. The defendant's contention is contrary to his own statement in Exhibit F, the plaint in a suit instituted by him against the Secretary of State for India in Council, in which he stated that the jagir of Arni is the ancestral hereditary estate of this plaintiff and has been held by him and his successors in hereditary proprietary right. It is also, as already mentioned, contrary to his explicit admission in the lower Court in this case. We have no doubt that the contention is entirely unsustainable. But whatever its merits may be, we cannot permit the defendant to raise it here on appeal, especially as the question is not one purely of law.

Another contenion, admittedly not raised in the lower Court, is that whatever might be the former tenure of the jagir, the defendant is now holding under a fresh sanad, dated 14th April 1909, according to the terms of which the defendant is bound to give maintenance only when he is required to do so by the established usage of his estate and when in addition the Government directs him to do so. Assuming that there is any substance in this contention based on a consideration of the new sanad, we must disallow it apart from the question whether the Government had any power to affect the plaintiff's rights by a sanad granted to the defendant.

(1) 10 A. 272; 15 I. A. 51.

(2) 21 W. R. 358; 14 B. L. R. 115; 1 I. A. 282.

It is perhaps doubtful whether we should allow the defendant to go back to any extent on the admission made by him in the lower Court that the jagir is an ancestral, undivided hereditary estate of the family. It was made with full knowledge of the decision of the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deo Raj Kuari (1). But, as the argument purports to be based on a necessary legal inference from the decision of the Privy Council, we propose to deal with it briefly. In that case, the Judicial Committee held that an alienation made by an impartible zemindar in the North-Western Provinces could not be disputed by his son, who would be entitled to succeed to the estate on the death of the alienor and the rule laid down there has been subsequently held by the Privy Council, in Sri Raja Rao Venkata Surya Mahipati Rama Krishna Rao Bahadur v. The Court of Wards (3), to be applicable to the impartible estates in this Presidency. In Sartaj Kunji v. Deoraj Kuari (1), their Lordships held that the son, a holder of an impartible estate, has not such a right by birth in the estate as would entitle him to interdict an alienation made by his father. They observed that "The property in the paternal or ancestral estate acquired by birth under the Mitakshara Law is, in their Lordships' opinion, so connected with the right to a partition that it does not exist where there is no right to it." They were of opinion that "the foundation of the supposed restriction of the power of a father to make an alienation was the community of interest which the members of the family acquired by brith and that a right by birth did not exist where partition could not be enforced." Various decisions were cited before their Lordships in support of the position that all the members of the family have such a joint right in an impartible estate as to entitle them to object to the alienation by the holder for the time being. But their Lordships observed that the expressions in previous judgments of the Privy Council to the effect that the zemindari though impartible was "part of the common family property" in Katama Natchiar v. The Raja of Shivaganga (4); Stree Rajah Yanumula Venkayamah v. Stree Rajah Yanumula Boochia Vankondora (5), or in a sense the joint property of the joint family, [see Sivagnana v. Periasami (6)], must be understood as having been made with reference to the question of succession and that though an impartible estate may for some purposes be spoken of as joint family property that co-parcenary in it which under the Mitakshara Law is created by birth does not exist. It is strongly urged for the appellant that there is in their Lordships' judgment a clear pronouncement of the absence of all co-parcenary in an impartible estate and that, therefore, no right to maintenance could be claimed by a member of the family on the ground that the estate is the joint property of the family. But the language of their Lordships seems to show clearly that they were then speaking of the absence of a co-parcenary which would have entitled the co-parceners to partition and to prevent alienations by the holder. For they do not disapprove of the estates being spoken of as joint for purposes of succession. The subsequent decisions of the Privy Council clearly show that where a question of succession is concerned, an impartible estate may be regarded as joint and governed by the rules of succession applicable to joint property. The appellant's contention is, that, in consequence of the view enunciated in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), the existence of co-parcenary can only be regarded as a legal fiction for the purpose of determining the heirs of an impartible estate and not as a fact from which any other deduction can be made as a consequence flowing from it. But this argument appears to us to be altogether untenable. In the first place, the heir to an impartible estate has to be determined in the same manner as to partible property, according to the actual nature of the property in question, after finding out whether the property was separate of the deceased holder and, therefore, descendible to his own heirs, that is, to his issue up to the third generation and then to his widow and daughter and daughter's son and in default of any of these to the agnate and cognate relations of the deceased. It would be immaterial, as laid down in Katama Natchiar The Rajah of Shivagunga (4), whether the deceased was a member of an undivided family or not. The succession to the property depends on the nature of the deceased's right to it and not on the status of the family to which he belonged. To find out the heir, therefore, the question has to be definitely answered whether the property belonged to himself either as his self-acquisition or as his ancestral property which devolved on him as single heir or whether it was the joint property of himself and other members of an undivided family. The line of succession in each case is different. In the former case, it goes to the deceased's own heirs, in the latter, it goes, in the absence of any issue, by survivorship to the eldest member in the next senior line of the undivided family to whom the estate jointly belonged, though held in possession only by a single person. For this purpose, again, it has further to be discovered who are members of the joint family to which the estate belongs. If, at any time, the members of the family then existing became completely divided in status with regard to all their property, including the impartible estate, then none of those branches, that became so divided from the branch to which the deceased, belonged would be entitled to succeed so long as there are any members in the branch or branches which subsequently continued to remain undivided with respect to the estate with the branch to which the deceased belonged. When it is necessary to determine whether the property in fact belonged to the deceased alone or not and, if it did not belong to him alone what individuals constituted the undivided family to which it belonged and what individuals cannot be regarded as members of this family, it seems quite unintelligible to speak of determining the heir by means of any fiction. Facts which have been ascertained can no longer constitute a fiction ; nor would the fiction of an undivided family enable the Court to determine the individuals who must be regarded as having constituted the family to which the estate belonged. It would not be enough to find out with what persons the deceased or his ancestors were undivided at the time that the estate was first granted for, though the family may be undivided at the time, the estate might still be separate property of the person to whom it was granted and descend to his own heirs. But, notwithstanding this, when it has once made a descent it would become the undivided property of all his successors. It might as well at any point of time become the separate property of one member and again resume the character of undivided property in the hands of his successors And the rule of succession would vary according to the nature of the right of each holder depending on the changes in the condition of the family. All this seems to make it impossible to hold that all conception of joint property is destroyed with regard to impartible estates by the decision of the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1). The Privy Council has not really encouraged any such notion of the extinction of joint property with respect to them. In Jogendro Bhupati Hurrochundra Mahapatra v. Nityanand Man Singh (7), which was decided by their Lordships shortly after Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), their Lordships held that when a zemindar left a legitimate son and two illegitimate sons and the legitimate son who succeeded subsequently died, the elder illegitimate son succeeded to the estate, by virtue of survivorship, a rule which would not apply unless the estate was the joint property of all the three sons, both legitimate and illegitimate of the previous holder. Sir Richard Couch, who delivered the judgment both in this case and in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) does not speak of the joint ownership being a fiction. In Immudipattam Thirugnana Kondama Naik v. Periya Dorasami (8), decided in 1900, their Lordships speak of the Ayakudi zemindari as "a joint estate, though impartible" of the family. In Udayarpalayam case [Kachi Kaliyana Rangappa v. Kachi Yuva Rengappa (9)], where the question related to the succession to the impartible zemindari of Udayarpalayam, which was claimed both by the heir to the separate property of the deceased zemindari and by persons who would be entitled to succeed by survivorship in case the estate was joint family property, their Lordships observed: "It is settled in accordance with a ruling of this Board that when impartible property passes by survivorship from one line to another, it devolves not on the co-parcener nearest in blood, but on the nearest co-parcener of the senior line of a position held by the principal respondent," and approved of the judgment of this Court in Naraganti Achamma Garu v. Venkatachalapathi Nayanivaru (10), where the estate was held to be joint property. In Sri Rajalakshmi Devi Garu v. Sri Raja Suryanarayana Dhatrazu Bahadar Garu (11), Lord Davey in delivering the judgment of their Lordships, speaks of the estate held by the holder of an impartible zemindari in these terms: "Even if impartible, it may still be part of the common family property and descendible as such in which case the widow's estate of the appellant would be excluded. The real question, therefore, is whether it has ceased to be part of the joint property of the family of the first zemindar or (in other words) whether there has been an effectual partition so as to alter the course of descent." In Ram Nundun Singh v. Janki Koer (12), their Lordships (through Lord Davey again), speaking of the succession to the Bettia estate by a brother of the deceased zemindar said:—"But it appears that he was joint in estate with his brother and, therefore, was entitled to succeed him in the family property by survivorship." Having regard to these pronouncements of the Privy Council, it is unnecessary to make citations from the decisions of the High Courts but we may refer to a sentence in Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar v. Siva Subramanya Pillai (13). "In determining who the single heir is according to these principles, we have first to ascertain the class of heirs who would be entitled to succeed to the property if it were partible regard being had to its nature as co-parcenary or separate property and we have next to select the single heir by applying the special rule indicated above." If then an impartible estate retains the character of joint property for purposes of succession, does it not do so where the question relates to the rights of maintenance possessed by the members of the family to whom it belongs for purposes of succession? There can be no doubt and it is not questioned that until the decision in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), the right to maintenance on the part of the other members of the family was based on their joint right to the estate and to be a substitute for the right to partition which they would possess if the estate were partible. The Privy Council has affirmed that basis of the right to maintenance subsequent to Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1). In Raja Yarla Gaddi Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayadu v. Raja Yarla Gadda Durga Prasada Nayudu (14), the younger brothers of a zemindar had obtained partition of the joint property of the family except the zemindari of Devarakota which was held to be impartible. They subsequently sued for maintenance out of the zamindari. The Privy Council observed:—"Their Lordships fully agree with the High Court that the family of the parties to the present action has not become a divided one in consequence of the proceedings in the previous suit to which reference has already been made. It is true that in that suit a decree was made for the partition of a portion of the family property but it was a very inconsiderable portion and had no relation whatever to the zemindari estate. As to the zemindari estate, this Board held that it was impartible and the consequence is that the plaintiffs, as younger brothers of the zemindar, retain such right and interest in respect of maintenance as belong to the junior members of a Raj or other impartible estate descendible to a single heir." The right to maintenance was rested by them on the same basis in Naraganti Achamma Garu v. Venkatachalapathi Nayanivaru (10), already referred to. In Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) itself, their Lordships made citations from previous cases which based the right to maintenance on the estate being joint property. Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajendar Pertab Sahe (15). In Maharana Shri Fatesingji Jesvantsingji v. Kuvar Harisangji Fatesangji (16), the Bombay High Court regarded the right to maintenance as standing in lieu of the right to partition. See also Himmatsing Becharsing v. Ganapatsing (17); Ramachandra Sakharam Vagh v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh (18). In Laliteswar Singh v. Bhabeswar Singh (19), Brett J., observes: "In consequence of the incidents of primogeniture, an impartibility, which by immemorial custom attached to the Raj, they lose their right to enjoy a share of the family property, but as a compensation for that loss they are entitled to receive from the Raja certain portions of the landed property of the Raj as babuana grants for the maintenance of themselves and their descendants in the male line." In Venkatachella Reddiar v. Venkatachella Reddiar (20), Wallis and Sankaran Nair, JJ., held that the right to maintenance, as it was understood to exist before Satraj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1), was not affected by the judgment in that case. We have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff's right to maintenance must be decided on the footing of the estate being joint property and must depend on the question whether if the estate were partible, the plaintiff would be entitled to maintain a suit for partition. Much reliance has been placed by the learned Vakil for the appellant on certain decisions of this Court with regard to the question whether the successor to an impartible estate takes it as part of the effects of his predecessor. The question there did not relate to the right to succession or to maintenance. The decision in Satraj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) has, no doubt, introduced an anomalous state of matters. Where an impartible estate is the joint property of the family, the members other than the holder for the time being have no such estate by birth as to entitle them to interdict an alienation by him. For purposes of alienation, the holder has all the powers of an exclusive owner. Is his successor then liable for all his debts as if he succeeded to his absolute property? On this question, a conflict of view exists among different Judges of this Court and of the other High Courts. See Veera Soorappa v. Errappa Naidu (21); Nachiappa Chetitar v. Chinnaya Sami Naicker (22); Ramasami Naik v. Rama-Sami Chetti (23); Raja of Kalahasti v. Achigadu (24); Harpal Singh v. Bishan Singh (25); Indar Sen Singh v. Harpal Singh (26); Kali Krishna Sarkar v. Raghunath Deb (27); Ram Dass Marwari v. Tekait Brajo Behari Singh (28) and Subba Naidu v Nagayya (29). We think it unnecessary to consider these decisions for the purpose of deciding the question of the right to maintenance with which we are concerned in this case. In the view we have taken, it is unnecessary to consider Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar's contention that if the plaintiff has no right to maintenance on the ground of the jagir being joint family property and not the exclusive property of the defendant, he would not be entitled to it otherwise under the texts of the Hindu Law giving special rights of maintenance to various persons and the decisions based on them.

We now proceed to deal with the question whether, on the footing that the plaintiff's right to maintenance is to be regaded as flowing from his membership of the joint family to which the jagir must be regarded as belonging, he is disentitled to it on the ground that he is too remote in relationship to the defendant. Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar's contention on this point is that the plaintiff is more than three degrees removed from Tirumal Rao Sahib from whom both he and the defendant are descended and that he is, therefore, not a joint owner of the jagir; and reliance is placed on two texts of Kathyayana and Devala respectively, and on Manu, Chapter IX, sections 186 and 187, as well as on the writings of various commentators who have accepted these texts as authoritative. It is admitted that this argument is opposed to the decision of this Court in Gavuridevamma Garu v. Ramandora Garu (30), as well as to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Moro Vishvanath v. Ganesh Vithal (31) an that it is not supported by any decided case. It is argued that the decision of this Court is based on a misapprehension of a text of the Mitakshara and that both the decisions are contrary to the rule propounded in the texts of Hindu Law. The decision in Gavuridevamma Garu v. Ramandora Garu (30) related to the question of succession to an impartible estate, the question being whether the plaintiff in the suit was a co-parcener who would have been entitled to partition if the estate were partible. In the Bombay case, the question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for partition. It is admitted that the degree of relationship for determining the right to maintenance must be taken to be the same as for determining the right to partition in the case of a partible estate The texts mentioned above are relied on to determine the persons who are entitled to demand partition when the family is undivided. It is desirable to set out these texts. They are as follows:—Manu, Sloka 186, "To three (ancestors) water must be offered: To three the funeral cake is given. The fourth (descendant is) the giver of these (oblations). The fifth has no connection (with them)." Sloka 187: "Always to that (relative within three degrees) who is nearest to the (deceased) sapinda the estate shall belong. Afterwards a Sakulya shall be (the heir then) the spiritual teacher or the pupil."

Kathyayana: "When one himself dies unseparated, his son who has not received maintenance from the grandfather shall be made participator of the heritage. He is to get, therefore, the paternal share from the uncle or uncle's son. The very same share shall equitably belong to all the brothers or his son also shall get. Afterwards cessation (of succession) takes place." The commentators explain that "his son" means the great-grandson of the person whose estate is divided because the case of a grandson is considered and it is stated that the great-grandson's son is not entitled to any share. See Viramitrodaya, Chapter II, section 16. The Smriti Chandrika, the Madhinia, the Virada Chintamani, the Vinada Ratnakara and Apararka's commentary on Yajnavalkya have all been relied on as adopting the text of Kathyayana. It may be noted that the Vinada Ratnakara does not quote the portion stating that the property does not descend below the great-grandson. Devala, as cited by the Viramitradaya, runs thus: "Partition of heritage among undivided parceners and second partition among divided parceners dwelling together extends to the fourth in descent. This is the settled law." The Viramitrodaya interprets it thus: "The meaning is that partition of heritage extends to the fourth degree from the proprietor. This rule is alike applicable if co-parceners dwell together in re union by reason of the expression, 'dwelling together.'" The appellant's Vakil would restrict the right to partition to Tirumal Rao's son and grandson and refuse it to his great-grandson, the plaintiff. This does not seem to be in accordance with the interpretation of Kathyayana's text by the commentators, for the plaintiff would be great-grandson of Tirumal Rao who, according to the commentators, would be entitled to a share, the three degrees having to be counted from Tirumal Rao's son. Apart from this, however, the question is whether the texts have any application to the right of partition in a family where the descendants of various branches are living as one family, or whether they do not refer merely to the mode of division of the estate of a certain person amongst those who are entitled to take as his heirs, that is, to cases where the question for determination is who are the heirs entitled to take a person's estate as his heirs and to divide it between them. Could they apply where a share in the estate is not claimed as the heir of a particular individual but as one of the members of a family of co-parceners all living together in joint enjoyment of the estate? The accepted principle of the Mitakshara school of law is that in the case of ancestral property a person's son, grandson and great-grandson acquire a right by birth in it. Now suppose there are two co-parceners, A. and B. jointly owning certain ancestral property. The son or grandson and great-grandson of each of them would acquire a right in the property by birth. A.'s son having a right in the property, would not the son's great-grandson also acquire a right by birth in the right that he has and similarly would not B.'s son's great-grandson acquire a right in his interest? No doubt, if the property belongs to A. or B., then, no doubt, any descendant of either in the third degree will not obtain a right by birth in it. But after A. and B. have sons to them, how can this ancestral property be regarded as the property of A. and B. alone and not of their sons also? The texts cited refer in terms only to division among those who take as the heirs of a certain person of property which is regarded as belonging to him. Partition was ordinarily enforcible in ancient times by sons as against each other only after the father's death, though it was open to the father to make a division amongst his sons or to divide away any one of them at his pleasure. If he died without making a division and his issue all remained joint at his death and the question was who were entitled to divide what was regarded as his estate, the texts mentioned above lay down the rule applicable to such a case. Whether in the case of a person being the sole holder of ancestral property, it was regarded as belonging to him so as to make any restriction in the order of descendant who would be entitled to claim a share when the family remained undivided at his death, it is not necessary to consider. It is unlikely that it would be so regarded now. But, at any rate, where ancestral property belongs to two persons subject to the incident of survivorship as between them, it is very unlikely that it was ever regarded as property of either of them so as to make the texts applicable. The Hindu Law does not contemplate the necessity of division taking place at any time. Suppose five generations descended from several brothers live together, they are all maintained out of the joint family property, the members of the fifth generation being quite as much in enjoyment thereof as those of the higher generations. It may be that some of them take part in the actual management of the property; they may be utilising a part of it for some business carried on on behalf of the whole family. Now, if any one branch of all members up to the fourth generation should happen to die, is it to be said that the members of the fifth generation, who were till then in the joint enjoyment, would cease to be entitled to any right in the property? The principle applicable to such a case is really that applicable to joint owners and seems to have nothing to do with any rule of sapindaship. Again, if the texts in question are to be applied, it is by no means easy to determine from whom the generations are to be counted. If, at any point of time, the estate vested in a single person, it may be suggested that the counting should be from him; but what if it is not possible to trace any single individual in whom it was vested within living memory? No assistance can be derived from the texts in such a case. Nor is the matter free from difficulty even where such a person can be got at. Suppose A. has two sons, B. and C.; and each of them has several generations of issue, B1, B2, B3, B4, C1, C2, C3, and C4. Suppose B, B1, B2, and C, C1, and C2, are all dead, then according to the texts if the descent is to be cast from A., neither B3 and B4 nor C3 and C4 would have any right to A's estate. The last texts do not provide for any one else being taken as the starting point from which the descent is to be cast, although an attempt was made in the Madras case [Gavuridevamma v. Ramandora Garu (30)] to introduce another rule, to which we shall presently refer. No text-writer has been cited who has applied the rule to determine the limits of co-parcenary right where several generations of co-parceners have been living together as one family. Chandeswara says that Kathyayana's text is applicable only when partition not having been made, property not enjoyed by one co-heir is solely enjoyed by another residing in the same Province; that is, the rule is one of limitation for the right to enforce partition when the co-parcener claiming it has not been in joint enjoyment, the period of limitation being not a certain number of years, but to be determined with reference to the number of generations that have been out of possession. Subodhini, a commentary on the Mitakshara, seems to admit that the rights to partition may be carried on even beyond the great-grandson. See West and Buhler, p. 652, and Stokes's Digest of Hindu Law Books, p. 365. According to the Vyavahara Mayukha, the text of Devala is applicable only where branches live together. A longer period of limitation seems to have been allowed where the branch claiming partition was not living in the same Province. In such a case, the right to claim partition was allowed for six generations after the original owner. See Colebrooke's Hindu Law, Vol. II, page 512, Sir T. Strange's Manual of Hindu Law, pages 327 and 396, and also T. L. Strange's Manual of Hindu Law, para. 347.

In the Bombay case already referred to, Moro Vishvanath v. Ganesh Vithal (31), one Nahav was the original acquirer of the property. The plaintiffs who claimed partition were beyond, while the defendants were within, the fourth degree from him. The plea on the merits was that the parties had been in a state of separation for 50 years; but it was also urged by Mr. Mandlik that after three steps of descent from the acquirer of the family property, a claim to partition would cease. This contention was not accepted. West, J., observed: "Where two great-grandsons lived together as a united family, the son of each would, according to the Mitakshara Law, acquire, by birth, a co-ownership with his father in the ancestral estate; yet, if the argument is sound, this co-ownership would pass altogether from the son of A. or of B., as either happened to die before the other. If a co-parcener should die, leaving no nearer descendant than a great-great-grandson, then the latter would, no doubt, be excluded at once from inheritance and from partition by any nearer heirs of the deceased, as, for instance, brothers and their sons; but where there has not been such an interval as to cause a break in the course of lineal succession, neither has there been an extinguishment of the right to a partition of the property in which the deceased was a co-sharer in actual possession and enjoyment." The case put by the learned Judge seems to be one where the acquirer survives three generations of issue being in conveniently with him; in such a case, no doubt, the fourth generation of issue would not acquire any right in the property which is his own. The learned Judge does not deal with the case where the property is ancestral. The case was actually decided on the ground that the family must be regarded as having been divided. Nanabhai Haridas, J., refers to the texts of Kathyayana and Devala and criticises the interpretation put on the latter by the Mayukha which regards it as applicable to the case of re-united co-parceners only. He concludes: "Upon a consideration of the authorities cited, it seems to me that it would be difficult to uphold the appellant's contention that a partition could not, in any case, (other than that of absence in a foreign country) be demanded by descendants of [a common ancestor, more than four degrees removed, of property originally descended from him." He says, "that persons beyond the fourth degree would also be entitled to demand partition in such a case unless the three generations immediately below the person from whom it descends died before him. If the acquirer dies and the property vests in others, the issue of the latter also would acquire a right by birth." He does not say, however, that, where the property is not owned by a person solely but along with others, the mere fact that a co-parcener, in one line descended from him, is more than three degrees removed from him or from any descendant in that line, would destroy the right to claim a partition along with the co-parceners in another line. The case is no authority for any limitation to the right to partition where several generations of different lines have always lived together. In Gavuridevamma Garu v. Ramandora Garu (30), the plaintiff who claimed to succeed to an impartible estate was the nearest sapinda of the deceased holder. The plaintiff was the sixth descendant from one Bapam Dora who was the acquirer of the zemindari. The deceased holder was one degree further removed from him in the line of descent. It was contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed to the estate and that the deceased holder's widow was the proper heir. This contention was negatived. The learned Judges, Scotland, C. J., and Innes, J., held that the family being undivided, the widow had no title. They rejected the contention that only near sapindas of the deceased, that is, sapindas within three generations, were joint owners of the estate. They say—"The limit of the co-heirs must be held to include undivided collateral relations who are descendants in the male line of one who was a co-parcener with an ancestor of the last possessor. For, in the undivided co-parcenary interest, which vested in such co-parcener, his near sapindas were co-heirs, and when, on his death, the interest vested in his son, or other near sapinda in the male line, the near sapindas of such descendants or descendant became in like manner co-heirs with them or him, and so on, the co-heirship became e x tended, through the near sapindas down to the last descendant." This would practically let in all the descendants without any limitation of degree. They then go on to say: "Obviously, therefore, as long as the status of non-division continues, the members of the family who have in this way succeeded to a co-parcenary interest are co-heirs with their kindred who possess the other undivided interests of the entire estate, and one of such kindred and his near sapindas in the male line cannot be the only co-heirs, until by the death of all the others without descendants in the male line to the 3rd degree, he has, or he and they have, by survivorship acquired the entire right to the heritage as effectually as if the estate had passed upon an actual partition with the co-heirs."

Mr Mayne understands the last passage to import that the continuance of the co-parcenary interest is subject to the condition that "no person who claims to take a share is more than three steps removed from a direct descendant who has taken a share. Whenever a break of more than three degrees occurs between any holder of property and the person who claims to take next after that holder, the line ceases in that direction and the survivorship is confined to those collaterals and descendants who are within the limit of three degrees." The learned author seems to overlook the fact that each descendant as soon as he is born takes a share in what is already vested in his own father and he has not got to claim it as the share of a person more than three degrees removed from himself. When the son, grandson and great-grandson of a co-parcener, A., die leaving a son of the great-grandson, the shares vested in them have already been vested also in the son of the great-grandson and do not return completely to their ancestor, A. It appears to be doubtful whether the learned Judges of this Court meant to lay down that the property would go entirely to another branch although descendants in a lower degree than the third might be left in one branch. At any rate, such a view does not seem to be countenanced by the texts relied on. G. C. Sarkar in his Work on Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, page 196, says that "A male line, however low in descent, acquires a right by birth to both ancestral and self-acquired property of a paternal ancestor;" and he proceeds to say that, "if the third intermediate descendants were to die during the life-time of the owner of an ancestral property, the rights of the 4th descendant would not be in the least affected by that circumstance." The rule, he says, would be different if the paternal ancestor is separated from his descendants and not re-united with any of them and there is no son or grandson or great-grandson alive at the time of his death but only great-great-grandson." In Naraguntu Lutchmeedavamah v. Yengama Naidoo (32), a claim for heirship to an impartible palayam by a collateral relation in the 4th degree of descent from the common ancester was upheld against the widow, the deceased owner being a descendant of the 5th degree; but it was observed, in Gavuridevamma Garu v. Ramandora Garu (30), there was apparently some special circumstance in the case which would make it possible to contend that the question was not directly decided by the Privy Council. In Ratan Dabee v. Modhoosoodun Mohapator (33), the Calcutta High Court held that an unseparated grandfather's great-grandson's grandson would exclude a widow from inheriting the estate and Govuridevamna v. Ramandora Garu (30) was relied on in support of the position. It is, of course, unnecessary for the purpose of this case to decide whether a gap of three generations in any one line of co-parceners would prevent the lower descendants of that branch from claiming a share of the co-parcenary property as there was no such gap in this case. According to the principles and texts of the Hindu Law, such a gap would not affect the rights of descendants of the 4th and other generations. We see, at any rate, no ground for countenancing the contention that, even where there is no such gap, the descendants of persons removed more than three degrees from an ancestor are not entitled to take by survivorship on the extinction of the members of another branch descended from him. Such a rule derives no support from the writers on Hindu Law and is inconsistent with the principles of that law and unworkable in practice, besides being admittedly opposed to the authority of decided cases. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff in this case would not be disentitled to partition if the estate were partible and is, therefore, not disentitled to maintenance.

But, then, it is argued that although this rule might be correct if the plaintiff were the aurasa son of his father, the position is different, as he is an adopted son, because it is urged that in the case of an adopted son, the sapinda relationship extends only to three degrees in the adoptive family and that, therefore, the plaintiff is not a sapinda of the defendant. In support of this, reliance is placed on the authority of Dattaka Chandrika, section 3, pl. 18 to 24 and of Dattaka Mimamsa, section 6, pl. 32 to 38. It is not necessary to deal with this argument at any length because it is opposed to the authority of the Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 11, pl. 30 and 31, according to which an adopted son, being one of the six superior classes of sons, takes the inheritance of his father's sapindas and samanadaka. Besides, the question is, in our opinion, really concluded by the decisions of the Courts. The texts were examined at great length by Hobhouse, J., in a Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, in Gurugovind Shesha v. Anand Lal Ghose Mazumdar (34), and it was pointed out that the provisions of section 3 of Dattaka Chandrika apply to the adopted son quoad the performance of funeral rites and these only. Verse I of the section expressly says: "Next, the funeral rights, performed by a son given, are determined." The subject of inheritance is treated in section 5. In that section it is expressly laid down that an adopted son is a heir to the kinsmen of the adoptive father where he is possessed of good qualities. The possession of good qualities is not now insisted on as a condition precedent to the right to the inheritance. Skyamabharan Sircar has elaborately examined all the original authorities on the question in his Vyavastha Chandrika. Manu Bandhayana, Gautama, Kalikapurana and Brihaspati are all cited as authorties in favour of the adopted son's right to inherit to the kinsmen of the adoptive father; the authority of Sir William Macnaghten and of the author of Dvita Nirnaya, as well as the opinion of the Pandits, are referred to in support of the opinion. The Mitakshara is also construed as supporting the claim of the adopted son to stand in the same position as an aurasa son. Mr. Ganapati Aiyar has contended that Verses 30 and 31 of section 11 of the Mitakshara have been mistranslated by Colebrooke and that Verse 31 does not in reality declare the adopted son's right to succeed to the sapindas and Samanadakas of the adoptive father but only declares him in conjunction with the five other superior classes of sons to be both an heir and a kinsman of the father. We are altogether unable to accept this contention. Kullukha Bhatta, one of the commentators of Manu, has interpreted the text of Manu expounded by Vijnaneswara in Verses 30 and 31 in the sense in which those verses have been translated by Colebrooke and the author of Vyavastha Chandrika has also understood the Verses in the same sense. See pages 179 and 180. In Tara Mohun Bhuttachjaree v. Kripa Moyee Debia (35), an adopted son was held to be entitled to succeed to the estate of a collateral who was fifth in degree from the common ancestor. The learned Judges, Loch and Hobhouse, JJ., observed: "With regard to the right of an adopted son to succeed collaterally as well as lineally, we think it sufficient to quote the Privy Council decision in the case of Shumboo Chunder Chowdhury, Sutherland's Privy Council judgments, page 25, which ruled that, according to the authorities on Hindu Law and the weight due to them, an adopted son succeeds, not only lineally, but collaterally to the inheritance of his relations." In Puddo Kumar Debee v. Juggaut Kishore Acharjee (36), the Calcutta High Court again held that the adopted son succeeds to the sapinda kinsmen of his father and that as regards the relationship of sapindas, there is no difference between the adopted son and the natural son. On appeal the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council took the same view. See Government of Bengal v. Musammat Surruffutoonissa (37). In Mokundo Lal Roy v. Bykunt Nath Roy (38), Morris and Prinsep, JJ., held that an adopted son was not precluded from inheriting the estate of one related lineally, although at a distance of more than three generations from the common ancestor. In Dinonath Mukerjee v. Gopal Churn Mukerjee (39), an adopted son, who was 4th in degree from the common ancestor, was held to be entitled to inherit to a collateral agnate and it was also held that the position of an adopted son was identical with that of an aurasa son in matters of inheritance. Mimamsa, section 6, p. 53, Vyavastha Dharpana, page 967. The decided cases have all been collected in G. C. Sircar's work on Adoption, pages 395 to 397. Our conclusion is that the plaintiff's rights stand on the same footing as if he were an aurasa son of Lakshmana Rao. In the result, the decree of the lower Court awarding maintenance to plaintiff must be affirmed. We cannot agree with the contention that there is any admission of the plaintiff restricting the right to maintenance to three generations. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58 (a) & (c)—Mortgage by conditional sale—Test—Sale with condition of re-purchase—Revision.

A document purporting to be one of sale, though it is accompanied by a contract reserving to the vendor a right of re-purchase, is not on that account to be construed as if it were a mortgage. The test to apply is whether the relation of debtor and creditor subsists between the parties. If the relation does not exist, then the transaction does not fall within the general definition of a mortgage in section 58 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, and, therefore, cannot be regarded as a mortgage by conditional sale within section 58 (c).

Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, 12 A. 387; 17 I. A. 98, followed.

Where the lower Court has not duly considered the law applicable to the matter and has committed an error which goes to the root of the matter, the Court has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction and the High Court would be justified in interfering in revision.

Application to revise the judgment and decree in Civil Appeal No. 24 of 1910, dated 15th August 1910, reversing that of the Township Court of Nyaunglebin, in Suit No. 460 of 1909.

Mr. Palit, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ginwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants sold 20 cattle and a cart for Rs. 1,000 to the plaintiffs-petitioners on 15th February 1907. On the same date, the plaintiffs leased out certain land to the defendants and at the same time hired out the 20 cattle. The defendants remained in possession of the cart also. On the same date also, the plaintiffs signed a sparate agreement to re-sell the land, cattle and cart to the defendants for Rs 3,000 if the defendant showed desire to re-purchase their property. In the present suit, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had made default in the payment of rent, and that the plaintiff had recovered only some of the cattle. The suit was for the recovery of the remainder of the cattle, 9 in number, and the cart, or their value, Rs. 450.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the Township Court. But the District Court on appeal dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that the sale and the agreement to allow re-purchase formed a single transaction, namely, a mortgage by conditional sale, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue for possession but only for relief from waste of the mortgaged property or for other security.

It is urged in revision that this decision is contrary to law. There can be no doubt, I think, that the matter is governed by the English leading case, Alderson v. White (1), which was followed by the Privy Council in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (2). It was laid down that a document purporting to be one of sale, though it is accompanied by a contract reserving to the vendor a right of re-purchase, is not on that account to be construed as if it were a mortgage. The test to apply is whether the relation of a debtor and creditor subsists between the parties. If this relation does not exist, then the transaction does not fall within the general definition of mortgage in section 58 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act and, therefore, cannot be regarded as a mortgage by conditional sale within section 58 (c). There is nothing in the documents Exhibits A and I, to show that the relations of debtor and creditor were intended to subsist between the parties in the case. The sale was absolute and the parties entered into fresh relations as landlord and tenant by a separate instrument. It must be held that the District Court's decision is erroneous. I also think the case is one in which this Court is justified in interfering in revision according to the principles adopted in Zeya v. Mi On Kra Zan (3), for the error of the lower Court is one which goes to the root of the case, and it is clear that the District Judge did not duly consider the law applicable to the matter. He gives no reason for his opinion that the two documents constitute a mortgage by conditional sale and was apparently influenced mainly by the fact that the two documents were executed on the same day. The District Court appears to have acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

There were other minor issues in the case besides the issue as to sale or mortgage. But the respondents in their appeal to the Divisional Court took no special exception to the findings of the Court of first instance on these minor issues. The appeal to the Divisional Court rested on the plea that the cattle, etc, had been mortgaged and not sold. In this Court, also the arguments of the Counsel have been confined to the legal question. In these circumstances, I see no reason to question the findings of the Township Court on the minor questions of fact. But I note that the defendants, who alleged that four of the cattle had died of cattle disease, produced no evidence in proof of this allegation.

The decree of the District Court is set aside and that of the Township Court is restored. The respondents will pay the costs of the petitioners in all Court.

Decree set aside.

A, Part I*—Tenant's name not entered in Part I or II—Whether rent suit maintainable.

When all the members of a joint Mitakshara family are minors, an order appointing a guardian of the minors, is a good one. But when one of them comes of age, the guardianship ceases ipso facto as regards him, and as there cannot be a guardian of minors in a joint Mitakshara family in which there are also adults, the guardianship ceases also as regards the other minors, and the member who attains majority is competent to bring rent suits on behalf of himself and the minor members.

A landlord, in a return under Part I of Schedule A of the Bengal Cess Act, put down the names of his batai jote raiyats. Subsequently, he brought rent suits against them:

Held, that the return should have been made under Part II or Part III of the Schedule, as the case may be of Schedule A and not under Part I, and the names of the raiyats or tenure-holders, as the case may be, should have been mentioned; and there was, therefore, no proper return within the meaning of the Cess Act and section 20 was a bar to the suits.

Appeals from the orders of the District Judge of Mozaffarpur, dated May 22nd, 1911, reversing the decrees of the First Munsif of that place, dated January 30th, 1911, and remanding the suits to the lower Court for decision on the merits.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—These appeals arise out of 15 rent suits; and the judgment now given governs all of them.

I am of opinion that the learned District Judge was right in his dealing with the objection relating to the appointment of a guardian of the minors. It is argued that the lower Appellate Court should have held that the plaintiff No. 1 was not competent to institute a suit on behalf of the minor plaintiffs, that the only person who could institute a suit on their behalf was the guardian appointed by the Court, and, that as the minors were alleged to be necessary plaintiffs in the case, the suit was void and should have been dismissed. I think, however, that although the order appointing a guardian of the minors was originally a good order, when one of these minors came of age then the guardianship ceased ipso facto as regards him. As there cannot be a guardian of minors in the case of a joint Mitakshara family in which there are also adults, the guardianship ceased also as regards the other minors.

Upon the second question, I think that the learned Munsif was right and that his judgment should be restored. It has been argued before us that the appellants were not tenants at all. They are, it is said, cultivating the respondents' own nigjote land on the respondents' landlords' behalf, and not for themselves, and that, therefore, the return was strictly accurate and came within Part I to Schedule A of the Bengal Cess Act, the land being land in the actual occupation and cultivation of the person submitting "the return." In short, the contention was that these persons were not raiyats, that is to say, persons cultivating land for themselves, but were labourers working on the land for the respondents and receiving in return, as their wages, portion of the produce of their labour. Now, if this were so, then, as the learned Pleader for the appellant has pointed out, the whole of the argument of the lower Courts was thrown away, the case proceeded, in fact, on the assumption that the defendants were tenants and they were sued for rent as such.

This, I think, sufficiently appears in the face of the judgments themselves. That conclusion is corroborated by reference to the evidence of the first plaintiff, who described the defendants as ancestral tenants. The return after referring to nigjote, has these words, batai jote raiyat, and there is the khatian, which was filed by the plaintiff, in which it is said the tenants are described as occupancy tenants. Now, evidence was taken in this case, but having regard to the Munsif's findings upon issues Nos. 1 and 2, he did not come to any other finding upon the evidence in the case.

We, therefore, must not be undrstood to determine on this appeal what the exact nature of the appellants' tenancy was. What we do decide is that they were tenants, and not labourers; that is to say, they were persons who were cultivating the lands for themselves. This being so, the return should, in my opinion, have been made under Part II or Part III, as the case may be, of Schedule A, and not under Part I, and the names of the raiyats, or tenure-holders, as the case may be, should have been mentioned. There was, therefore, no proper return within the meaning of the Act, and section 20 is, as the Munsif has found, a bar to the suit.

It has been argued that even if the appellants were tenants, they were such tenants of land, which, according to the respondents' argument, was nigjote, or zerait land and that such land, whether it is in the actual occupation or cultivation of the landlord, or is let out to tenants, comes under, and should be entered under, Part I. In support of this construction, reliance is put upon the note appended to that Part. But this note must be read subject to what precedes it in the first part and to the provisions of Part II and III, and the preceding words of Part I show that the details of the lands, which are to be entered in that part, are lands in the actual occupation and cultivation of the persons submitting returns. If the land is held either by cultivating raiyats or by tenure-holders, paying, in either case, to the person submitting the return, then the return should be in the form of Part II and III to Schedule A.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the decisions of the learned District Judge on this latter point with which I have dealt is wrong; and I would reverse his judgment and restore the judgment and decree of the Munsif with costs in all the Courts, the hearing fee in this Court being fixed at one gold mohur in each of the appeals.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4—Equity of redemption not a security—Letters of Administration not to be granted when proper remedy of petitioner is to file regular suit to recover property.

MA THEIN MAY v. MA THAN MYA.

The respondents applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of a deceased person claiming to administer the estate as his daughters. The appellants denied the legitimacy of the respondents and claimed to be in possession for 30 years as the deceased's nieces. The property was alleged to be under a mortgage to another person:

Held, (1) that the equity of redemption was not a security or debt within the meaning of section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act and the respondents could file a suit for redemption without such a certificate or Letters of Administration;

Ma Pe v. Ma Thein Yin, 4 L. B. R. 287; 14 Bur. L. R. 280, distinguished.

(2) that the application for Letters of Administration was an attempt to obtain adjudication as to the status of the respondents and to obtain possession without filing a regular suit and should be rejected;

(3) that the proper remedy of the respondents was to bring a regular suit against the parties in possession of the property.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Amherst, in Civil Miscellaneous No. 188 of 1910.

Mr. Halka, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dantra, for the Rspondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents applied for Letters of Adminstration to the estate of one Hashim who, they said, had died 20 years previously, alleging that they are his daughters. The only other relatives of his, they mentioned, was Ma Pwa Ohn, their mother. The assets of the estate were set out as being a house and ground which were subject to a mortgage or charge of Rs. 3,000. This property was valued by them at Rs. 1,600, but it was stated that the mortgagee had agreed to accept Rs. 1,500 in full satisfaction of the mortgage, and for this reason the amount of assets likely to come to the petitioners' hands was put down at Rs. 100 only.

A special citation was issued to Ma Pwa Ohn who was stated to be a consenting party to Letters being granted to her daughters, and who subsequently expressed her consent in Court. General citations were also issued and the appellants appeared to oppose the grant. They claimed to be niece and nephew of Hashim. They contested the legitimacy of the petitioners and the relationship of Hashim and Ma Pwa Ohn having been that of husband and wife. They alleged that the house and ground had been given to them and had been in their possession for over 30 years, and that one of them had spent large sums of money in improving the house, and they charged that the object of the applications for Letters was to oust them from the property.

The learned Judge received evidence as to the legitimacy of the petitioner, and deciding in their favour, granted them the Letters asked for.

He thought that the case was distinguishable from that of Ma Pe v. Ma Thin Yin (1), being apparently under the impression that they could not have recovered the property by redemption without Letters of Administration to Hashim's estate. In this, he was mistaken. If Ma Pwa Ohn was Hashim's wife and the petitioners were his daughters, on his death his equity of redemption over the property devolved upon them as his heirs. The right to recover immoveable property by paying off the amount due on a mortgage of it is not a security as defined in the Succession Certificate Act, and if they had to sue the mortgagee for redemption, he was not a debtor of the deceased man. Consequently, the prohibition in section 4 of the Act would not have applied.

The object of the application was obviously to get their status of daughters of the deceased declared in as cheap a method as possible with a view to further proceedings against the persons in possession if they should not give up the property willingly.

In the present case, even if the petitioners are the legitimate daughters of Hashim, they have admittedly been out of possession of the property, which they sought to obtain a title to, for 20 years. Prima facie all claim on their part to the property is barred by limitation : but whether this is so or not, the proper way for them to put forward claims they may have to the property, is by a regular suit against the parties in possession of it.

I would allow this appeal, and set aside the order of the District Court. The respondents should pay the appellants' costs in this Court and in the District Court. Advocate's fee in this Court allowed at 3 gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaratory decree—What sanctioned by section—Injunction, whether consequential relief—Device to evade payment of Court-fee, not to be encouraged—Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870*), Sch. II, Art.* 17, cl. (iii).

Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not sanction every form of declaration; but only a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property.

An injunction is a consequential relief.

Marsh v. Keith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 342; 30 L. J. Ch. 127; 6 Jur. (N. S.) 1182; 3 L. T. 498; 9 W. R. 115; 127 R. R. 133, relied upon.

In a suit, the plaintiff sought for the following reliefs:—(1) that it may be declared that a certain mortgage-deed executed by one of the defendants in favour of another, is collusive and without consideration; that the decree passed on the basis thereof has been fraudulently obtained and it is ineffectual, and that for the satisfaction of that decree the mortgaged property mentioned in the decree cannot be sold; (2) that if the Court finds any obstacle in granting the above relief, then it may be declared that without the deduction of the fair value of 3-annas share of each of certain mouzas named and excluding the same, the defendant has no right to lay the whole charge on the remaining property in claim and to bring about the sale of the said property; and (3) that any other relief which the Court may find the plaintiff entitled to, be granted to her:

Held, that the suit is not such as is contemplated by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and, therefore, not "a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed" within the meaning of clause (iii) of Article 17 of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act.

The history of decrees merely declaratory traced.

The device to attempt an evasion of Court-fees by casting the prayers of the plaint into a declaratory shape, does not merit encouragement or favour.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal raises the question whether the lower Court has rightly held that sufficient Court-fee has not been paid on the plaint. Holding that it has not, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. On the appeal being opened, a preliminary objection has been raised that the memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped. The considerations involved in this objection are substantially those which govern the appeal.

The suit has been treated by the plaintiff as one to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed: and so, she contends, the proper fee both on the plaint and the memorandum of appeal is ten rupees.

The prayers to her plaint are framed in these terms:

"RELIEFS SOUGHT FOR"

"(1) That it may be declared that the registered deed, dated 1st June 1896, for Rs. 14,000, executed by defendant No. 9 in favour of the father and ancestors of defendants Nos. 1 to 8, is collusive, nominal, invalid, fraudulent and without consideration; that the decree passed on the basis thereof, which is pending execution in No. 83 of 1909 in the first Court of Subordinate Judge at Arrah, has been collusively and fraudulently obtained and it is ineffectual, inoperative and invalid, and that for the satisfaction of that decree, the mortgaged property in question mentioned in the said decree cannot be sold.

"(2) That if the Court finds any obstacle in granting the above relief, then it may be adjudicated and declared that without the deduction of the fair value of 3-annas shares of each of the Mauzahs Sudhia, Baradhi Sirihira, Ainlasi Khurd, Pakdihar, Pipra Shankarwar, Amarba Sadusa and Bhadandra and excluding the same, the defendants Nos. 1 to 8 have no right to lay the whole charge on the remaning property in claim and to bring about the sale of the said property and that such decree is not fit for execution and it is invalid, ineffectual and inoperative.

"(3) That any other relief, which the Court may find the plaintiff entitled to, be granted to her against the defendants and that the costs of this suit with interest till realisation may be awarded against defendants Nos. 1 to 9."

In the view of the Subordinate Judge, the prayer in the plaint, though it is in form a mere declaration, practically asks for consequential relief, and it is as a result of this view that he arrived at the decision that is now impugned.

It is a common fashion to attempt an evasion of Court-fees by casting the prayers of the plaint into a declaratory shape. Where the evasion is successful, it cannot be touched, but the device does not merit encouragement or favour.

The history of decrees merely declaratory is interesting, and a consideration of it may help to a solution of the question involved in this appeal. Such decrees are an innovation, and they first obtained authoritative sanction in England by section 50 of the Chancery Procedure Act, 1852. Before this, it was not the practice of the Court in ordinary suits to make a declaration of right except as introductory to relief which it proceeded to administer (Seton on Decrees).

Seven years later, India followed suit with section 15 of the Civil Procedure Code 1859, where it was enacted that no suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree or order is sought thereby, and it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief. By Act X of 1877, the Civil Procedure Code of that year, this section was repealed, but its place had been already taken in anticipation by section 42 of Act I of the same year, the Specific Relief Act. That section provides as follows:—"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character a right, and the Court may, in its discretion, make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not, in such suit, ask for any further relief:

"Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so."

It is in this section (apart from particular legislative sanction) that the law as to merely declaratory decrees, applicable in the circumstances of this case, is now to be found.

The terms of the section are not a precise reproduction of the provision contained in the Act of 1859 and the English law; in one direction they are more comprehensive, in another more limited. It is common tradition that the section was designed to be a substantial reproduction of the Scotch action of declaration; but whether this be so or not, is of no great moment. We have to be guided by its provisions as they are expressed. The section does not sanction every form of declaration, but only a declaration that the plaintiff is "entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property:" it is the disregard of this that accounts for the multiform and at times eccentric declarations which find a place in Indian plaints.

If the Courts were astute—as I think they should be—to see that the plaints presented conformed to the terms of section 42, the difficulties that are to be found in this class of cases, would no longer arise. Nor would plaintiffs be unduly hampered if the provisions of section 42 were enforced, for it would be easy to frame a declaration in such terms as would comply with the provisions of the section where the claim was one within its policy.

Now what are the declarations that are sought in this case? None relate to the plaintiffs' legal character, so only those are permissible which relate to "any right as to any property." Of the declarations in the first prayer of the plaint, none as expressed is a declaration of this character; it may be that the proposition at which the plaintiff aims is in some measure involved in those declarations, but that is not what is sanctioned by section 42.

The second prayer is open to the same comment. The third prayer expressly seeks relief, though it is general in its terms. I fail then to see how this is such a suit as section 42 of the Specific Relief Act contemplates, and if it is not, then it is not a "suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed," as sanctioned by law.

The proceedings of this suit confirm this view, for the plaintiff has successfully sought an interim injunction restraining the defendants, and at this moment the defendants are restrained by an injunction from pursuing the rights they assert to be theirs.

That an injunction is consequential relief is, I think, clear; the language of the Specific Relief Act favours that view, and it is one that has the sanction of Indian decisions and also of the Court of Chancery in Marsh v. Keith (1).

I would only add this, that the limit imposed by section 42 is on decrees which are merely declaratory, and does not expressly extend to decrees in which relief is administered, and declarations are embodied as introductory to that relief. For such declarations, legislative sanction is not required: they rest on long established practice. But for all that, the Court should be circumspect and even chary as to the declarations it makes: it is ordinarily enough that relief should be granted without the declaration.

The result then is that the preliminary objection to this appeal must prevail. But we will give the appellant an opportunity of making up the deficiency of Court-fees, provided she pays the required balance within one month from this date. If that be done, then it will be open to the appellant to ask us to make a similar order in reference to the plaint.

Costs—Appeal, second—Discretion—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35.

In a second appeal, the Court cannot interfere with an order as to costs unless the order is illegal. The Court connot examine the reasons and review the exercise of the discretion of the lower Court in the matter of costs.

Even if the discretion is exercised wrongly, that is not a sufficient reason for interfering in second appeal.

Second appeal against the judgment and decree of the Divisional Court of Toungoo, reversing that of the Sub-Divisional Court of Pegu, without granting costs to the appellants.

Mr. McDonnell, for the Appellants.

Mr. Palit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants-appellants succeeded in both the lower Courts. In the Court of first instance they were allowed their costs. But the lower Appellate Court directed that each party should pay his own costs and it is only against this part of the decree that the present second appeal has been preferred. The plaintiff, Tun U. sued to redeem for Rs. 300 part of the land which descended to him and his co-heirs from their parents. From the documentary evidence, it appears that the four co-heirs sold their interest in the undivided land outright to their brother, Aung Bon for Rs. 1,000 on 18th August 1902; that Aung Bon on the same date mortgaged the land for Rs. 1,000 to a Chetty, and that on 14th September 1904, Aung Bon sold the land outright to another Chetty, the 4th defendant, for Rs. 1,200 paying off the first Chetty's mortgage. The Sub-Dvisional Court held that Aung Bon was ostensible owner when he sold to the 4th defendant, that the land had never been partitioned and that there was no mortgage transaction between Tun U and Aung Bon in respect of Tun U's undivided share. But the Sub-Divisional Judge's ultimate reason for dismissing Tun U's suit was that the plaintiff has needlessly attempted at filing a suit for redemption of a share only. It is not clear why the Sub-Divisional Judge did not base his decision on the finding that there was no mortgage transaction at all.

The Divisional Court on appeal seems to have regarded the transaction of 18th August 1902 between the co-heirs and Tun U as a mortgage, though it was ostensibly a sale, and he seems to have regarded the ostensible sale of 14th September 1904 to the 4th defendant as also a mortgage. He dismissed the appeal on the same ground that the Sub-Divisional Court dismissed the suit, namely, a suit for piecemeal redemption of an undivided share could not succeed. But he would not allow the respondents their costs because they denied the mortgage set up by the plaintiffs-appellants.

It is not necessary, in my opinion, to go into the question whether there is any foundation for the Divisional Court's finding that a mortgage was proved.

This is a special appeal under section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the matter of costs, the Divisional Court had complete discretion under section 35 of the Code. The Judge recorded his reasons as required by sub-section (2). If this were a first appeal, I might examine the reasons and review the exercise of the discretion of the lower Court in the matter of costs. But in special appeal, this Court cannot interfere unless the order as to costs is illegal. The leading case on the subject is Girdhari Lal v. Sunder Bibi (1). The case of Futeek Paroose v. Mohendro Nath Mojoomdar (2) may also be referred to. Whatever opinion may be formed as to the soundness of the Divisional Judge's reasons for refusing the present appellants their costs, I think it is clear that the order is not illegal. It was within his discretion to refuse costs and even if he exercised his discretion wrongly, that is not a sufficient reason for interfering in second appeal.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

In section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the words "date of the sale" mean the actual date of the sale, and not the date of the confirmation of sale.

In the same section, the words "has notice" mean, has knowledge or information "and not has received a notice."

It is provided by the section that the incumbrance shall be annulled from the date on which the notice is served on the incumbrancer. It cannot mean the date on which the application for service of notice is made to the Collector.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Jessore, dated April 22nd, 1909, modifying that of the Munsif of Jessore, dated July 21st, 1908.

Mr. Z. R. Zahed. Counsel, and Moulvi Nuruddin Ahmed, for the Appellant.

Babus Narendra Kumar Bose and Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In support of this appeal, the following points have been raised:—first, that, in section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the words "date of the sale" mean not the actual date of the sale but the "date of the confirmation of the sale". To support this contention, we have been referred to the provisions of section 169 of the same Act and we are also informed that the provisions of the Sale Law go to support this view. It is only necessary to point out that section 169 was amended by the introduction of the words "date of the confirmation of the sale" for "date of the sale" and that, in the section referred to, section 167, the date expressly mentioned is the "date of the sale" and not the "date of the confirmation of the sale". In the Act XI of 1859, section 33, the period within which a suit must be brought is expresaly stated to be "within one year from the date of the sale becoming final and conclusive". No other authority has been laid before us to support the contention that the words "date of the sale" in section 167 must be read as the date of the confirmation of the sale and we see no reason to differ from the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point.

Next, it has been urged that the Judge of the lower Appellate Court was in error in supposing that the plaintiff had notice of the encumbrance before the month of June in the year in which the notice was served. The learned Subordinate Judge, on reviewing the facts, has come to a finding of fact that it is clear that the plaintiff had information that persons other than the debtor were cultivating the land and, in such circumstances, it was certainly necessary for the plaintiff to ascertain in what capacity those persons were cultivating the land so as to ascertain whether or not there was any encumbrance on the land. The learned Counsel for the appellant seems to suggest that the words "has notice" in section 167 mean "has received a notice". We think there is no justification for that suggestion and that "has notice" means has knowledge or information. In this case, the lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiff had knowledge or information that there was an emcumbrance on the holding more than a year before the service of the notice and we see no reason to differ from it.

Lastly, it has been suggested that the responsibility for the service of the notice under section 167 of the Tenancy Act rested with the Collector and not with the plaintiff, the purchaser, and that, after he had presented to the Collector his application for service of the notice, from that date the encumbrance must be considered to have been annulled. This is not in accordance with the provisions of the Act nor is it, in our opinion, an argument which can be maintained. The notice was presented to the Collector for the purpose of service on the encumbrancer; but, at the same time, it was the duty of the person presenting the notice to give the Collector such assistance as was necessary to enable him to serve it on the person for whom it was intended. The law expressly provides that the encumbrance shall be annulled from the date on which the notice is served on the encumbrancer and not from the date on which the application is made to the Collector.

These are the three main points taken in support of the appeal and, in our opinion, they fail. The lower Appellate Court appears to have gone carefully into the case and we see no reason whatever to differ from the conclusion at which that Court has arrived. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bailment—Specific property—Debtor and creditor—Liability of a goldsmith—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 148, 151—Revision—Material irregularity.

Where some precious stones and lumps of gold of special quality and three sovereigns were given to a goldsmith to convert into jewellery and were lost by theft, not caused by want of proper care:

Held, (1) that as the intention was to convert the identical stones and lumps of gold into jewellery, the ownership did not pass to the goldsmith and the transaction being one of bailment, he was absolved from liability for the loss under sections 148 and 151, Indian Contract Act, but that as regards the three sovereigns, as the identical sovereigns were not intended to be melted and turned into jewellery, the property had passed to the goldsmith and he was indebted to the owner thereof and was liable to make good the loss;

(2) that as the above distinction had escaped the attention of the lower Court, there had been material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction.

Petition for revision of the judgment and decree of the District Court of Hanthawaddy, in Civil Appeal No. 94 of 1910, setting aside that of the Township Court of Kungyangon, in Civil Regular Suit No. 150 of 1910.

Mr. S. N. Sen, for the Applicant.
Mr. Doctor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in this case is a goldsmith and it had been found by the lower Appellate Court that the contents of his safe were robbed. The contents included various articles, gold and precious stones, which had been given to the respondent for the purpose of being made into jewellery and the respondent on being sued by the owners for the return of these articles, has been absolved by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that he had not been negligent, i.e., that he had exercised the ordinary care required by section 151 of the Contract Act. This decision cannot be impugned in the case of the precious stones, or of the lumps of gold of a particular quality, for it was clearly the intention that those identical articles should be turned into jewellery, and then returned to the owners. In the case of these articles, therefore, the contract was one of bailment as defined in section 148 of the Contract Act. The property in the articles remained with the original owners. But where, as in the present case, the articles made over to the respondent were sovereigns, which he was required to make into a watch chain, the contract was, I think, not one of bailment. The respondent was under no obligation to use these particular sovereigns for making the chain. He might have spent them and afterwards melted down other sovereigns for this purpose. It should be held that the property in the sovereigns passed to the respondent, who thereupon became indebted in a like amount to the original owner of the sovereigns. As this distinction escaped the notice of the Divisional Judge, who treated the case of the soverigns on exactly the same footing as the case of the precious stones, it must be held that there had been a material irregularity in the exercise of the jurisdiction of the District Court.

In re KAYA RAMAKRISHNA.

I shall make no order as to the claim for Rs. 10, the amount paid for workmanship, as it appears that, besides the three sovereigns referred to above, two more sovereigns were given by the plaintiff to the respondent and were converted into a charm by another goldsmith and were actually returned to the plaintiff. It is not clear that the workmanship on this charm was worth less than Rs. 10. The decree of the Divisional Court is set aside. There will be a decree in the plaintiffs' favour for Rs. 45 and costs on this amount in all Courts.

Landlord and tenant—Permissive occupation—Agreement to execute a lease not carried into effect—Claim for use and occupation—Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865)—Compromise in prior suit, effect of.

Where a person gets into possession of another's land on an oral agreement to execute a lease in the latter's favour and continues in such possession without executing the lease, no tenancy is created, and the person who is in such permissible occupation is liable in a suit by the owner for damages for use and occupation.

The fact that a prior suit by the owner for use and occupation was compromised by the plaintiff accepting a certain amount from the defendant should not alter the previous relation of permissive occupation and create a legal tenancy between the parties.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff instituted this suit for compensation for use and occupation of his land by the defendants in Faslis 1316 and 1317. Both the Courts have passed a decree in his favour. The facts found are, that the defendants originally entered into possession of the land under an oral agreement to take a lease for Faslis 1313 to 1317. A khat was to be executed subsequently. But the defendants did not execute any such instrument but continued to be in possession of the land. It is contended that the defendants must be regarded as the plaintiff's tenants, and the suit being for rent for a period prior to the enactment of the Estates Land Act, the plaintiff could not maintain the suit without having tendered a patta for each of the years. But the finding is that the defendants did not in fact become the tenants of plaintiff. They came into possession, no doubt, with plaintiff's permission, but what was legally required to make them tenants, namely the execution of a khat was not done by them. Reliance is placed on the fact that plaintiff instituted a previous suit for compensation for use and occupation for Faslis 1313 to 1315, and that suit was settled between the parties by payment of a certain sum to the plaintiff. The District Judge finds that the compromise did not recognize the defendants as tenants and that the amount was not accepted by the plaintiff as rent. The legal effect of the compromise, therefore, merely was that the defendants being bound to pay compensation for occupying plantiff's land, satisfied their liability by payment of a certain amount. This did not alter the relation which previously existed between the parties, namely, that of permissive occupation by the defendants without the creation of a legal tenancy, that is exactly the kind of case, where an owner of land would be entitled to compensation for use and occupation. Mr. Prakasam relies on a case reported in Ali Khan v. Appadu (1). There the defendant was admittedly the plaintiff's tentant and a suit instituted for rent had failed. He then instituted another suit claiming compensation for use and occupation. It was held that compensation for land occupied by defendant as a tentant was in reality rent due by him as tenant and no suit could be instituted to enforce his obligation without satisfying the requirements of section 7 of the Rent Recovery Act by tendering a proper patta. That case has no application to the circumstances of this case, where, according to the finding, the defendants never became the Certain property was mortgaged to plaintiff but was in the occupation of the mortgagors, who failed to pay the Municipal taxes and allowed it to be sold for arrears of revenue. The auction-purchaser, who had acted in collusion with the mortgagors, was, in the plaintiff's suit for a mortgage-decree, made a co-defendant. Both the lower Courts found that he had colluded with the mortgagors in order to defraud the mortgagee, the plaintiff:

Held, that the auction-purchaser had not acquired a good title free from the plaintiff's incumbrance and section 48 of the Land and Revenue Act was no reply to plaintiff's action. It was open to the plaintiff to show that in conferring a title free from incumbrance, the Revenue Officer was misled by the fraud of the mortgagor and the purchaser acting in collusion.

Nawab Sidhee Nazir Ali Khan v. Rajah Ojoodhyaram Khan, 10 M. I. A. 540; 5 W. R. (P. C.) 83, followed.

Appeal against the judgment of the Divisional Court of Tenasserim in Civil Appeal No. 101 of 1910, dated 18th July 1910, upholding that of the Sub-Divisional Judge, in Civil Suit No. 29 of 1909, dated 23rd November 1909.

Mr. Auzum, for the Appellant.

Mr. F. C. Brown, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ma Su and Hamu mortgaged their house and land to the plaintiff Chetty firm for Rs. 400, retaining possession. Subsequently, as the mortgagors failed to pay the Municipal tax on the house, which they were bound to pay on the principle contained in section 65 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, the property was, therefore, sold by the Municipal authorities under section 206 of the Municipal Act, which provides that arrears of taxes may be recovered as if they were arrears of land revenue under section 48 of the Land and Revenue Act. The purchaser at an auction-sale acquires a title free from all incumbrances except such as are expressly reserved. There was no reservation in this case. The purchaser was Sabeid Ali and the price paid by him was Rs. 20. Sabeid Ali's wife is the daughter of Hamu and granddaughter of Ma Su.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff firm on the mortgage. The auction-purchaser, Sabeid Ali, was made co-defendant with Hamu, the surviving mortgagor, and it was alleged in the plaint that the mortgagors had acted fraudulently and colluded with their relative, the purchaser Sabeid Ali, in allowing the property to be sold for arrears of taxes with intent to defeat the plaintiff firm's mortgage.

Both the lower Courts have found in favour of the plaintiffs. The purchaser Sabeid Ali appeals on the grounds—first, that fraud and collusion were not proved and, secondly, that by the operation of section 48 of the Land and Revenue Act, the appellant obtained a good title free from the plaintiff respondent's incumbrance.

On the first point, the concurrent finding of the lower Courts is one of fact and cannot be disturbed here. Moreover, I think that there can be no doubt as to its correctness. The near relationship of the appellant to the mortgagors and the absurdly low price which he paid, raise a very strong presumption that the sale was collusive.

As regards the second point, it is sufficient to cite the Privy Council case Nawab Sidhee Nazir Ali Khan v. Rajah Ojoodhyaram Khan (1). In that case, the party who was defrauded by a revenue sale was a mortgagor. It was held that the parties who brought about the sale were precluded by their acts from setting up, as against a third person, the mortgagor, the object of their fraud and a stranger to the collusive agreement between them, the illegality of that agreement itself. Their Lordships decided that the sale under the Revenue Laws being "a devise—part of the machinery as it were—to effect a fraud," the sale should be considered as between the parties a private sale.

Similarly, the appellant Sabeid Ali cannot be allowed to enjoy the benefit of his own fraud. The sale as between him and the prior mortgagees must be treated as a mere private sale by the mortgagors to Sabeid Ali, and notwithstanding the statutory bar contained in section 48 of the Land and Revenue Act, it must be held that Sabeid Ali took the property subject to the mortgage. As was said in the Duchess of Kingston's case (2), "fraud is an extrinsic collateral act which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of Justice. Lord Coke says it avoids all judicial acts, Ecclesiastical or Temporal." When property is sold for arrears of revenue under the Land and Revenue Act, it is not permissible to show in a Civil Court that the Revenue Officer was mistaken but it is permissible to show, as in this case, that in conferring a title free from incumbrance he was misled by the fraud of the original owner and the purchaser acting in collusion.

Judgment—Court adopting reasons in previous judgment between same parties where evidence was almost the same—Such a judgment, whether in accordance with law.

Where a Court, in its judgment, states that it adopts the reasons given by it in a judgment in a previous suit between the same parties, the evidence being almost the same, this does not amount to using the previous judgment as evidence in the case, and the judgment is one in accordance with law.

Second appeal against the decree of the Temporary Subordniate Judge of South Canara, in A. S. No. 168 of 1909, presented against that of the District Munsif of Puttur in O. S. No. 520 of 1908.

Messrs K. Narain Rao and H. Bala Krishna Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the 1st Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Both Courts have found that the property sued for was not set apart to 2nd defendant's branch for maintenance

The Subordinate Judge's judgment on this point is very short. We understand him to accept the reasons given by the District Munsif. With regard to the Munsif's judgment, two points have been raised, viz., that he has really not written a proper judgment in accordance with the requirements of law, and, secondly, he regarded the judgments in the previous Suits Nos. 90 of 1896 and 276 of 1905 as evidence in this case.

With regard to the second point, we are prepared to assume, for the purpose of this decision, that the previous judgments were not legally admissible in evidence. The Munsif says that the evidence adduced in the previous case and that adduced in the present suit are the same, with the exception that certain additional witnesses were examined in this suit. He then refers to the conclusions that he came to in the previous suit, the evidence being the same. He says that he is not able to arrive at a different conclusion from what he had found in the previous suit. The effect of this is, in our opinion, that he adopts the reasons which he himself had given in the previous judgment. These reasons were based on evidence which was adduced in the previous case, which was the same as the evidence in this case. He, therefore, comes to the same conclusion in this case as he did on the evidence in the previous case. This, we think, does not amount to using the conclusions arrived at in the previous case as evidence in this case. If, as we understand the judgment, he adopted the reasons given in the judgment in the former case, those reasons are practically incorporated in his judgment in this suit, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the judgment is not in accordance with the requirements of the law in that it does not fully state the reasons for his conclusion. We, therefore, think that both these objections must fail. We dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Mortgage, essentials of—Interpretation of deed—"Muakhiza", meaning of.

In order that there may be a simple mortgage, there must be (a) a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property, (b) a personal undertaking by the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-money, and (c) an agreement, express or implied, that in the event of the mortgagor failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold.

The word 'muakhiza' is not commonly employed to denote a simple mortgage. The root meaning of muakhiza is taking and the word is generally used in the sense of taking satisfaction or calling to account.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge of Azamgarh.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent for the recovery of Rs. 563 odd by the sale of a share in a village. The suit is based upon a document, dated March 31st, 1891, which, according to the respondent, effected a mortgage of the share, but which, according to the appellants effected only a charge on the share. If there was a mortgage, the suit is maintainable, and the order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the suit for trial on the merits is correct. If there was only a charge, the suit is barred by limitation as was held by the Court of first instance, and this appeal must be allowed.

The deed opens with a recital that the executant has borrowed Rs. 991, then follows a promise by him to pay that amount with interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem within a certain time, and after that there are the following words:—

Muakhiza asl o sud ta yom-ul-wasul upar [description of the share] haqiat man muqir .....qaim rahega.....lihaza..... ...batarik tamassuk muakhaza.....i-jaidad ka likhdya.

If it is a mortgage at all, it is a simple mortgage. In order that there may be a simple mortgage, there must be (a) a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property, (b) a personal undertaking by the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-money, and (c) an agreement, express or implied, that in the event of the mortgagor failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold. The second requirement is satisfied. There is no express transfer of an interest in property, and there is no express agreement that in case of default the mortgagee may bring the property to sale. But in a simple mortgage, the interest transferred is the right to have the property sold, and this need not necessarily be provided for in the deed in so many words; it may be inferred from the language used and where such an agreement can be inferred, the first and third requirements are satisfied. We are asked to infer such an agreement from the use of the word muakhiza. It is conceded that this is not a word commonly employed to denote a simple mortgage. The words commonly used are rihn, kifalat, and mustughraq, and their grammatical variations. The root meaning of muakhiza is "taking," and the word is generally used in the sense of taking satisfaction or calling to account. Thus muakhizadar is a man who is responsible or called to account. There is nothing in the word which necessarily imples taking and selling. For what it may be worth, we note that the word muakhiza is used in the authorised translation of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act for the word charge in the original. The words ordinarily used to denote a mortgage were well known in 1891, when the deed in question was executed. The word muakhiza does not necessarily imply a power of sale, and there is nothing else in the deed from which an intention to give a power of sale can be inferred. We are unable to hold that the deed conferred upon the creditor a power to bring the property to sale. In our opinion, the deed is not a mortgage. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the first Court. The appellants must pay the respondent's costs in all the three Courts.

CIVIL RULE No. 3428 OF 1911.

December 1, 1911.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Carnduff.

BENI MADHAB ROY—DECREE-HOLDER—PETITIONER

BISSESWAR BHARATI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 153, 174—Appeal—Rent decree—Sale—Order setting aside or refusing to set aside sale—Question relating to title to land between conflicting parties—Effect of explanation to section 153—Question, whether judgment-debtor complied with section 174—Decision whether appealable—Poundage fee, whether judgment-debtor bound to deposit—Execution proceedings, whether decree may be challenged.

A decree for rent under Rs. 50 in value was made by a Munsif with final jurisdiction under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An appeal was preferred against that decree and heard without jurisdiction. The decree was modified. In execution of that decree the holding was sold and purchased by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor brought into Court a sum for the reversal of the sale under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An application to set aside the sale was refused on the ground that the poundage fee had not been deposited. This order was made by a Munsif who had final jurisdiction under section 153. The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Judge who overruled an objection to the competency of the appeal. On the hearing of the appeal, it was held that the judgment-debtor was not bound to deposit the poundage fee as under the High Court Rules, the decree-holder, upon reversal of the sale, would be entitled to a refund of the sum he had deposited on that account. The sale was consequently reversed. The decree-holder moved the High Court against that order.

Held, (1) that an order of this description made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is ordinarily appealable.

Sital Rai v. Nanda Lal, 1 Ind. Cas. 304; 13 C. W. N. 591; 11 C. L. J. 202, followed.

(2) That an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale held in execution of a rent-decree is an order which decides a question relating to title to land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto.

Kali Mondul v. Ram Sarbeswar Chakrabutty, 32 C. 957; 9 C. W. N. 721 (F. B.); 1 C. L. J. 476, relied upon.

(3) That the effect of the explanation newly added to section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not to practically supersede the Full Bench case of Kali Mondul v. Ram Sarbeswar Chakrabutty, 32 C. 957; 9 C. W. N. 721 (F. B.); 1 C. L. J. 476, although the effect of the explanation is to restrict considerably the effect of the Full Bench decision.

Sheo Parsan Rai v. Bishun Paryash Narain, 10 Ind. Cas. 539; 15 C. W. N. 760, referred to.

(4) That where the question is, whether the judgment-debtor has complied with the requirements of section 174 for reversal of the sale, the case is not covered by the explanation and the rule laid down in the Full Bench governs the matter.

(5) That the appeal to the District Judge was competent.

Obiter dictum:—(1) The judgment-debtor was not bound to deposit the poundage fee.

Raghubar Dayal v. Jadu Nandan Misser, 13 Ind. Cas. 365; 15 C. L. J. 89; 16 C. W. N. 736, referred to.

(2) It was not open to the judgment-debtor to challenge the validity of the decree in execution proceedings after that decree had been executed without objection and the sale had actually taken place.

Rule to show cause why the order of the District Judge of Darbhanga should not be set aside on the ground that the appeal to that Court from the order of the First Munsif of Darbhanga was incompetent and the order in question was consequently made without jurisdiction.

Babu Shorashi Charan Mitra, for the Petitioner.

Babu Buldeo Narain Singh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made by the Court of appeal below on the ground that the appeal to that Court was incompetent, and the order in question was consequently made without jurisdiction.

It appears that the petitioner obtained a decree for rent on the 30th November 1908. The claim was under Rs. 50 in value and the Munsif who tried the suit was invested with final jurisdiction under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An appeal was preferred against that decree notwithstanding these circumstances, and was apparently heard without objection. The appeal was allowed in part and the decree of primary Court was varied in favour of the appellant on the 22nd February 1910. In execution of that decree, the holding was sold on the 20th June following and was purchased by the decree-holder. On the 16th July 1910, the judgment-debtor brought into Court a sum adequate in his estimation for the reversal of the sale under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Objection was taken to the sufficiency of this sum and was upheld by the Court as the poundage fee had not been deposited. The result was that the application under section 174 was refused and the sale was confirmed on the 15th August 1910. This order was made by a Munsif who was invested with final jurisdiction under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The judgment-debtor then preferred an appeal to the District Judge. An objection was taken, on behalf of the decree-holder auction-purchaser respondent, to the competency of the appeal but was overruled. The learned Judge then heard the appeal on the merits and allowed it. He held that the judgment-debtor was not bound to deposit the poundage-fee, as under the rules of this Court, the decree-holder upon reversal of the sale would be entitled to a refund of all the sums he had deposited on that account. The District Judge accordingly reversed the sale. We are invited to set aside this order on the ground that the appeal to the Judge was incompetent.

In answer to the Rule, it has been contended, first, that the appeal was competent, secondly, that, as laid down in Kishori Mohun v. Saradamani Dasi (1), this Court ought not to interfere because the order which has been made by the District Judge is right on the merits and should not be disturbed; and thirdly, that as the decree under execution was made without jurisdiction, the sale is a nullity and the reversal of such a sale does not operate to the prejudice of the auction-purchaser.

In so far as the question of competency of the appeal is concerned, we are of opinion that the view taken by the District Judge is well founded. It has not been disputed that an order of this desciption made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is ordinarily appealable as explained by this Court in Sital Rai v. Nanda Lal (2), notwithstanding the contrary view taken in Kishori Mohun Roy v. Saradamani (1), which does not give effect to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (3). But it is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the appeal is barred by the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act because the Munsif who made the order was invested with final jurisdiction under that section. In answer to this argument, it is pointed out by the learned Vakil for the opposite party that the case falls within the principle recognised by a Full Bench of this Court in Kali Mondul v. Ram Sarbeswar Chakrabutty (4), where it was ruled that an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale held in execution of a rent-decree is an order which decides a question relating to title to land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. The learned Vakil for the petitioner, however, argues that the effect of the decision of the Full Bench has been competely nullified by the explanation subsequently added to section 153. No doubt, as pointed in the case of Sheo Parsan Rai v. Bishun Pargash Narain (5), the effect of the explanation is to restrict considerably the effect of the decision of the Full Bench. But we are unable to uphold the contention that the decision of the Full Bench has been practically superseded by the explanation. The explanation provides that a question as to the regularity of the proceedings in publishing or conducting a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent is not a question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. In the case before us, no question arises as to the regularity of the proceedings in publishing or conducting the sale. The question raised is, whether the judgment-debtor has complied with the requirements of section 174 for reversal of the sale. We are, therefore, of opinion that the case is not covered by the explanation and that the rule laid down in Kali Mondul v. Ram Sarbeswar Chakrabutty (4) governs the matter. We are consequently of opinion that the appeal to the Judge was competent.

In this view, it becomes unnecessary to consider whether the order of the Judge is right on the merits. But we may point out that his decision is in accordance with that of this Court in Raghubar Dayal v. Jadu Nandan Missir (6), and his conclusion cannot thus be successfully assailed by way of either revision or appeal.

In this view it is needless to consider the third ground urged by the learned Vakil for the opposite party; but we may add that we do not feel disposed to accept the soundness of the contention that it was open to the judgment-debtor to challenge

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 776 OF 1911.

GHISSA LAL—APPELLANT

versus

RAM AUTAR LAL—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 167—Suit for possession against usufructuary mortgagee—Ex-proprietary tenancy—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court.

As the question whether a person lawfully in possession of land as a mortgagee must give up possession to his mortgagor when the latter becomes entitled to ex-proprietary rights in the land, i.e., becomes ex-proprietary tenant of the land, is not a question reserved exclusively for the Revenue Courts, section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act does not apply.

Maharaja of Vizianagram v. Chhango Kurmi, 7 A. L. 555, 6 Ind. Cas. 834, referred to.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge of Gorakhpur.

Mr. A. H. C. Hamilton, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jang Bahadur Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant was the owner of a 3-pies share in a village and, as such, was in possession of several plots of sir or khudkasht. Long before the passing of the Agra Tenancy Act, the appellant gave the respondent two usufructuary mortgages of the sir and khudkasht lands and placed him in possession. After that, the appellant gave the respondent a simple mortgage of the whole share. The respondent sued upon the simple mortgage and obtained a decree in execution of which he purchased the share himself. At the auction, the usufructuary mortgages were proclaimed as encumbrances upon the property. Shortly after the sale, the appellant sued the respondent for possession of the sir and khudkasht lands under section 79 of the Tenancy Act. The first Court threw the case out as barred by limitation because the respondent had been in undisturbed possession of the plots as mortgagee for many years. On appeal, the Commissioner held that the suit was not barred by limitition and he gave the appellant a decree for possession of the land holding apparently that the appellant as ex-proprietary tenant was entitled to possession as against his mortgagee. In another proceeding, the rent payable by appellant as ex-proprietary tenant was determined. The respondent then brought this suit. It was resisted on the ground that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. The Munsif overruled this defence and decreed the claim. On appeal, the Additional Judge set aside the decree for possession and gave the respondent a money-decree. In this Court appellant contends that the suit should be dismissed altogether, and the respondent who has filed cross-objections contends that the decree of the first Court was right.

The respondent as usufructuary mortgagee is not entitled to a money-decree. The question is whether he is entitled to a decree for possession. The appellant relies upon the decision in the case of Maharaja of Vizianagram v. Chhango Kurmi (1), but it appears to me that that case has no bearing whatever upon the present case. There a fixed rate tenant had mortgaged his land to the defendant's ancestor. On the death of the tenant, the zemindar brought a suit in a Revenue Court against the defendant which is described in the judgment as a suit under section 95 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The Revenue Court decided that the defendant was a fixed-rate tenant and was not liable to be ejected. The zemindar then brought a suit in a Civil Court for redemption of the mortgage alleging that the defendant was mortgagee of the land. It was held that it was not open to the Civil Court to hold that the defendant was in possession as a mortgagee. There, it will be observed, the Revenue Court, at the instance of the plaintiff, who at the time admitted that the defendant was his tenant, had inquired into the nature of the defendant's tenancy and had decided that the defendant was a fixed-rate tenant. The question was one reserved exclusively for the Revenue Courts.

(1) 7 A. L. J. 555; 6 Ind. Cas. 834.

RAHMATUL FATIMA v. ASHRAF ALI.

Here the question decided by the Revenue Court was, whether a person lawfully in possession of land as mortgagee must give up possession to his mortgagor when the latter becomes entitled to ex-proprietary rights in the land, i.e., becomes ex-proprietary tenant of the land. That is not a question reserved exclusively for the Revenue Courts; therefore, section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act does not apply. It was contended that all questions arising between a landlord and his tenant relating to the land are reserved exclusively for the Revenue Courts. Section 167 does not so provide, nor, so far as I am aware, has such a rule of law been laid down in any case.

In my opinion, the Civil Court has jurisdiction to try this suit.

On the merits, there is no doubt that the respondent is entitled to possession of the land. The mortgage when made was lawful and did not become unlawful by reason of the passing of the Agra Tenancy Act. The appellant cannot be permitted to hold possession as against his own mortgagee.

For the above reasons, I dismiss the appeal with costs. I allow the respondent's objection and restore the decree of the first Court with costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (V of 1908), ss. 4, 31(1)—"Prescribed" meaning of, in s. 4—General Clauses Act (IX of 1897), s. 10.

Where a suit, to which the two years' period of grace provided for by section 31 (1) was applicable, was instituted on the 8th August 1910, the 7th August 1910 being a Sunday, the suit was not barred by limitation.

Although in such a case the limitation would not be saved under section 4 of the Limitation Act, yet it would be so under the provisions of section 10 of the General Clauses Act.

Sheo Dass v. Narain Asoji, 13 Bom. L. R. 1153, 12 Ind. Cas. 811; 36 B. 268, not followed.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated 26th August 1911, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, dated 4th April 1911.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts, so far as it is necessary to state them, are set out in the order of the 12th March 1912, by which this case was referred for disposal to a Bench.

The point of law for determination is whether a mortgage suit, to which the provisions of section 31, sub-section (1), of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) apply and which was instituted on the 8th August 1910, is or is not barred by limitation. The sub-section just mentioned lays down that in certain territories mentioned in the second Schedule to the Act, a suit for foreclosure or a suit for sale by a mortgagee may be instituted within two years from the date of the passing of this Act or within sixty years from the date when the money secured by the mortgage became due, whichever period expires first.

Section 31 came into force on the 7th August 1908 and consequently the last day of the two years' period provided by section 31 (1) expired on the 7th August 1910, which was a Sunday.

The suit, with which we are here concerned, is one to which the two years' rule applied, and was, as already said, filed on Monday, the 8th August 1910.

The first Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. The lower Appellate Court reversed this order and held that limitation was saved by the provisions of sections 4 and 12 of the Limitation Act.

For the appellants, the contention is that the suit is barred and reliance has been placed upon two rulings of the Bombay High Court reported as Dayaram Parashram v. Laxman Runja(1); Sheo Dass v. Narain Asoji (2) respectively. Since the date of the referring order in this case, a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Hira Singh v. Amarti (3) has been reported which supports the case for the respondents that the suit is not barred.

According to the view of the High Court of Bombay, the special statutory provisions of section 4 of the Limitation Act and of section 10 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) do not apply to cases governed by section 31 (1) of the Limitation Act. According to the Allahabad view they do. If the decision of the question now before us turned solely upon the point whether or not section 4 of the Limitation Act applies to cases covered by section 31 (1) of the same Act, we should have no difficulty in accepting the Bombay view as being a correct interpretation of the law, for we are satisfied that the expression "prescribed" which is found in section 4 must be construed as meaning "prescribed by the first Schedule"—the words which are to be found in section 3.

As the provisions of section 3 are declared to be subject to the provisions of section 4 (and other sections), it appears to us that the two sections must be read together and that the term "prescribed" as used in the latter section cannot be construed in any wider sense than that in which it is used in section 3, that is to say, "prescribed by the first schedule". The special rule of limitation laid down for suits covered by section 31 (1) is not prescribed by the Schedule.

There remains, however, the question whether section 10 of the General Clauses Act can be called in aid to save limitation in cases where section 31 (1) of the Limitation Act applies: and after a careful consideration of the various rulings and of the arguments addressed to us, we have come to the conclusion that it can.

Section 10 will clearly apply unless it can be shown that the case before us falls within the purview of the proviso to that section.

In this connection, regard must be had, in the first place, to the language of section 1 of the present Limitation Act and, in the next place, to the wording of section 31, sub-section (1) itself. In section 1 it was declared that section 31 was to come into force at once, that is, with effect from the 7th August 1908 when the Act was passed. Section 1 also came into force on the same date. The rest of the Act did not become law till the 1st of January 1909. Turning now to the language of section 31, sub-section (1), we find that the provisions of that sub-section are to take effect "notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in the Indian Limitation Act, 1877". So long, therefore, as the Limitation Act of 1877 and section 31, sub-section (1), of the new Act were in force together, that is to say, for the period between the 7th August 1908 and the 1st January 1909, it seems clear that the provisions of section 31, sub-section (1) were not affected by the former Act. Since the repeal of the Act of 1877, that is, since the 1st of January 1909, the provisions of section 31 (1) were not touched by the other provisions of the present Limitation Act up till the time section 31 became spent.

Can it be said, therefore, that the filing of a suit under section 31 (1) of the new Act was an act or proceeding to which the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applied? Obviously not: for as has just been shown, that Act while it lasted never applied to proceedings under section 31 (1).

How then is it argued that the proviso to section 10 of the General Clauses Act operates to exclude the present case from the application of the section itself? The argument as stated is that because the Act of 1877 has been repealed, the proviso to section 10 of the General Clauses Act must now be read as referring to the new Limitation Act of 1908, and the terms of section 8 of the General Clauses Act are referred to as justifying this method of interpretation.

But section 8 when carefully construed does not appear to lay down any rule for the interpretation of the General Clauses Act itself in cases where there is a repeal and a re-enactment with or without modification. What section 8 appears to say is this, namely, that when a repeal and re-enactment has resulted from the passing of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) or from the passing of any subsequent Act or Regulation, then references "in any other enactment" or in any instrument to the provision so repealed shall, unless a different intention appears, be construed as references to the provision so re-enacted. It seems obvious that the words "any other enactment" must exclude the General Clauses Act itself and any subsequent Act or Regulation which repeals and re-enacts.

(3) 9 A. L. J. 439; 14 Ind. Cas. 154.

In re MR. NISITH CHANDRA SEN.

If we were to read the proviso to section 10 of the General Clauses Act as containing a reference to the Limitation Act of 1908, we should be construing a reference to the former Act contained not "in any other enactment" but in a section of the General Clauses Act itself.

We are unable, therefore, to yield to the argument that the repeal of the Limitation Act of 1877 necessitates a new interpretation of the proviso to section 10 of the General Clauses Act in the sense contended for by the appellant's learned Counsel.

This view of the matter has not been referred to in the Allahabad ruling above cited. But in any case we should agree with the opinion of Chamier, J. that section 31 of the Limitation Act of 1908, being an entirely new provision, cannot be regarded as a re-enactment with or without modification of any provision contained in the Act of 1877 and this being so, section 8 of the General Clauses Act would not apply.

Had section 31 been enacted not as a portion of the present Limitation Act but as a separate Act, as it well might have been, there could have been no room for the argument that a case to which it applied fell within the proviso to section 10 of the General Clauses Act.

We are of opinion, therefore, that we should follow the Allahabad ruling to the extent of holding that section 10 of the General Clauses Act does apply to cases governed by section 31 (1) of the present Limitation Act and for this reason we hold that the suit filed by the plaintiffs-respondents in this case was instituted within limitation.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM THE ORIGINAL CIVIL SIDE.

February 29, 1912.

Present:—Sir Lawrence Jenkins, KT, K. C., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

In re MR. NISITH CHANDRA SEN.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899), s. 38, Sch. IV, rr. 4(4),9, 10 sub-r. (9)—Whether stranger can represent body corporate, joint Hindu family or firm to be entered on the list of voters—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—High Court's power to issue mandamus on public officer.

Rules 9 and 10, sub-rule (9), of Schedule IV of the Calcutta Municipal Act, taken together, merely authorise a person, who is a member of an association, etc., to be entered on the list of voters.

Therefore, a person foreign to the body corporate, joint Hindu family or firm, as the case may be, cannot be authorised by such corporation, etc., to represent them.

Appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Fletcher.

The judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher dated February 27th, 1912, was as follows:—

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule issued under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act calling on the Chairman of the Corportation of Calcutta to show cause why he should not prepare and publish the revised list of voters for Ward No. 22 under Rule 10 of Schedule IV of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, by rejecting the application filed by Priya Nath Mullick, a candidate for election as a Comissioner for the said Ward No. 22 on the 1st day of January 1912, and why he should not pay the costs of this application. Cause has been shown by the Chairman of the Corporation and by Priya Nath Mullick. The point which I have to decide is a short one, but it is not easy to determine. The point has only to do with a Hindu joint family. (Mr. Chakravarti interposes: It is not confined to joint families, but relates also to associations). However that may be, the case has really been argued on the footing of a Hindu joiut family, but the real point is on the construction of rule 9 of Schedule IV of the Calcutta Municipal Act as amended, whether in the case of a company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family or other association of individuals whose name has been entered in the list, the "one individual person" duly authorised in this behalf by such company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family or association, to apply to have his name entered in the list as the person qualified to vote or to be elected in behalf of such company, body corporate, firm, Hiudu joint family or association, must be a member of the association, or otherwise. It is said that Priya Nath Mullick has obtained a large number of votes under that rule. The sole question is whether the Chairman is authorised to place Priya Nath Mullick on the list of electors under that rule in respect of all these votes. In most of the sections of the Act and the Schedule thereto, the language is difficult to construe. The rule in question runs:

"If the name of a Company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family or other association of individuals has been entered in the list, any one individual person duly authorised in this behalf by such company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family or association may, by written notice sent to the Chairman, on or before the said first day of January, apply that his name be entered in the list as the person qualified to vote or to be elected in behalf of such company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family or association."

The other rule that applies is rule 10, sub-rule 9 which runs,—

"If no individual person has applied to the Chairman under rule 9 to have his name entered in the list in behalf of a company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family, or other association of individuals, the Chairman may determine what individual person shall be entitled to represent such Company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family, or association, and shall enter his name in the list as the person qualified to vote or to be elected in behalf of such company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family, or association."

These are the two rules which are material and it really turns on what meaning is to be attached to the word "individual." On the one side the agrument on behalf of the Chairman and Priya Nath Mullick is that "individual" means "single;" on the other side, the argument is that "individual" indicates that the person belongs to the "association, etc."

It has been pointed out by Mr. Mitter that if "individual" means "single", then the word "one" is unnecessary in the drafting and that the words "one," "individual person" and "one individual person" all have the same meaning.

The matter is of considerable difficulty, more especially having regard to the proviso of section 38, but I come to the conclusion that the two rules taken together only authorise a person, a member of the association, etc. to be entered on the list of voters. It seems to me that if you take rule 10, sub rule 9, to mean that the Chairman has statutory power to put in the list any man he may meet in the street in respect of a Hindu joint family who has not claimed but who has not authorised any individual to be placed on the register, such a proposition would require extraordinarily strong words in the statute. The matter is of considerable doubt, but the meaning of "individual" as a person belonging to a class is one of the ordinary natural meanings of the word, and, I think, that when we take the rule which mentions "associations of individual" and in which then follows the expression "any one individual person", the rule although unscientific in drafting must be read as intending by the words "any one individual person" to refer to a member of the association, etc. As regards "company and body corporate", the case may be more difficult. I cannot think, however, that the statute ever intended to authorise the Chairman to place on the list of voters as a person qualified to vote or to be elected an 'individual' who had no connection with the association he was to represent and who had not even heard of the association or family. I think, as I have already said, the matter is one of considerable doubt, but, having heard the matter yesterday and to-day, I have come to the conclusion that unless you can find clear words in the statute which would authorise the Chairman under rule 10 (9) to place any person he thought fit on the register as representing a Hindu joint family, then rule 9 must bear a corresponding meaning, that is, that the "individual" has got to be a member of the family association, etc.

In my opinion, that is the only reasonable construction to be put on the rules, though the language of these rules is, as I have already said, exceedingly obscure.

The other question which has been raised is as regards section 50 of the Act which provides that no person shall give more than eleven votes in any one Ward. That I don't think can be gone into on the present application. This application relates to the electoral roll. As to how many votes a person who gets on the electoral roll is entitled to give at any particular election is not now necessary to decide. Whether that person can vote in different Wards or in the same Ward for more than eleven votes under different qualifications obviously is a matter to be decided by the returning officer, if the question arises. It seems to me, after giving the best consideratian I can to the matter, that the statute did not intend in the case of a Hindu joint family or other association, that one gentleman should get hundreds, or perhaps of thousands, of votes in any one Ward, but it was intended by the statute that a member of a Hindu joint family or association might be placed on the electoral roll as representing the association or family, and if that was not done a further provision was given by Schedule V authorising a company or firm to vote by power-of-attorney which might be given in favour of a person who is either a member of the family, or association or not. It seems to me that in this case, the Rule ought to be made absolute, and I make it also absolute, with costs.

From the above judgment, Babu Priya Nath Mullick appealed.

Messrs. B. Chakravarti and C. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—Mr. Nisith Chunder Sen, a candidate for election as a Commissioner for Ward No. 22 at the coming Calcutta Municipal election, obtained a Rule calling on the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta to show cause why he should not prepare and publish the revised list of voters for Ward No. 22 under rule 10 of Schedule IV of the Calcutta Municipal Act by rejecting the application filed by Babu Priya Nath Mullick, a candidate for election as a Commissioner for Ward No. 22 on the 1st January 1912.

It was ordered that a copy of the order be served on Babu Priya Nath Mullick, but no Rule was in express terms issued against him.

The application made by Babu Priya Nath Mullick was that his name be entered in the list as the person qualified to vote on behalf of a large number of companies, firms, and Hindu families.

The Rule was heard by Mr. Justice Fletcher, who made it absolute with costs.

From this order, Babu Priya Nath Mullick alone has appealed. The Chairman of the Corporation has not appealed, nor has his Counsel addressed the Court in support of the appeal or complained of the order made by Mr. Justice Fletcher.

It is objected by the respondent at the outset that Babu Priya Nath Mullick has no right to appeal, as the order was not against him, but against the Chairman of the Corporation.

But it is further urged that whether an appeal lies or not, the order of Mr. Justice Fletcher was correct, and it is on this, that an expression of our opinion has been specially invited.

The proposition for which Mr. Nisith Sen contends is formulated in paragraph 5 (a) of his petition in these terms: "That the said Priya Nath Mullick being a person, foreign to the body corporate, joint Hindu family or firm as the case may be, could not be authorised by such corporations, Hindu joint family or firm to represent such corporation, Hindu joint family or firms, inasmuch as such authorisation contravenes the provision of rule 9 of Schedule IV of the Calcutta Municipal Act."

He further urges that if Babu Priya Nath Mullick's application be upheld, he will be considerably prejudiced at the ensuing Municipal election.

Nor can there be any doubt as to this, for if Babu Priya Nath Mullick's contention be upheld, then he will, according to his contention, be armed with no less than 571 votes which he will be entitled to use in favour of his own candidature at the coming election. This, if the true view, is a concentration of voting power in one person which it is impossible to regard with favour, and it is difficult to suppose that the framers of the Act and the rules under the Act could have intended such a result.

But do the rules on their true construction support Babu Priya Nath Mullick's contention? Mr. Justice Fletcher has held, not, and I see no sufficient reason for dissenting from this view.

The governing rule is the 9th of those in Schedule IV to the Act, and I think it may fairly be said that the expression "any one individual person" there found should be read together with, and controlled by the expression "association of individuals" which immediately precedes it.

So read, the field of selection for representation would be limited to those individuals of which the several associations there indicated are composed.

This view of the rule would account for the somewhat unusual expression "any one individual person," which would have been unnecessary had the words borne the unlimited significance for which Babu Priya Nath Mullick contends.

It, moreover, gains support from other portions of the rules, and at any rate, provides a safeguard against that plurality of votes claimed by Babu Priya Nath Mullick.

In the view I take, it is unnecessary to pronounce any opinion on the competence of the appeal, for in any case it must fail; the costs to be paid by the appellant.

WOODROFFE, J.—The point appears to me to be clear, though doubtless it might have been rendered more so by the insertion of the word "members" as has been done in rule 4 (4) in which case the question before us would not have arisen. The question turns upon the meaning of the words "any one individual person" in rule 9. The words "any person" would have satisfied the construction for which the appellant contends unless, as it is also urged on his behalf, the words "an individual" were necessary to exclude the juristic or artificial persons included in the term "person" by rule 1. Under that rule, the word "person" includes a company, body corporate, firm, Hindu joint family and other association of individuals. I stop here to point out in connection with the words "other association of individuals" that throughout the rules, companies, bodies corporate, etc., are, whether they be correctly defined as such, or not, treated as associations of individuals. And the marginal note of rule 9 under discussion runs "representation of association of individuals." As the word "individual" is used in the rules correlatively with association, it appears to me to be a strong argument against the appellant that the words "one individual" should appear in rule 9 unless it can be shown that they were necessary to exclude the wider meaning assinged to the term 'person' by rule 1. Under that rule, however, "person" only includes a juristic person if there be no repugnancy in the context. The words "one individual" were clearly not necessary to exclude juristic persons. In the first place, if there were nothing else, one company or body corporate cannot vote for another. Further, we find the words "any one individual person" may "apply that his name be entered", wording which is obviously inapt if the person previously spoken of includes bodies corporate. Further, the application is that the name be entered not only as the person qualified to vote but also to be elected, a circumstance which goes to show that the person spoken of is a member of the association to be represented. In my opinion, therefore, the words "one indvidual" were not necessary to exclude juristic person under rule 1 and are, therefore, surplusage unless some other force be given to them. They were, in my opinion, used to show that the person who was competent as a representative was a person who was an individual or member of the association to be represented. It has been said that difficulties might arise on this construction with reference to companies and bodies corporate. It is not necessary to decide that case, but dealing with the argument before us, I do not see that creates a difficulty. For the members of a company would be its shareholders and of a corporate body such persons as are defined as such by the Act or Statute incorporating it. Further, I consider it to be a strong argument against the appellant's contention that the term 'individual' in rule 9 and in rule 10 (9) must be read in the same sense, and, if so, the incongruous results follow which are indicated in Fletcher, J.'s judgment. Lastly, it is of great weight against the appellant's construction that it is contrary to public policy and detrimental to the public interest. It is not in conformity with such interest that persons should give their votes without reason to some stranger before even the nomination of candidates and that such candidate should go to the poll with a large number (in this case nearly 600) of votes in his pocket to be cast by him in favour of his own candidature. I reserve my opinion on the question of the right of appeal as it is not necessary to deal with the point. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 36 OF 1910.

April 25, 1912.

Present:—Sir Arnold White, KT., Chief Justice, and Sir Ralph Benson, Judge, and Mr. Justice Wallis.

M. CHENGIAH—APPELLANT

UMADAI RAJAH RAJA DAMARA KUMARA THIMMA NAYANIM BAHADUR AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 111, 112, 116—Lease—Forfeiture condition—Election by landlord to avail himself of forfeiture, whether revocable—Subsequent agreement to revive the tenancy—Lessee again put in possession—Compensation for use and occupation.

Where, under the terms of a lease, a right of forfeiture accrues to the lessor, he is put to his election, and, if he manifests and communicates to the lessee his intention to enforce the forfeiture, that is an election to determine the tenancy, the election is irrevocable and the parties cannot, by a subsequent agreement, revive the old tenancy.

Similarly, if he elects not to enforce the forfeiture and manifests and communicates to the lessee his intention accordingly, that is, elects to waive the forfeiture, his election is irrevocable.

If lessees are re-admitted, after the determination of tenancy by exercise of the right of forfeiture, the old tenancy is not revived and the lessees are liable to pay compensation for use and occupation.

Appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, against the decree and judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim in Appeal No. 203 of 1905, dated 10th March 1910 (O. S. No. 13 of 1903), on the file of the District Court of North Arcot.

The facts of the case are clear from the following judgments of Munro and Abdur Rahim, JJ., when the case was first heard on appeal:—

MUNRO, J.—The first question with which I propose to deal is whether, as contended by the appellant (2nd defendant) and by the 1st defendant in his memorandum of objections, the leases of 1894 evidenced by Exhibits A and B were determined in 1897. Exhibit XXIX of the 26th September 1897 shows that the 1st defendant, in whose favour Exhibits A and B were executed, had fallen into arrears, and that the Tahsildar proposed to the Dewan that the leases should be cancelled for breach of the condition to pay the rent according to the kists. This was followed by Exhibit X, which is dated the 24th October 1897. This is from the Tahsildar to the 1st defendant and informs the latter that, as he had fallen into arrears and was raising unnecessary disputes, a hukum had been issued on the 22nd October 1897—this was a hukum issued by the Dewan as appears from Exhibit XI—cancelling his Izara in accordance with the last term in Exhibits A and B, and directing the villages comprised in the leases to be taken under estate management, and that takids have been written to the people of the villages informing them of these matters. The 1st defendant was, therefore, given to understand that he should not thereafter collect money or do anything else in the villages. The 1st defendant then appears to have asked the Dewan to re-consider the matter and the result appears in Exhibit XI, dated the 12th December 1897. This document which is from the Tahsildar to the 1st defendant refers to the cancellation of the Izara by the hukum of the 22nd October, and then goes on to say that as the 1st defendant had agreed to a certain arrangement, the Dewan had issued a fresh hukum, on the 10th December 1897 stating that "the Izara that had to continue according to the previous Izarakhat had again been sanctioned", and that takids had been written to the villagers accordingly. The only other document which need be referred to is Exhibit H, a petition sent by the 1st defendant to the Tahsildar, in which the 1st defendant says "the Dewan... ..... restored our Izara villages to us whose Izara had been cancelled". Coming to the oral evidence, we find the 1st defendant stating that leases were cancelled in Fasli 1307, that the cancellation was proclaimed in the villages by beat of tom-tom, and that the villages were under estate management for two months after the cancellation. He is supported by defence witness No. 4 who is Monegar of one of the villages; by defence witness No. 5, a chief ryot of the same village; by defence witness No. 6, Monegar of another of the villages who says that he received a takid to the effect that the Izara was cancelld and that he published by beat of tom-tom that kist should not be paid to the Izaradar; by defence witness No. 7, chief ryot of one of the villages; and by defence witness No. 8,

Kurnam of all the villages. The District Judge has dismissed all this oral evidence with the remark that it is interested. What the witnesses speak to is, however, highly probable, for it is only what would in ordinary course have happened. Exhibit X states that takids had been written to the people of the villages regarding the cancellation, and tom-toming is a usual way in this country of making such a matter generally known. Further, the evidence is entirely uncontradicted, and this although the plaintiff's witnesses were examined later. An attempt was also made to show that some rent was collected on behalf of the Rajah during the period between Exhibits X and XI. The evidence regarding this is not very satisfactory. But the collection of rent on behalf of the Rajah during that period is not essential for the purpose of showing that the leases were determined and it has not been suggested that anything was collected by the 1st defendant or by the 2nd defendant's father. On the evidence, I have no hesitation in holding that the leases were determined. Under section 111 (g) of Transfer of Property Act, a lease of immoveable property determines by forfeiture if there is a breach of a condition which entitles the lessor to re-enter and if the lessor does some act showing his intention to determine the lease and both these conditions are amply fulfilled in the present case. It is pointed out in the Zemindar of Vizianagaram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (1), that "according to the common law of the land which specially prevails in zemindaris and similar estates, the delivery of possession, when the owner transfers the estate or a portion thereof, by sale, gift, lease or otherwise, is by the issue of orders or notices to the kurnams and other village officers whose duty it is to collect rents from the persons in occupation of the land, and also, though not invariably, by a general proclamation addressed to the ryots and other persons in occupation of the land giving intimation of the transfer in question and requiring them to attorn and pay rents to the transferee." The same would apply mutatis mutandis to the case of a lessor taking possession after cancellation of a lease like those in suit and there can, therefore, in my opinion, be no doubt as to the intention of the lessor in this case. The District Judge is of opinion that "if there was cancellation and forfeiture, there was also a waiver of forfeiture as evidenced by Exhibit XI and the subsequent enjoyment by the lessees and payment of rent." Section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act deals with the question of waiver of forfeiture. It states that a forfeiture under section 111 (g) is waived by any act on the part of the lessor showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting, provided that the lessor is aware that the forfeiture has been incurred. That is to say, if the lessor is aware that an event has occurred which entitles him to determine the lease, he may show by his acts that he does not intend to take advantage of it. But if he has already taken advantage of it and determined the lease, section 112 can, in my opinion, have no application. The leases under Exhibits A and B having been cancelled, the suit as based on Exhibits A and B must fail. It is contended, however, for the plaintiff, relying on Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharja Parbhu Narain Singh (2), that he is entitled, at any rate, to recover compensation for use and occupation as the defendants were again let into possession under the circumstances already set out, and that the rent fixed in the leases is a fair basis for the amount to be decreed. To this it is replied that no such relief was asked for in the plaint, and that, therefore, it cannot be granted. Rachhea Singh v. Upendra Chandra Singh (3) is relied upon. That case follows Surendra Narain Singh v. Bhai Lal Thakur, (4) and Lukhee Kanto Dass Chowdhry v. Sumeeruddi Lusker, (5), and in all these cases the facts were very different from the facts in the present case. It was observed in Surendra Narain Singh v. Bhai Lal Thakur (4) that the suit, if tried as one for use and occupation, would raise issues of an entirely different character, and would necessitate a new trial of the case upon fresh evidence. The same remark is applicable in the case of Lukhee Kanto Das Chowdhury v. Sumeeruddi Lusker (5) and Rachhea Singh v. Upendra Chandra Singh (3). The facts in the present case raise no such obstacle. I would, therefore, follow Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharaja

CHENGIAH v. DAMARA KUMARA THIMMA.

Parbhu Narain Singh (2) and find that the plaintiff is entitled to compensation for use and occupation. The further question arises as to the period for which compensation can be granted. The limitation is three years under Article 115 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act, and this being so, the claim for use and occupation is barred save in respect faslis 1310 and 1311 which are the last two faslis for which claim is laid. The amount to be paid for use and occupation for faslis 1310 and 1311 has now to be determined. Under Exhibits A and B, money rent is fixed in. In addition to this, a road cess is to be paid and a certain quantity of straw delivered. The road cess claimed is calculated at the usual rate on the lease amount, and this, in my opinion, is correct. There are no claims for remission in faslis 1310 and 1311. The lease amount plus road cess and the value of the straw may, therefore, be taken as the reasonable amount, payable for each fasli for use and occupation. I do not think the plaintiff should be allowed interest prior to suit. The total demand shown in the schedule of account annexed to the plaint for faslis 1310 and 1311 may, therefore, be accepted as the amount for which the defendants are liable for those faslis. That schedule, however, shows that collections were made from the defendants for those faslis, and the defendants are, therefore, now liable for only the balances shown. These amount to Rs. 665-2-3, and for this amount, I would give the plaintiff a decree with interest at 6 per cent, per anuum from date of suit till payment. For the decree amount the defendants are jointly and severally liable as it is abundantly proved that each of them was interested in the occupation of every portion of the suit property. There will be proportionate costs throughout.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The suit in which this appeal arises was instituted on the 29th June 1903 by the zemindar of Kalahasti for recovery of Rs 8,057-8 2 as rent due under two Izara leases with respect to three villages, Adaram, Brahmanapalli and Kandalur, for faslis 1305 to 1311. The lease of Adaram and Brahmanapalli was granted on the 15th February 1894 and of the village of Kandalur on the 9th March 1894, both for a term of 9 years to the 1st defendant under registered cowle deeds; the 1st defendant executed corresponding muchilikas in the zemindar's favour. The 2nd defendant was impleaded on the 7th October 1903 as respresentative of his father who, in February 1898, by an arrangement entered into between him and the 1st defendant and sanctioned by the plaintiff, was let into possession of the three villages. The suit was contested by the defendants on various grounds but the District Judge, having regard to his findings on the different issues raised at the trial, has given a decree to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 5,305-12-3 to be recovered from the 1st defendant and for Rs. 4,242-15-11 out of the above sum to be recovered from the 2nd defendant thus holding both the defendants to be jointly and severally liable in respect of the latter sum. The decree also provides for the usual interest to be paid on the amount decreed and directs each party to pay costs to the other in proportion to the claim allowed or disallowed.

This appeal has been preferred by the 2nd defendant, and the 1st defendant has also filed a memorandum of objections. Some of the objections taken to the judgment of the District Judge are common to both the defendants.

One of the questions discussed before us is the effect of the arrangement by which the 2nd defendant's father entered into possession of the three villages. The fact that he had such possession since the 7th February 1895 has not been contested before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant. What is contended for is that there has been surrender of a moiety of the 1st defendant's interest in the leases by operation of law by reason of what happened between the parties, and, thus the leases were determined so far at least as one moiety of the villages is concerned. What then was the nature of the transaction by which the 2nd defendant was let into possession? The most reliable evidence on this point is furnished by Exhibits C, I and XXXV and the conduct of the parties. These documents show that the 2nd defendant's father had arranged with the 1st defendant that the former should have a half share in the Izara leases and this arrangement was submitted to the zemindar for sanction which apparently became necessary as the leases contained a clause prohibiting assignment. The arrangement was approved by the zemindar apparently because the 1st defendant as stated in Exhibit C was unable to bear the whole burden of the rent and takids were accordingly issued to the zemindary officials, informing them that the 2nd defendant's father had been recognised as having a half share in the Izara leases granted to the 1st defendant. But there is nothing to show that it was ever intended to divide the tenancy into two halves and I do not attach any weight to the evidence of the 1st defendant where he seeks to make out such a case. Neither the leases nor possession of the villages was delivered by the 1st defendant to the landlord, and no new lease was taken. The 1st defendant himself and not the zemindar let the 2nd defendant's father into possession and the zemindar never granted any lease to the 2nd defendant. The zemindar was no party to any change of possession with respect to the demised premises and he throughout treated the 1st defendant as liable for the entire rent and the 1st defendant himself never disputed such liability. Demands for rent were issued to the 1st defendant alone and not to the 2nd defendant. It is true that some instalments of rent were remitted to the zemindar's office by the 2nd defendant but such payment, it is contended by the respondent, is attributable to the arrangement by which the 2nd defendant became an assignee of the lease-hold interest and is in no way incompatible with the liability of the 1st defendant under the demise. On these facts, therefore, the proposition which must be established in order to make out a case of implied surrender or surrender by act and operation of law, in the language of English cases, is that, if a landlord accepts any payment of rent from a person who acquired an interest in the lease under an agreement with the tenant who let him into possession with the assent of the landlord, this by itself operates as surrender of the lease. I do not think that the cases cited by Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar bear out any such proposition. The doctrine of surrender by act and operation of law, as established by Thomas v. Cook (6) and recognised in other cases, is as stated in Davison v. Gent (7), that where a lessee assents to a lease being granted to another and gives up his own possession to the new lessee, that is a surrender of his term by act and operation of law. In Hamerton v. Stead (8), the landlord, defendant in the action which was one for trespass, had demised the premises in question to the plaintiff as tenant from year to year and thereafter agreed to let the same premises to the plaintiff and one Moore jointly and the latter entered and occupied jointly with the plaintiff under the agreement; held that the suit could not be maintained as that was a new contract determining the sole tenancy of the plaintiff and creating a new joint tenancy by the plaintiff and Moore. In Laurence v. Faux (9), Laurence, having entered into agreement with the defendant Robert Faux, to let certain premises to him afterwards agreed, and with the consent of Robert Faux, to let a portion of the same premises to Edward Faux and accepted rent from the latter. Blackburn, J., held that in these circumstances the receipts for rents received from Edward Faux were strong evidence of a change of tenancy with the consent of the landlord amounting to a surrender by operation of law. The law on this subject was again recently considered by Chitty, J., in Wallis v. Hands (10). There a new lease in possession was granted to a third person with the oral assent merely of a person in possession under a prior subsisting lease, but the old tenant did not give up possession to the new tenant at the time of the grant of the new lease: it was held that there was no surrender by operation of law so as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. It will be seen then that in all the cases relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellant, there was either a lease granted by the landlord to the new tenant or a valid agreement to grant such lease, so that there was an acceptance on the part of landlord of a change in the tenancy. But in the present case it was not within the contemplation of the parties that the 2nd defendant should become a tenant of the plaintiff in place of the 1st defendant. Further, so far as the 2nd defendant is concerned, it is difficult to appreciate his position with reference to the question of implied surrender. If there was an implied surrender at all, it must be by the substitution of a new tenancy for the old. But the 2nd defendant's case is that no relation of tenant and landlord has been created between him and the plaintiff. It may also be pointed out that neither the issues nor the memorandum of appeal or objections raised any question of implied surrender and apparently no such plea was urged before the District Judge. In my opinion, however, upon the facts which have been proved, there was no surrender, either express or implied. Even if there was no surrender, the defendants undoubtedly remained in possession afterwards and section 116 would, in my opinion, be a sufficient answer to an attempt on their part to escape liability for rent under the covenants in the leases. In the circumstances of this case, I attach no importance to the beating of tom-tom in the village and I do not think that by what happened on the occasion there was an eviction of the defendants. In this view of the transaction, it is not necessary to consider the question raised by the respondent whether there can be surrender, by operation of law, of an undivided share of a lease-hold term.

The next point for consideration is whether the 2nd defendant is liable as assignee of a moiety of the 1st defendant's lease-hold interest in the absence of a registered deed of assignment. Section 9 of the Transfer of Property Act clearly lays down that a transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by the law. The onus is, therefore, upon the appellant to make out in the first place that the transaction by which the 2nd defendant acquired an interest in the leases is required by the law to be in writing. The view which I am inclined to take of the arrangement between the two defendants, is, as disclosed in the evidence, that they intended to enter into contract of partnership with respect to the Izara leases, each party taking half of the profits and sharing half of the burden. We find that the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant's father are actually spoken of as partners; for instance, in Exhibit D, which is a power-of-attorney executed by the 2nd defendant's father, it is recited "as regards the rental of three villages, Brahmanapalli, Adaram and Kandalur, jointly had with our partner Chintalapalli Venkata Narasiah (i. e., the 1st defendant), etc." Such a contract is not one of those transactions which must be embodied in a registered instrument and as the 2nd defendant entered into possession and enjoyment of the villages as partner of the 1st defendant, he would certainly be liable for rent to the plaintiff.

Then it is contended that Exhibits C and I not being registered should not have been accepted in evidence. But the agreement between the 1st and the 2nd defendants was independent of these documents. They only recite the arrangement which had already been arrived at.

It is also argued on behalf of the appellant that the endorsement on Exhibit C and Exhibit I, by which the landlord waived his objection to the assignment, is required, by section 17 of the Registration Act, to be registered. But I fail to see how such an endorsement can be said to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any interest in, or right to, immoveable property. The prohibition against transfer of the Izara was intended for the benefit of the lessor and all that the latter purported to do was to give his assent to the transfer when made by the 1st defendant.

Such an act can hardly be said to be creation of an interest in immoveable property within the meaning of the action. The cases which lay down that a transaction purporting to be a sale of immoveable property and evidenced by a registered deed as required by the law cannot be proved to have been intended to operate only as a mortgage by adducing evidence contained in unregistered writings: [See Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju (11) and Mutha Venkatachalapati v. Pyanda Venkatachalapati (12)], or that an unregistered document cannot be admitted in evidence to affect mortgaged property by fettering the equity of redemption, have no bearing, in my opinion, on the present question.

The next question is whether there was a determination of the leases by forfeiture in October 1897. What happened then was: the rent fell into arrears and according to the power reserved in the leases, the lessor sent a notice to the 1st defendant (Exhibit X) stating that he cancelled the Izara and that the villages would henceforth be managed under (11) 25 M. 7; 11 M. L. J. 370.

(12) 27 M. 348.

Amani. And it also appears from the evidence that this fact was proclamied in the villages by beat of tom-tom and takids were issued to the zemindari officials informing them of the cancellation of the leases.

An attempt was further made to prove that a sum of Rs. 30 was collected from the ryots by the zemindar himself after the issue of Exhibit X, but I do not think that this has been satisfactorily proved. The man who actually collected the amount has not been examined and it has not been shown that the sum was remitted to the zemindar's office. On the other hand, although the zemindar determined to put an end to the lease, the 1st defendant never acquiesced in the act of the zemindar but prayed for 'continuance of the Izara according to mamool.' And the zemindar acceded to this prayer and issued a fresh order on the 12th December 1897 to the effect that 'the Izara would continue'. The lessees continued in possession of the villages and as the District Judge holds there is no reliable evidence to show that between the 24th October and the 12th December, an interval of a month and a half, the defendants' connection with the villages ceased for any practical purpose or that the plaintiff assumed direct management of them. Upon these facts I have no hesitation in accepting his conclusion that the lease was never determined. There was no cessation of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties though there might have been a temporary suspension of such relations. The leases were never delivered to the landlord and there was no actual change of possession. I am further unable to accede to the view that the landlord having once declared his intention to exercise the right of forfeiture and communicated that intention to the lessee and to his own servants and the ryots, he could not, if he so chose, waive the forfeiture, in response to the protests or representations of the lessee. I do not find anything in sections 111 and 112 of the Transfer of Property Act which oblige me to adopt such a narrow construction of the law. It is, no doubt, not a necessary condition of the validity of an act of forfeiture that it should have the consent of the tenant, but, at the same time, since forfeiture necessarily alters the position of the tenant, the question whether the tenant has or has not acquiesced in it must affect the landlord's right to waive forfeiture. If the landlord has elected to take advantage of the condition relating to forfeiture and communicated his intention to the tenant and the tenant acquiesces in it, it stands to reason that the landlord cannot afterwards treat the tenancy as still subsisting. To this effect is the decision in the case of Serjeant v. Nash Field & Co. (13), and in other similar cases cited by the appellant's Pleader. But, on the other hand, if the tenant never acquiesced in the landlord's act, and the landlord afterwards changes his mind at the request of the tenant himself, I do not see why he should not be able to waive the forfeiture so long as the question is one exclusively between him and the tenant. I would hold, therefore, that there was no determination of the leases by forfeiture.

I now come to the question of limitation. It is argued that the proper Article applicable to this suit is Article 110, which provides 3 years for a suit for arrears of rent, and not Article 116, which allows 6 years for a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered. Article 110, it is argued, is specifically applicable to a suit like this, and therefore, recourse cannot be had to a general Article like Article 116. A recent decision of the Allahabad High Court of Ram Narain v. Kamta Singh (14), no doubt, supports this view. But this Court has held a different view in Vythilinga Pillai v. Thetchanamurti Pillai (15), and this is the view also of the Calcutta High Court [see Umesh Chunder Mundul v. Adarmoni Dasi (16)], and I am not persuaded that it is wrong. Article 110 is applicable to suits for rent generally but Article 116 specially provides for a suit which is based on a contract in writing registered including a lease.

On behalf of the 2nd defendant, it is further contended that, he being liable by reason of privity of estate and their being no privity of contract between him and the plaintiff, Article 116 has no application at least in his case. No doubt the liability of an assignee of a term for rent arises out of privity of estate existing between him and the lessee, so that his liability ceases on the termination of such privity, as by relinquishment of possession or transfer. But the assignee's liability is based all the same on the covenant for rent which in law runs with the land. There is, therefore, no ground for saying that the period of limitation would be different, so far as the claim against the 2nd defendant is concerned.

It has been also argued that each of the defendants would be liable for half the rent and not jointly and severally liable for the entire rent. But if the 2nd defendant entered into possession under a contract of partnership, whatever the nature of the arrangement between him and his partner as regards the share of each in the profits and losses, it cannot bind the landlord and would not affect his (the latter's) rights upon the covenants.

As regards the contention in connection with the liabity for road cess and the claim for straw, I agree with what the learned District Judge says on those points, and as to claim for remission for shavi, though I think, as contended for by the appellant, each year must be considered on its merits, I am unable to find on the evidence that the claim has been substantiated. The evidence shows that in every year, with respect to which remission is claimed, there was at least one good crop and there was sufficient supply of water in the tanks for 2 or 3 months.

In the result, I would confirm the judgment of the District Judge and dismiss both the appeal and the 1st defendant's memorandum of objections with costs.

MUNRO, J.—As my learned brother would confirm the decree of the Court below, this appeal is dismissed with costs of the 1st respondent. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs of the 1st respondent.

JUDGMENT.

WHITE, C. J.—I cannot accept the view of the District Judge that what was done by the lessor's agents was done with the intention of bringing pressure to bear upon the lessees and should be treated as an intimation by the lessor to the lessees that he intended to determine the tenancy.

I agree with Munro, J., and I am of opinion that the lessor, in this case, by an unequivocal act intimated that he had elected to avail himself of the forfeiture. This intimation of the lessor's election, having been communicated to the lessees, was irrevocable, and the parties could not, by a subsequent agreement, revive the old tenancy. See Jones v. Carter (17), Evans v. Wyatt (18) and Smith's Leading Cases, notes to Dumpori's case, Volume I, page 32.

I also agree with Munro, J., that 2nd defendant is liable to the plaintiff for use and occupation.

It may be that, during the subsistence of the lease, the plaintiff, notwithstanding that the 2nd defendant was in occupation with the plaintiff's permission, could only look to the 1st defendant, the lessee, for rent and could make no claim for use and occupation as against the 2nd defendant.

But, as has been pointed out, the lease was determined. The occupation by the 2nd defendant for which the plaintiff now claims compensation for use and occupation was after the determination of the lease. There appears to be evidence that, after the determination of the lease, the 2nd defendant was in occupation with the express permission of the lessor. But, even if this were not so, it is not disputed that the 2nd defendant was in possession before the determination of the lease with the permission of the lessor, and the evidence is that, after the determination of the lease, all parties were desirous that the status quo ante should be restored. From this, I am prepared to infer as a fact that, after the determination of the lease, the 2nd defendant was in possession with the plaintiff's permission. As regards the amount of compensation the fact that all parties appear to have been desirous that, after the determination of the tenancy, the tenancy should be treated as subsisting, goes to show that the rent reserved under the lease may be taken as a fair criterion of the amount payable by way of compensation for use and occupation.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar has contended that it is not open to us in this suit to award compensation for use and occupation against his client I agree with the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Sheo Karan Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (2) and am prepared to follow it.

I set aside the decree of this Court and the District Court and I give decree in the terms of the judgment of Munro, J. The plaintiff must pay to the appellant (defendant) the costs of this Letters Patent Appeal. As regards the costs in the Court of first instance, there will be proportionate costs, one set. As regards the costs of Appeal No. 203, there will be proportionate costs of the appeal and the memorandum of objections.

BENSON, J.—I agree.

WALLIS, J.—I agree and will only add that I do not think that the framers of the Transfer of Property Act intended to depart from the well-established rule of English law that where a right of forfeiture accrues to the lessor, he is put to his election, and if he manifests his intentien to enforce the forfeiture, that is an election to determine the tenancy and the election is irrevocable. Jones v. Carter (17); Bendy v. Nicholl (19); Grimwood v. Moss (20); Evans v. Wyatt (18); Clough v. London and North Western Railway Company (21). Similarly, if he elects not to enforce the forfeiture and manifests his intention, that is an election to waive the forfeiture and his election is also irrevocable. The case of an election to determine is dealt with in section 111 (g) and the case of an election to waive in section 112.

In this case, the lessor elected to determine; the election was irrevocable and the lease was at an end and could not be revived. If the tenants had been left in possession, a tenancy from year to year might have arisen under section 116, but here the evidence is that they were put out of possession and re-admitted subsequently. There is evidence that both defendants subsequently had the use and occupation of the land with the permission of the lessor, and the only remaining question is whether they can be liable in the present suit. I think they can.

Appeal allowed.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899), s. 162—Appeal—Question of valuation—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—How land is to be assessed, if question within jurisdiction.

In appeals preferred under section 162 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, it is competent to the Small Cause Court Judge to deal with the question of valuation and that question alone.

Corporation of Calcutta v. Bhupati Roy, 26 C. 74; 3 C. W. N. 70, relied upon.

As to the manner in which land is to be assessed after the valuation has been settled, whether it is or is not to be assessed as vacant land, is a question entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court Judge.

Rule against the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Sealdah, dated the 15th September 1909.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Baranasibashi Mukerjee, for the Petitioner.

Babus Chandra Kant Ghose, Mohini Mohan Chatterjee and Sarat Chandra Dutt, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to modify an order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Sealdah, passed in an appeal preferred to him under section 162 of the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1899. The appeal related to the question of valuation of certain premises in this city. The Corporation had valued the land at Rs. 7,694. This valuation was based on the rate of Rs. 400 for an area of 14 cottahs of solid land and the rate of Rs. 300 for an area of 6 cottahs and 5 chataks treated as tank filled-up land. Upon appeal, the Small Cause Court Judge came to the conclusion that 5 cottahs ought to be treated as solid land and that area ought to be valued at the rate of Rs. 400, the remainder in his opinion comprising an area of 15 cottahs 5 chataks ought to be valued at the rate of Rs. 225. It was quite competent to the Small Cause Court Judge to vary the valuation as he did. But he proceeded to hold—and this is the portion of his judgment to which exception is taken—that it was but reasonable that a certain portion of the premises distinctly demarcated should be separated from the remainder and assessed as vacant land, and he concluded his order with the following observations: "From the entire area of the holding, the portion fenced off should be excluded and assessed as vacant land." This part of the order is clearly without jurisdiction. In appeals preferred under section 162, it is competent to the Small Cause Court Judge to deal with the question of valuation and that question alone. Corporation of Calcutta v. Bhupati Roy(1). As to the manner in which land is to be assessed, after the valuation has been settled, whether it is or is not to be assessed as vacant land, is a question entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court Judge.

The result, therefore, is that this Rule must be made absolute and the order of the Small Cause Court Judge modified. That portion of the order which directs that certain part of the premises has to be fenced off and should be assessed as vacant land must be expunged. The petitioner is entitled to the costs of this Rule. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Enhancement of rent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 3 (9), 30—Undivided share of howla —Holding—Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13—Suit for enhancement of rent—Decision that suit maintainable but suit dismissed on merits—Decision that suit maintainable, whether res judicata in subsequent suit.

The plaintiff, the owner of a share of a tenure, brought a suit for enhancement against thedefendant, a tenant, who had taken a lease from the plaintiff of his share of the property. In that suit, it was decided that the plaintiff had the right to enhance the rent of the defendant, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the rent paid by the defendant was not lower than that paid by tenants of adjoining lands. The plaintiff subsequently brought another suit for enhancement of the defendant's rent:

Held, that the rule of res-judicata was not applicable and the defendant was not debarred from questioning the soundness of the decision in the first suit that the plaintiff was entitled to bring the suit.

An undivided share of a howla does not come within the definition of 'holding', nor does it fall within section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The landlord of such a share is not entitled to maintain a suit for enhancement.

JUDGMENT.

HARINGTON, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff whose suit for enhancement of rent has been dismissed by both the Court of first instance and the lower Appellate Court. The facts are that the plaintiff and the defendant are howladars, the plaintiff having six-annas of the howla and the defendants ten-annas. The defendants took the undivided six-annas of the howla from the plaintiff as his tenants and it is in respect of this undivided six-annas of the howla that the plaintiff seeks to obtain an enhancement of the rent. The Munsif and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was not, in respect of this undivided six annas, the landlord of a holding held at a money-rent by an occupancy-ryot within the terms of section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and on that ground, amongst others, dismissed the suit of the plaintiff.

Now, on behalf of the appellant, it is contended, first, that this issue has been previously determined in favour of the plaintiff and, that, therefore, under the rule of res judicata, the Court was not entitled to dismiss his suit on this ground; and, secondly, it is argued that the plaintiff was the landlord of a holding within the terms of section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now, with regard to the first question, a suit was previously brought and it was held in that suit that the landlord was entitled to bring his action; but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the rent which it was sought to enhance was not lower than that of the surrounding lands. Therefore, judgment was given in favour of the defendants, although the defendants' objection to the competency of the suit was in fact overruled. In my opinion, the rule of res judicata does not apply to such cases. The judgment was passed in favour of the defendants and it was not open to them to appeal against the view of the Munsif who overruled the contention urged by them. If we were to hold that the rule of res judicata applied, it would come to this that the defendants were bound by the decision of the first Court and were debarred from appealing against the view expressed against them because the decision was in their favour—the principal point which the Court decided against them not being a ground on which the suit was decided because the suit was decided in their favour. The defendants were, therefore, debarred from questioning the soundness of the decision. The rule of res judicata, cannot, therefore, be applied to this case.

Then, on the second point what is sought to be enhanced is the rent of an undivided six-annas share of the howla and my view is that an undivided six annas is not a holding within the meaning of section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under that Act "holding" is defined as a parcel or parcels of land held by a ryot and forming the subject of a separate tenancy. I can understand no process of reasoning by which an undivided six-annas can be described as a parcel or parcels of land because the use of the word "parcel" implies that the land in question has metes and bounds. The result is that an undivided six-annas of the howla does not come within the definition of the word "holding" and, therefore, does not fall within section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case is not without authority, because the case of Haribole Brohmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (1) is a case in which this very same question arose and then it was decided that an undivided eight annas share was not itself a holding under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On a consideration of the statute and the authority, it seems to me that the appeal ought not to succeed. It is conceded that there is no authority in support of the interpretation which the appellant wants to put on the statute: and it is a very significant fact, as my learned brother points out, that although this decision in the case of Haribole Brohmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (1) was given so far back as 1898, there is no subsequent amendment of the Act so as to in any way derogate the effect of that decision.

For these reasons, I hold that the decree of the lower Court ought to be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I desire to add a few observations, in view of the earnest endeavour made to upset what has been accepted as good law for at least fifteen years.

The plaintiff and the defendants are landlords of a property; the share of the plaintiff is six-annas and that of the defendants ten-annas. The defendants have taken a ryati lease from the plaintiff of his share of the property. The plaintiff now seeks, under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to enhance the rent payable by the defendants. The Courts below have dismissed the suit. This decision is sought to be assailed by the plaintiff, appellant before this Court, on two grounds, namely, first, that the question of his right to enhance the rent of the defendants is res judicata; and, secondly, that upon a true construction of section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he has a right to enhance the rent of the defendants.

In support of the first contention, reference has been made to the decision in the earlier litigation between the parties when the plaintiff fruitlessly endeavoured to enhance the rent payable by the defendants. In that suit, it was decided in favour of the plaintiff that he had the right to enhance the rent of the defendants; but the suit was dismissed on the ground that the rent paid by the defendants was not lower than the rate at which rent was paid by tenants of adjoining lands. It has been argued, on the authority of the case of Peary Mohun Mukerjee v. Ambica Churn Bandopadhya (2), that the decision in favour of the plaintiff upon the question of his right to enhance the rent is concluded by the judgment mentioned. That case, however, is clearly distinguishable. There it was ruled that when a decision has been based on two grounds, either of which is sufficient to support the decree, the decision upon each of the grounds is conclusive between the parties. Here, however, the decision upon the question of the right of the plaintiff to enhance the rent is not the basis of the decree ultimately made. Consequently, it cannot be maintained under section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, that the question was directly and substantially in issue between the parties or was finally decided. This view is in accord with that taken in the case of Thakur Magundeo v. Thakur Mahadeo (3). The first ground upon which the decision of the Court below is sought to be assailed cannot, therefore, be supported.

(2) 24 C. 900.

In support of the second ground, it has been contended that although the defendants held a share of the howla under the plaintiff, yet the plaintiff is the landlord of a "holding" within the meaning of section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now the term 'holding' as defined in clause (9) of section 3 of the Act means a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy. Stress is laid, however, by the appellant on the introductory words of the section which provide that the definitions given are to apply unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context. But it has not been shown to us that there is anything in section 30 repugnant to the definition of the term "holding" given in clause (9) of section 3 of the Act. On the other hand, the cases of Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (4), Baidya Nath De v. Ilim (5), Haribole Brahmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (1) and Abdullah v. Gogin Mollah (6), conclusively show that an undivided share in a parcel or parcels of land cannot be a holding. In fact, a parcel of land is land defined by metes and bounds and consequently a share in a parcel of land cannot be deemed to be a parcel of land within the meaning of the definition of the term 'holding'. Reference has finally been made to the terms of section 5, clause (2) and section 3, clause (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, where definitions aregiven of the terms 'raiyat' and "rent" respectively; and it has been pointed out that a raiyat may hold a share of a parcel of land for which he may be liable to pay rent to the landlord. That need not be disputed. But it does not follow that, when a raiyat holds a share in a parcel of land, he has a 'holding' as defined in section 3 clause (9). The case of Jardine Skinner & Co. v. Rani Surut Soondari Debi (7), where their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that a right of occupancy might be acquired in respect of an undivided share of land under the Bengal Rent Law of 1868, and the decision of this Court in Baidya Nath Mondal v. Sudhoram (8), where a similar view was taken, are clearly of no assistance to the plaintiff, because what he has to establish is that he is the landlord of a "holding" within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In my opinion, he has failed to do so.

Both the points urged fail, and the appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPLICATION FOR REVIEW OF JUDGMENT IN SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1981 OF 1909.

March 18, 1910.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Teunon.

BHUTNATH HALDAR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Review—Application filed on 90th day—Previous day, a Sunday—Court-fee, whether half or full to be paid—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 14, Sch. I, Arts. 4, 5—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 5—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 10.

Where an application for review of a judgment is filed on the ninetieth day, the eighty-ninth day being Sunday, it must be stamped with the full fee leviable on the plaint or the memorandum of appeal as the case may be.

Application for the review of a judgment of the High Court.

Babu Nanda Lal Sircar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for review of our judgment deliverd in an appeal from appellate decree on the 17th December 1909. The application was presented on the ninetieth day, but Court-fees were paid to the extent of half the amount leviable on the memorandum of appeal. The question, therefore, requires consideration whether the application is sufficiently stamped. The answer depends upon the construction of Articles 4 and 5 of Schedule I to the Court Fees Act of 1870. Article 4 provides that an application for review of judgment, if presented on or after the ninetieth day from the date of the decree, must be stamped with the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. Article 5 provides that an application for review of judgment, if presented before the ninetieth day from the date of the decree, must be stamped with one-half of the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. The learned Vakil for the petitioner argues that as the eighty-ninth day was a Sunday and the Court was closed on that account, he has complied with the provisions of the law and is entitled to have his application heard although only half the Court-fees has been attached thereto. In support of this contention he has placed reliance upon the cases of Shazada Woola Gowhur v. Shah Rukh Begum (1) and Narain Mundul v. Bance Madhub Sircar (2). In our opinion, neither of these cases is of any assistance to the petitioner. In so far as the first of these decisions is concerned, it turned upon the construction of section 377 of the Code of 1859. That section provides that an application for review of judgment shall be made within ninety days from the date of the decree, unless the party preferring the same shall be able to show just and reasonable cause to the satisfaction of the Court for not having preferred such application within the limited period; if the application be made within the period above-mentioned, it shall be written on the stamp paper prescribed for petitions to the Court where a stamp is required; but if made after the expiration of that period, it shall be written on the stamp paper prescribed for plaints. The learned Judges, who heard the case of Shazada Woola Gowhur v. Shah Rukh Begum (1), held that if the application was presented after the expiry of ninety days from the date of the decree, it might still be entertained upon payment of the stamp requisite for an application, provided the application was presented on the first open day after the expiry of a holiday which included the ninetieth day. It is not necessary for us to express any opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of this decision, because what we have now to do is to interpret Act VII of 1870, the provisions of which are materially different, because there was no provision in Act VIII of 1859 corresponding to section 14 of Act VII of 1870. This latter section provides that where an application for review of judgment is presented on or after the ninetieth day form the date of the decree, the Court, unless the delay was caused by the applicant's laches, may in its discretion grant him a certificate authorizing him to receive back from the Collector so much of the fee paid on the application as exceeds the fee which would have been payable had it been presented before such day. This provision justifies the inference that the Legislature intended strict compliance with Articles 4 and 5 and laid down that if a case was made out for special action under section 14, the Court might pass necessary orders for relief of the party not in default.

In so far as the case of Narain Mundul v. Bance Madub Sircar (2), is concerned, it has clearly no application. No doubt, in that case the application for review as originally presented was insufficiently stamped, but the Court called upon the applicant to deposit the deficit fees, and this order was carried out. It does not appear to have been subsequently contended that the application, as it originally stood, was sufficiently stamped, and that was undoubtedly not the question referred for the decision of a Full Bench. We must consequently, hold upon a true construction of Articles 4 and 5 of the Court-fees Act, 1870, that the application presented to us is insufficiently stamped. The view we take is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of In re Doorga Prosunno Ghosh (3) and by that of the Madras High Court in the case of In re Kota (4). We see no reason whatever to dissent from the view taken in these two decisions.

We may add that section 5 of the Limitation Act of 1877 has obviously no application to cases under the Court Fees

Act of the present description. It is equally clear that section 10 of the General Clauses Act of 1897, is of no assistance to the petitioner, because it is applicable only to Acts of the Governor-General in Council and Regulations made on or after the 14th January 1887. Nor can it be contended, in view of the provisions of section 14 of the Court Fees Act, that the general principle is applicable that a party may be taken to have done an act within the prescribed time if he has done it on the first day that the Court is open after the expiry of the holidays within which the prescribed time terminated. The petitioner must, therefore, deposit the deficit Court-fees in the course of this day.

Petitioner ordered to deposit the deficit Court-fee.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1628 OF 1911.

Vendor and purchaser—Agreement for sale—Subsequent execution of mortgage by vendor to third party—Execution of sale-deed subsequent to mortgage—Declaration that mortgage does not affect purchaser's rights—Maintainability of suit for.

A vendee of property in whose favour the vendor has executed an agreement for sale is entitled to maintain a suit for a declaration that a mortgage of the same property, executed by the vendor to a third party subsequent to the said agreement, does not affect his rights.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Ganjam, in A. S. No. 259 of 1910, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Chicacole, in O. S. No. 413 of 1909.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiff obtained an agreement from the 2nd defendant, who was the owner of certain property, on the 29th April 1908 for the sale of the property to him. The 2nd defendant executed a mortgage document in favour of the 1st defendant, which was registered on the 2nd May 1908. The lower Appellate Court has found that it was not executed on the date it bears, namely, in January 1908, but subsequent to the agreement in plaintiff's favour. The plaintiff obtained a sale-deed from the 2nd defendant of the property on the 10th May 1908. The present suit is for a declaration that the mortgage executed in favour of the 1st defendant by the 2nd cannot affect the plaintiff's rights under the sale, it having been executed in order to defraud the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court, reversing the finding of the Munsif, has found that the plaintiff's contention was made out that no consideration was paid by the 1st defendant for the mortgage and that he and 2nd defendant conspired and brought about the document subsequent to the agreement in plaintiff's favour with a view to defraud him by making the property liable for the mortgage debt. The District Judge granted the declaration asked for by the plaintiff. It is contended in second appeal that as the plaintiff had only a right in personam against the second defendant on the date that the mortgage-bond to 1st defendant was registered, namely 2nd May 1908, and as 2nd defendant admitted the receipt of consideration for the mortgage and the validity of he mortgage-bond, the plaintiff, who subsequently obtained a sale-deed on the 10th May 1908, could not claim a declaration that the mortgage was not binding on the property. This argument, in my opinion, is untenable. By virtue of the agreement obtained by the plaintiff from the 2nd defendant on the 29th April 1908, he became entitled to a conveyance of the property from the 2nd defendant, which would prevail over the right of any one who took a transfer from him subsequent to the date of the agreement. He would, for instance, have been entitled to specific performance of the agreement to sell against any subsequent transferee from the 2nd defendant, except a bona fide transferee for value without notice of the plaintiff's rights under his contract. There can be no doubt that an actual conveyance obtained by the plaintiff in pursuance of a contract would also entitle him to priority over every subsequent transferee from the 2nd defendant, except a bona fide transferee for value. Although the mortgage might be valid as between the 1st and 2nd defendants, the plaintiff was entitled to priority as he had an agreement for sale prior to the mortgage and the District Judge was right in granting him a declaration that his rights under his conveyance are unaffected by the mortgage in 1st defendant's favour.

It is further argued that the onus of proof on the question whether the mortgage-deed was intended to defraud the plaintiff has been wrongly thrown on the 1st defendant. The question of onus is quite immaterial as all the evidence on record has been considered by the District Judge and he has come to the conclusion, on the whole evidence, that the mortgage-bond was the result of a fraudulent conspiracy between the 1st and 2nd defendant. I reject this second appeal.

Appeal rejected.

Landlord and tenant—Amalnamah—Stipulation that tenant will not claim deduction of rent—Pattah—Onus of proof—Claim of abatement by tenant.

In a rent suit, the tenants claimed abatement of rent. In an amalnamah granted by the landlord, the term fixed was five years with a stipulation that after that period there would be measurement of the jote and a fresh settlement entered into. The tenants asserted an interchange of patta and kabulyat but no patta was produced:

Held, that it was incumbent on the tenants to produce their patta and to make out the plea of abatement on the ground of diluvion, and as they did not do so, they were not entitled to any abatement.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Rungpur, dated the 26th March 1907, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of Rungpur, dated the 25th June 1906.

Babus Ram Charan Mitra and Sarat Chandra Mitra, for the Appellant.

Babu Hara Chandra Chakravarti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit by the plaintiff landlord to recover arrears of rent for the years 1309 to 1311 on the basis of an annual jama amounting to Rs. 1,005 8 for 1,292 bighas, $6\frac{1}{4}$ cottas of land.

The defence is that the quantity of land in the defendants' jote is far in excess of 1,292 bighas, $6\frac{1}{4}$ cottas, namely, that it amounts to 7,517 bighas, 4 cottas. The written statement further asserted that the patta and kabuliats had been exchanged between the parties and that the jotedars defendants were entitled to a considerable reduction of rent on account of diluvion so much so that the annual rental could not be reckoned at more than Rs. 300.

On the application of the defendants, a Commissioner was appointed, and his report has been accepted in the judgments of both the Courts below; in other words, he found that the defendants' jote had suffered very considerable diminution on account of diluvion. Both the lower Courts have given effect to the plea of diluvion and passed a decree in general accordance with the defence.

In second appeal, it has been urged, on behalf of the plaintiff landlord, that in terms of the amalnama, dated the 25th Sravan 1269, the defendants are not entitled to claim any abatement whatsoever; secondly, that the Courts below have made out a new case for the defendants; thirdly, that the non-existence of one of the mouzas included in the defendants' jote, namely, Bazar Gopinathpur, long before the date of the amalnama having been proved and admitted, the defendants are not entitled to any further reduction of rent in respect of that mouza, and, lastly, that the plaintiff has been unjustly saddled with the costs of the local inquiry.

We have examined the amalnama in detail, and it is certainly impossible to resist the conclusion that as regards the period of 5 years then in contemplation between the parties, it was stipulated that the tenants should not be entitled to claim any deduction whatever and that the lessees should not be able to raise any objection to the abadharit (settled) jama. With the exception of this amalnama, there is no sort of written agreement in evidence between the parties. The tenants having asserted an interchange of patta and kabuliat, it was incumbent on them to produce their patta and to make out the plea of abatement on the ground of diluvion. The amalnama mentions that settlement is granted for five years only; but there is a stiplulation that there will be measurement of the jote and that a fresh settlement will be entered into on the basis of the area so ascertained. The document also supports the statement made by the defendants that patta and kabuliat have been exchanged; and, if so, there must have been some proviso in the later agreements dealing with the question of diluvion by the river Teesta. But owing to the non-production of these papers, we are led to the conclusion that the defendants have not succeeded in showing that, in respect of the three years in suit, they are entitled to any relief on the ground of diluvion.

It is, consequently, unnecessary to discuss the second and third contentions raised in second appeal.

With regard to the item of costs, both the lower Courts are clearly in error in thinking that the local inquiry was made at the instance of the plaintiff. The application was made by the defendants, and, having regard to their plea, it could not have been made by any other party.

The appeal must, therefore, succeed and the suit for the rents of 1309 to 1311 must be decreed with costs in all the Courts including the costs of the local investigation. The claim for damages at Rs. 25 per cent. is not pressed, but, in lieu thereof, interest is allowed at 12 per cent. per annum on the arrears of rent.

Appeal allowed: Suit decreed.

Second appeal—Finding of fact—Finding based upon inadmissible evidence—Map prepared by Kanungo—Proceeding before Collector—Question whether land belongs to zemindar or to Government—Use of map—Map whether admissible—Public Record—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 35, 36.

A finding of fact may be challenged in second appeal, when, in coming to it, the lower Court has proceeded illegally in relying upon evidence which is irrelevant and inadmissible.

In a certain proceeding before a Collector, the question was raised whether certain land, the subject-matter of the proceeding, was the property of the owners of certain mouzah or whether it was land which formed part of no settled estate and to which the Government were, therefore, entitled. In that proceeding, a map prepared by a Kanungo was used:

Held, that the map did not fall within section 35 or 36 of the Evidence Act and was inadmissible.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—The first Court found that the kaimi jote, which is called kotibari jote, belonged to Mr. Bray and had been purchased by the plaintiffs, and that there was no rebutting evidence, and it accordingly held that the plaintiffs, the appellants before us, had acquired good title to this jote. It then proceeded to deal with what is the real issue in this case, namely, whether the disputed lands are included in this jote. The manner, however, in which this question has been dealt with has raised some confusion. I would point out here that the question whether the land belonged to Mouzah Ramchandrapore or to Mouzah Deara Ramchandrapore is not material. If the disputed land covers Mr. Bray's jote, it is not material to inquire as to who the plaintiffs' landlords may be. The question is, did the lands in dispute form part of Mr. Broy's jote? Now, it has been contended that this is a question of fact, and that we are concluded by the findings of the lower Appeilate Court. Those findings are challenged, and it is said that in coming to them the lower Court has proceeded illegally in relying upon evidence which is irrelevant and inadmissible. This ground is stated in the second of the grounds of appeal to this Court, in which it is said that the only evidence on the record, on which the lower Appellate Court relies in holding that the proprietor of Mouzah Ramchandrapore obtained abatement of revenue in respect of the lands diluviated, is a remark made by a Kanungo in Exhibit I, which is not admissible in law, and that it could not be used as evidence against the plaintiffs who were no parties to the proceedings in which it was made.

Now, the only question before us in this appeal is this, namely, whether the map upon which this remark occurs is or is not admissible in evidence. Some faint attempt was made to show that the case might fall within the provisions of section 36 of the Evidence Act. But I am of opinion that that is not so, that the map was not one which was prepared for public purposes and, therefore, of that character which the map must have to fall within the terms of that provision. And the proceedings upon which this map was used raise the question whether the land, the subject-matter of these proceedings, was the property of the owners of Deara Ramchandrapore or whether it was land which formed part of no settled estate and to which the Government were, therefore, entitled.

Then it was further argued that if it does not fall under section 36, it falls under section 35 of the said Act. Section 35 deals with entries in public records. That is the general section dealing with public records, section 36 deals with particular classes of public documents, namely, maps, charts and plans. In my opinion, this map does not fall within the provisions of section 35; nor has any authority been produced before us in support of this contention. It follows, therefore, upon this that the document was inadmissible and should not have been referred to in coming to the conclusion in this case.

I may mention here that it has been further contended that even if the document were admissible, it was used to show that the land fell with the ambit of Deara Ramchandrapore, a fact which, as I have explained, does not affect the real question before us, namely, whether it was Mr. Bray's jote or not.

It has been further contended that the result of the Collector's proceedings was to release the land, which, it was suggested, belonged to the Government, and that, therefore, in fact the map has been used to prove something which the proceedings in which it was used negatived. This, however, has been denied by the learned Pleader for the respondent and is rather a question of fact than a question of law with which we are concerned. What we are concerned with is not what the result of these proceedings was but what was their nature and what was the nature of the documents to which objection has been taken. I merely mention this point in order that it may be considered by the lower Appellate Court when the case goes back for re-hearing. It has been further pointed out in connection with these documents that neither the tenants nor the owners of Ramchandrapore were parties to the proceedings.

We observe that the learned Subordinate Judge who tried this appeal did not come to a clear finding upon the issue before him, that is, whether the disputed land is included in Mr. Bray's jote. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be reversed and the case remanded to that Court for re-hearing and for determination of this issue, after excluding from the evidence Exhibit I, to which objection has been taken and which we hold to be inadmissible.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result of the decision on remand.

COXE, J.—I agree.

Document—Alteration of date to secure registration—Mortgage-deed—Consent of mortgagee—Subsequent lessee of mortgagor—Suit upon mortgage—Mortgagor and his lessee whether competent to object to mortgage on ground of alteration—Estoppel—Fraud.

A mortgage-deed was presented for registration more than four months after its execution, and to enable it to be registered, the date was altered by the mortgagor. The mortgagee consented to the alteration. In a suit by the mortgagee on the mortgage:

Held, (1) that the mortgagor was estopped from setting up the alteration as an answer to the claim of the mortgagee; the mortgagor's lessee who took the lease subsequent to the alteration being equally estopped.

(2) that the matter would have been different if the lessee had been defrauded.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Mymensingh, dated September 18th, 1909, affirming that of the Munsif of Tangail, dated April 27th, 1909.

Babu Nares Chandra Sen Gupta, for the Appellants.

Babu Harendra Narain Mitter and Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a mortgage suit. The mortgage was executed by defendant No. 1 who is not a party to the appeal. The appellants are two persons, one of whom took a lease of some property comprised in the mortgage and the other took a putni lease of properties equally encumbered. The plaintiffs sued on their mortgage and recovered judgment. The objection taken by the defendants is that the mortgage-deed was presented for registration more than four months after the execution, that to enable it to be registered under the law, the date was altered by the mortgagor and thereby registration was obtained which was not warranted by law. The mortgage was executed on the 24th April 1905. It was registered on the 21st September 1905, the date having been altered to the 25th June 1905. The lease taken by one of the appellants was not taken till September 1906, and the other some time after. The result, therefore, is that the leases were taken long after the registration of the mortgage-deed. Now, no question of fraud of any kind arises in the case because the mortgagor wrote on the deed an explanation pointing out that this change in the date of the deed had been made. The mortgagee accepted the deed with the altered date; so it must be taken that as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee the alteration was consented to; and as between them, the mortgage would take effect only from the later date to which the document had been altered. That being the state of things, in our opinion it is not open to the defendants, the lessees, to complain. Supposing it to be assumed for the purposes of argument that the deed was wrongly registered, there being no fraud, the mortgagor would be estopped from setting up this alteration in the deed as an answer to the claim of the mortgagee. In our view, the appellants having taken their leases subsequent to the alteration, in the absence of any fraud, cannot stand in any better position than the mortgagor and are equally estopped from taking the objection which they rely upon. The matter would have been different if in any way the appellants had been defrauded. As prudent men, they ought to have inquired at the registration office to see whether there was any encumbrance. If they had done so, they would have discovered that there was this mortgage before their leases. Under these circumstances, we must affirm the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 3—Hindu Law—Suit by a widow for declaring adoption invalid—Death of plaintiff—Abatement of suit—Reversioners of last maleholder whether legal representatives of plaintiff.

A suit by a Hindu widow to have it declared that an adoption made by her son's widow is invalid abates on the death of the plaintiff, and the right to sue does not survive.

For the purposes of this question, there is no distinction between suits to set aside an adoption and suits to set aside an alienation.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in A. S. No. 841 of 1909, presented against that of the District Munsif of Dindigal, in O. S. No. 678 of 1906.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. Rangachariar and M. K. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Respndents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a widow (the mother of the last male-owner) for a declaration that an adoption by her son's widow is invalid. The plaintiff died before the suit came on for hearing in the Court of first instance. The reversioners of the last male-holder were made parties as the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff. The only question argued on the hearing of the appeal was, can they continue the suit ? The Court below was of opinion that they could. We are unable to take this view.

The first question for consideration is, does the deceased plaintiff's right to sue survive ? (Order XXII, rule 3). If it does not, no question as to who are the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff arises.

It appears to be well settled that a suit by a reversioner, who sues on his own behalf to set aside an alienatian by a widow, abates on the death of the plaintiff and that the right to sue does not survive to the next reversioners. See Sakyahani Ingle Rao Sahib v. Bhavani Bozi Sahib(1); Kommeni Chinnaveeraya v. Lakshmi Narasamma (2). In Muthasami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (3), where the suit was held not to abate, the plaintiff sued on behalf of all the reversioners as well as on his own behalf. The lower Courts were of opinion, in view of the decision in Chiruvolu Punnomma v. Chiruvolu Perrazu (4), that for the purposes of the question before us, a distinction should be drawn between a suit for a declaration to set aside an aliention and a suit for a declaration to set aside an adoption. What was actually held by the Full Bench in Chiruvolu Punnamma v. Chiruvolu Perrazu (4) was that, in a suit to set aside an adoption, as distinguished from a suit to set aside an alienation, the presumptive reversioner ought, on principle, to be held to represent the remote reversioner, if the matter is decided after a fair trial. The respondent relied on an observation of the Court in Chiruvolu Punnamma v. Chiruvolu Perrazu (4) that there was only one cause of action to be sued on. This observation was made with reference to suits to set aside alienations. Notwithstanding this, in Chinnaveeraya v. Lakshmi Narasimmah (2), the learned Judges held, as we think rightly, that in such a suit by a reversioner on his own behalf to set aside alienation, the right to sue does not survive. All that was decided in Chiruvolu Punnamma v. Chiruvolu Perrazu (4) was that, if there had been a fair trial, an adjudication in a suit by a reversioner to set aside an adoption is binding on the other reversioners. This is not inconsistent with the rights of the reversioners being independent rights. The rights remain subject to the rule of law laid down in Chiruvolu Punnamma v. Chiruvolu Perrazu(4). It is not a question whether there is a cause of action in the reversioners other than the deceased plaintiff, but whether the plaintiff's right to sue survives. In Premmoyi Chaudhrani v. Preonath (5), it was held that the right to sue survives. There, the claim was to recover possession of property. The Calcutta case may, perhaps, be distinguished on this ground. If it cannot, it apparently cannot he reconciled with the Madras decisions to which we have referred.

For the purposes of this question, it seems to us that no distinction should be drawn between suits to set aside an adoption and suits to set aside an alienation and we are of opinion that plaintiffs' right to sue did not survive.

It seems desirable to deal with the further question. Assuming that the cause of action survives, are the parties who have been added as plaintiffs, the reversioners of the last male owner, the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff? In the strict sense of the words, of course they are not. The meaning of the words, however, has been extended by judicial decisions, and, in the Code of 1908, a definition of the words

(1) 27 M. 588.

(2) 22 M. L. J. 375; 11 M.L.T. 181; (1912) 1 M.W.N. 442; 15 Ind. Cas. 313.

(3) 33 M. 342; 5 Ind. Cas. 42; 7 M. L. T. 17; 20 M. L. J. 49.

(4) 29 M. 390, 1 M. L. T. 183, 16 M. L. J. 307.

(5) 23 C. 636.

was, for the first time, introduced, apparently with the object of embodying the effect of the judicial decisions. The definition is contained in section 2 (11) and is as follows:—"Legal representative means a person who, in law, represents the estate of a deceased person and includes any preson who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, and, where a party sues or is sued in a representative character, the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued."

Can the words 'deceased person', in the present case, be construed as meaning not deceased plaintiff but the last male owner? We do not think they can. We think the deceased person is the late plaintiff and although, in a sense, the deceased plaintiff represented the reversioners, it cannot be said that the reversioners of the last male owner, in law, represent the estate of the deceased plaintiff. Then, assuming that the deceased plaintiff issuing in a respresentative character, can it be said that the parties added as plaintiffs are the persons on whom the estate devolves on the death of the deceased plaintiff? Here, the "estate" apparently means the estate of the last male owner. We think 'devolves' means 'has devolved' and not 'would in course of time devolve,' in accordance with the line of succession, on the parties who have been added as plaintiffs, if they were alive.

In the present case, the estate will not devolve on the parties who have been added as plaintiffs till after the death of the son's widow.

In Rikhai Rai v. Sheo Pujan Singh (6), which was relied on by the respondents, the suit was for possession, and the estate devolved, on the death of the orignal plaintiff, on the reversioners who were added as parties.

We must set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 10 (ii), 12 (ii)—Word "suit" in s. 10 (ii) includes 'appeal'—Question of sufficiency of Court-fee on plaint not expressly decided by first Court—Assumption—Consequences—Appeal to the first Appellate Court on insufficient stamp—Power of the Court of second or further appeal to order supply of deficiency—Consequences of non-compliance with such order.

The word "suit" in section 10 (ii) of the Court Fees Act includes appeal.

When a Court of first instance, whose duty it is to see that the Court-fee stamps affixed to a plaint are correct, proceeds to the trial of the suit, without expressly deciding that the plaint is correctly stamped, it must be assumed that the Court has tacitly decided that the amount of Court-fees paid is correct; and, acting on that assumption, it would be competent to the first Appellate Court, (though it would not be competent for the parties to the appeal to raise the question—obiter) to call upon the party, whose fee was in deficit in the first Court, to make good such deficiency within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Court and to dismiss the claim of the plaintiff, should it have been decreed, if he fails to do so. Similarly, a Court of second or further appeal is competent to call upon a party, who had appealed to the lower Appellate Court on insufficient Court-fee, to make good such deficiency, within a reasonable time to be fixed for that purpose, and, on his failing to do so, to dismiss his appeal to the lower Appellate Court, should it have been decreed; or, in case his appeal to the lower Appellate Court had been dismissed, to refuse to entertain his second or further appeal until the deficiency is made good within the time fixed, and, on his failure to comply with the order, to dismiss his appeal.

DYAL SINGH v. RAM RAKHA.

JUDGMENT.

ROBERTSON, J.—The point referred to the Full Bench in this case is as follows:—

"When it is found in an Appellate Court that the Court-fee paid on a plaint or a memorandum of appeal as the case may be, in the Court below is insufficient and no dispute as to the amount has arisen and been specifically decided in such lower Court, with reference to section 12 of the Court Fees Act, what course ought the Court of appeal to adopt?

"Should it accept the action of the lower Courts in proceeding to try a case as involving a decision of the correctness of the Court-fee under the first part of section 12 and so take action under the second part; or should it hold that it is its duty to refer the matter back for decision of the Court which has allowed the case to proceed on insufficient fee; or is any other course the correct one to adopt?"

The judgments of this Court which deal with the subject appear to be only two in number. In Mela Mal v. Harbhaj (1), as far as we understand it, the view taken was that if no question had arisen in the first Court which was specifically decided by the presiding officer as to the proper amount of Court-fee payable, no action could be taken by an Appellate Court under the second paragraph of section 12 of the Court Fees Act. The words used by the learned Judges of the Bench which decided that case are as follows:—

"Upon examining the record of the first Court, it appears that no question arose in that Court upon the valuation of the suit for the purpose of determining the amount of fee chargeable. The plaintiffs ought, under the express terms of section 50 of the Civil Procedure Code, to have stated in their plaint approximately the amount sued for, and under para. (f) sub-section (IV) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, they ought to have stated the amount at which they valued the relief sought. They did not do so, but no question arose in consequence. Under these circumstances, no question having been decided by the first Court, it appears that the second paragraph of section 12 was not applicable when the plaintiffs appealed to the Additional Commissioner; and that the Additional Commissioner was not competent to require from the plaintiffs an additional fee in respect of the first Court. It is only upon the ground of non-payment of the fee required for the first Court that the appeal to the Additional Commissioner has been dismissed, and on that ground his order cannot be sustained."

It will be seen that the point was not fully discussed, and we think that there is considerable doubt as to the correctness of the view therein expressed.

The only other judgment of this Court in which the point is noticed at all is Kaka Ram v. Ram Saran (2), where the matter is merely noticed incidentally at page 48, the previous ruling of 1884 being followed.

The question, however, has been more fully dealt with in various judgments of the Allahabad High Court. The first case is that of Narain Singh v. Chaturbhuj Singh (3). In that case, it was discovered on second appeal to the High Court that the respondent, when appellant in the lower Appellate Court, had not paid a sufficient Court-fee on his memorandum of appeal in that Court, and though he had been called upon to do so by the High Court, he had, up to the date of hearing of the appeal, not made good the proper Court-fee upon the memorandum of appeal in the lower Appellate Court. There appears to have been no question entertained for a moment of the competency of the High Court to call upon the appellant before them to make good the Court-fee required on the memorandum of appeal in the lower Appellate Court but it was held that the proper course was not to dismiss the respondents' appeal to the lower Appellate Court, but to stay the execution of the decree, if any, of the High Court in favour of the respondent until such time as the additional Court-fee due by him might be paid.

A somewhat similar case was dealt with in the appeal of Madan Lal v. Jai Kishan Das (4). In that case, similarly, it had been discovered in the High Court that the amount of Court fee payable upon the memorandum of appeal in the lower appellate Court had been deficient. The appellant had been called upon to make good the deficiency. He neglected or refused to do so and the High Court dismissed the respondent's appeal to the lower Appellate Court and restored the decree of the first Court. This case was not followed, in so far as concerns the procedure of dismissal of the appeal, in a case decided by the Full Bench of the same High Court in Mohan Lal v. Nand Kishore (5). In that case, while the power of the High Court to call upon appellant in the lower Appellate Court to make good the deficiency in the Court-fee upon the memorandum of appeal in that Court was clearly presumed, it was held that the proper course was not to dismiss the appeal to the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the deficiency of Court-fee had not been made good but to withhold the execution of the decree in the respondent's favour in the lower Appellate Court until such deficiency had been made good. It is to be noted that in that case the appeal was remanded to the lower Appellate Court as the appeal had been decided upon a preliminary point.

It appears to me that the judgment in Mohan Lal v. Nand Kishore (5) was correct. When a Court of first instance, whose duty it is to see that the Court-fee stamps affixed to the plaint are of correct amount, proceeds to the trial of the suit, it must be assumed that the Court has decided that the amount of Court-fees paid is correct. It is, at any rate, a tacit decision and I think, though that point is not before us, that it would not be competent for either of the parties in the Appellate Court to raise any question as to the amount of fees paid in the first Court. But clearly under the second paragraph of section 12, it would be competent to the first Appellate Court to call upon a party, whose fee was in deficit in the first Court, to make good such deficiency, or, if the order were not complied with within reasonable time to be fixed by the Court in accordance with section 10 para. (ii) of the Court Fees Act, to dismiss the claim of the plaintiff should it have been decreed in the first Court. Similarly, as regards the Court of second appeal or further appeal, it will be competent to such Court to call upon a party, who had appealed to the lower Appellate Court after affixing an insufficient Court-fee upon his memorandum of appeal, to make good such deficiency on a penalty of having any decision in his favour in the lower Courts set aside.

I think the word "suit" in section 10 clause (ii) of the Court Fees Act clearly includes "appeal" and that similar results in regard to the decision in the first appeal would follow from the action taken in the Court of second or further appeal to those which would result as regards the original suit under the orders of the Court of first appeal. My answer, therefore, to the reference is: — when it is found in an Appellate Court that the Court-fee paid on a plaint or a memorandum of appeal, as the case may be, in the Court below is insufficient, and no dispute as to the amount has arisen and been specifically decided in such lower Court with reference to section 12 of the Court Fees Act, it must be held, if such lower Court has proceeded to the decision of the suit or appeal, that such Court has decided, under section 12 (i) of the Court Fees Act, upon the proper Court-fee to be levied. Such being the case, the provisions of section 12, paragraph (ii), of the Court Fees Act would apply, and the consequence of the action taken by such superior Court would be such as is provided for in section 10, paragraph (ii), i. e., if the Court-fee paid on a memorandum of appeal, as in this case, to the first Court of appeal is insufficient, it is competent in this Court to call upon the appellant in the first Court of appeal to make good the deficiency in the Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal in that Court, and, on his failing to do so, to dismiss the appeal in that Court, should the appeal have been decided in his favour, after reasonable time has been allowed to make good such deficiency, or, in case the appeal in the lower Appellate Court of the party appealing to this Court has been dismissed, to refuse to entertain his appeal to this Court until the deficiency is made good, a reasonable time being allowed for such purpose, after which, should the deficiency not have been made good, the appeal to this Court would stand dismissed.

REID, C. J.—I concur in the answer proposed. In Madan Lal v. Jai Kishen (4), the Division Bench, Knox and Aikman, JJ., said:—"On the 26th November 1903 it was brought to the notice of the respondent's Counsel that there was a deficiency in the fee that should have been paid by his client, who was appellant in the Court below. Under section 12, clause (2), of the Court Fees Act, he was required to pay the additional fee. Time has been repeatedly given: on the last occasion, a Bench of this Court when allowing a fortnight more said:—'no more time will be allowed.' The fee has not been paid in. The result is that this appeal succeeds: the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside with costs and that of the Court of first instance restored."

This decision is, in my opinion, strictly in accordance with the provisions of section 12 (ii) and section 10 (ii) of the Court Fees Act.

In Mohan Lal v. Nand Kishore (5), the Full Bench held that the case of Madan Lal v. Jai Kishan (4) was not in accordance with the practice which previously obtained in the Court and Narain Singh v. Chuttarbhuj Singh (3) was followed.

The Full Bench remarked that it was unnecessary to recapitulate the reasons recorded in Narain Singh v. Chuttarbhuj Singh (3). The judgment in Narain Singh v. Chuttarbhuj Singh (3) ran thus:—

"I am unable to see that I am authorized so to act (to dismiss the respondent-defendant's appeal to the lower Appellate Court) under the second clause of section 10. That clause provides, with reference to the valuation of the properties referred to in section 7, paragraphs V and VI, of the Act that, when the Court-fees paid are insufficient under the circumstances laid down in the first clause of section 10, the Court shall call on the plaintiff to pay the deficient Court-fees and shall stay the suit until the additional fee is paid. It further provides that if the additional fee be not paid, the suit shall be dismissed. The second paragraph of section 12 makes the procedure set forth in the second paragraph of section 10 applicable to the case when a Court of appeal, reference or revision considers that the question decided under the first paragraph of section 12 has been wrongly decided to the detriment of revenue. The question then arises in the present case what is the suit which is to be stayed until the additional fee is paid, and it is to be noted that the staying of the suit is the act which the Court has to perform before it can dismiss the suit. There is no suit before me except in the sense that all proceedings in a suit up to decree are parts of the suit. What is before me is the appeal by the plaintiff against the decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit. The appellant is undoubtedly no way in fault. He has paid up all the Court-fees due from him in the lower Courts and in this Court. Does then the second clause of section 10 mean that because of the default of the respondent in the lower Court, the appellant is to have his appeal in this Court stayed, and can it be held that the second clause of section 12, read with paragraph 2 of section 10, means that if the respondent wilfully persists in refusing to pay, the appellant, who is not in fault, is to be punished by having his appeal dismissed? I cannot believe that it was intended by the Legislature to work any such injustice. In my opinion, the second clause of section 10, read with the second clause of section 12, cannot be worked in a case like the present. If it were the appellant who was in fault and failed to pay the full Court fee due from him in the lower Court, this Court certainly could stay the hearing of his appeal, and, if the deficient fees were not paid, could dismiss his appeal, and no doubt would do so. But where the appellant is not in fault, it would be most unjust that the respondent, by failing to pay the Court-fee due from him in the lower Court, should have it in his power to prevent the appellant from having his appeal heard.

"For these reasons, I decline in this case to take action under the second clause of section 10 and proceed to hear the appeal on the merits."

This judgment was delivered several years before that reported in the Allahabad Weekly Notes, and, with all deference to the learned Judge, for whose opinion I have always had the greatest respect, I am unable to find that any reasons have been recorded against the correctness of the course adopted in Madan Lal v. Jai Kishan (4), and it follows that the Full Bench recorded no reasons for differing from the decision in Madan Lal v. Jai Kishan (4).

Section 12 (ii) of the Act provides that the Court shall require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided and makes the provisions of section 10 (ii) applicable.

Those provisions are that the suit shall be stayed until the additional fee is paid and that if the additional fee is not paid within such time as the Court shall fix, the suit shall stand dismissed. I see no reason to doubt that "suit" includes "appeal" and that the appeal of the defaulting appellant in whatever Court must be dismissed on his failure to make up the deficiency of Court-fee when called on to do so.

I concur in so much of the case in Narain Singh v. Chaturbhuj Singh (3) as laid down that it must be assumed, under the 1st paragraph of section 12 of the Court Fees Act, that the lower Appelate Court finally decided between the parties that the fee paid was sufficient; and on this point I would overrule Mela Mal v. Harbhaj (1), which was merely followed in Kaka Ram v. Ram Saran (2), without any discussion, the point not having been seriously argued, no authority to the contrary having been cited and the cases of Madan Lal v. Jai Kishan Das (4) and Mohan Lal v. Nand Kishore (5) not having been pronounced.

SHAH DIN, J.—I agree.

COURT OF THE FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER, PUNJAB.

REFERENCE CASE NO. 163 OF 1910-1911

October 18, 1911.

Present:—Hon'ble Mr. Meredith, Financial Commissioner.

TOLA SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

versus

MUHAMMAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 84 (3), 98—Revenue Record—Presumption of correctness of entries.

One Tola Singh sued certain tenants for arrears of rent in respect of a holding. The entries regarding the holding in the jamabandi were as follows:—

In the ownership column, shamilat deh and in the cultivators' column, certain tenants on behalf of Haidar Shah co-sharer $\frac{1}{3}$ and Tola Singh $\frac{2}{3}$.

The defendants pleaded that they had paid the entire rent to Haidar Shah. Haidar Shah was then joined as defendant and he repudiated Tola Singh's claim alleging that Tola Singh was out of possession altogether and that the entry in jamabandi was wrong.

The Assistant Collector, 1st grade, applied to the Collector under section 98 of the Punjab Tenancy Act for sanction to an order directing the defendant Haidar Shah to institute a suit in a Civil Court within two months to establish the fact that the entries in the Revenue papers were wrong, and that he was entitled to the proprietary possession of the whole area in suit. The Collector replied that the onus of suing in a Civil Court should be placed upon Tola Singh, the plaintiff, and not on Haidar Shah, the defendant. The Revenue Assistant passed order accordingly and Tola Singh's appeal against the orders was rejected by the Collector. On a reference under section 84 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act by the Commissioner:

Held, that a presumption of correctness attaches to Revenue Records and the proper course would have been to postpone the case for two months to allow Haidar Shah to prove his exclusive title if so advised. If no suit was brought, the Court should decide in favour of the plaintiff.

FACTS.—The facts of the case appear from the following order of reference of the Commissioner, Rawalpindi Division, dated 13th July 1911.

The order of the Assistant Collector, 1st Grade, dated 10th February 1911, passed in pursuance of the Collector's, dated 26th November 1910, and the Collector's appellate order, dated 11th May 1911, appear to be manifestly wrong. Tola Singh sued certain tenants for arrears of rent for the rabi and kharif of 1908, in respect of a holding comprising 8 kanals, 17 marlas, the entries regarding which in the jamabandi were as follows:—In the owership column, shamilat deh, and in the cultivators' column, certain tenants on behalf of Haidar Shah, co-sharer, $\frac{1}{3}$ and Tola Singh, co-sharer, $\frac{2}{3}$.

The tenants in question replied to the suit alleging that they had paid the entire rent to Haidar Shah. Haidar Shah was then joined as defendant and he repudiated Tola Singh's claim alleging that Tola Singh was out of possession altogether and that the entry in the jamabandi was wrong. He stated that Tola Singh had sold his share in the holding in question which originally comprised 13 kanals 16 marlas. The Revenue Assistant Collector, 1st Grade, applied to the Collector, under section 98 of the Tenancy Act, for sanction to an order directing the defendant, Haidar Shah, to institute a suit in a Civil Court within two months to establish the fact that the entries in the Revenue papers were wrong, and that he was entitled to the proprietary possession of the whole area in suit.

On this reference, the Collector replied that the onus of suing in a Civil Court should be thrown upon Tola Singh, the plaintiff, and not upon Haidar Shah, the defendant. In pursuance of this order, the Assistant Collector returned the plaint to Tola Singh and directed him to proceed in a Civil Court.

Tola Singh then appealed to the Collector who passed his order of 11th May 1911, rejecting the appeal. In that order, the Collector refers to the fact that Tola Singh had sold 5 kanals (4 kanals 19 marlas is the correct figure) out of the holding in respect of which he is shown in the jamabandi as owning a $\frac{2}{3}$rds share, and he calculated that Tola Singh on his own admission could own only $1\frac{1}{2}$ kanals at the most. This calculation was made on the assumption that Tola Singh did not own a $\frac{2}{3}$rds share of the original holding of 13 kanals, 16 marlas but only a $\frac{1}{2}$ share, this assumption being based on the fact that previous to the last Settlement, Tola Singh was recorded as owning a $\frac{1}{2}$ share and that there was no explanation as to how this was increased to 2/3rds at Settlement.

Tola Singh's claim, in spite of the record showing that he owns a $\frac{2}{3}$rds share of 8 kanals, 17 marlas (the residuum of the holding after he had sold 4 kanals, 19 marlas), is apparently in excess of anything to which he is entitled; so far as the Settlement Record entries go, he is entitled to $\frac{2}{3}$rds of 13 kanals, 16 marlas, equal to 9 kanals, 4 marlas less the area of 4 kanals, 19 marlas which he has sold, or to 4 kanals, 5 marlas in all. On the present entries, he is entitled to $\frac{2}{3}$rds of 8 kanals, 17 marlas, or to 5 kanals, 18 marlas.

If the Settlement entry was wrong, he is, in accordance with the previous record, entitled to a half of 13 kanals 16 marlas, less 4 kanals, 19 marlas, sold by him or to 1 kanal 19 marlas. The areas in question are small but it seems to me to be important that the presumption which exists in favour of the correctness of the Revenue Record as to the status of Tola Singh, the plaintiff, in respect of this land and of his relations towards the cultivators and towards his recorded co-sharer, Haidar Shah, should not be lightly disregarded and set aside as it has been by the Collector's order. The record shows that Tola Singh and Haidar Shah are co-sharers in the proprietary right in the land in suit and that the tenants have been and are cultivating under them. Since Haidar Shah has challenged the correctness of those and since prima facie Tola Singh must be entitled to some share in the proprietary right and to share in the rent (whether this share be equal to an area of 1 kanal, 19 marlas or of 4 kanals, 5 marlas or of 5 kanals 18 marlas as claimed), it is Haidar Shah and not Tola Singh who should have been referred to a Civil Court.

A reference is, therefore, made to the Financial Commissioner under section 84 (3) of the Tenancy Act with the recommendation that the order of the Assistant Collector, dated 10th February 1911, be set aside and that an order be passed directing Haidar Shah to bring a suit in a Civil Court for a decree declaratory of his exclusive proprietary right in the holding in question, failing the institution of which, the Assistant Collector should proceed to hear and dispose of the claim of the plaintiff Tola Singh.

ORDER.—I agree with the course proposed by the Commissioner. A presumption of correctness attaches to the Revenue Records and the proper course is to postpone the case for two months to allow Haidar Shah to bring a suit to prove his exclusive title, if so advised. At the end of that time, if no suit has been brought, the Court should decide in favour of plaintiff, in accordance with the entries in the Records. Application accepted and case remanded to the Court of first instance for compliance with the above order. No costs.

Application accepted; Case remanded.

TULSA SINGH v. NATHA SINGH.

Babus Satish Chandra Ghose and Birendra Chandra Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Hirendra Narain Mitra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the purchaser of a putni taluk under the Bengal Putni Taluk Regulation, 1819, for the recovery of khas possession of certain land within the putni from the appellants who are mirasdars.

The case for the appellant, is that, although they are holders of a miras tenure, they were raiyats before they obtained that tenure and, now that the tenure is avoided by the sale under the Regulation, are entitled to resume the status of raiyats.

It is, however, unnecessary for us to consider whether the raiyati rights of the appellants were affected by the creation of the miras tenure; for, even if the appellants are to be regarded as raiyats now, they are not protected from ejectment under section 11 of the Regulation unless they are khudkasht (that is, resident) raiyats. This was expressly decided by this Court in Jogeshwar Mazumdar v. Abed Mahomed Sirkar (1).

Now, the lands in suit are situated wholly in Mauzah Kacharitola, as is stated in the plaint and admitted in the written statement, and the finding of both Courts is that the appellants are residents of Paikpara, and not of Kacharitola. The appellants were, therefore, liable to be ejected, and the suit for khas possession against them was rightly decreed.

This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated 31st March 1908, dismissing plaintiffs' claim.

Lala Dwarka Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Pestonji Dadabhai and Herbert, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A. C. Wingrove, respondent No. 2, is stated to have died more than six months ago, and no application has been made to bring his legal representatives on the record. That being so, the appellant's Pleader admits that the appeal abates as against the deceased respondent, and we direct that his name be struck out of the memorandum of appeal.

The facts of this case are briefly these. In the year 1903, the late A. C. Wingrove took contracts from the North-Western Railway Administration and the Resident Engineer, Patiala State, for the supply of a large quantity of stone ballast to them. He needed funds to carry on and complete those contracts, and S. Tulsa Singh, a Pleader, practising at Ambala, agreed to advance him a loan of Rs. 6,000 on the security of one Natha Singh on certain terms and conditions which are set out in the written agreement, dated the 5th September 1903, which was registered on the 23rd September 1903. As provided in that agreement, a cash credit account to the amount of Rs. 7,550 was opened with the Ambala Branch of the Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, in the joint names of the said Wingrove and plaintiff, S. Tulsa Singh, on the 5th September 1903. Of this amount, Rs. 4,000 was contributed by Wingrove and Rs. 3,550 by S. Tulsa Singh. The above-mentioned agreement was signed by Natha Singh as surety on the 23rd September 1903, and on the 24th September, another sum of Rs. 2,450 was paid into the credit of the joint account by S. Tulsa Singh. The contract with the North-Western Railway, for which Wingrove had borrowed the money from S. Tulsa Singh, was worked by him until March 1904, when, for some reason which it is unnecessary to explain, it fell through. Between September 1903 and March 1904, Wingrove paid S. Tulsa Singh Rs. 1,500, in three sums of Rs. 500 each, which S. Tulsa Singh claims was paid to him out of the bonus of Rs. 3,500, that had, according to him, been agreed to be paid by Wingrove in consideration of the loan of Rs. 6,000; nothing is said to have been paid to S. Tulsa Singh in liquidation of the principal debt, and Wingrove appears to have been declared insolvent and to have left the country after his contract with the North-Western Railway had come to an end.

The present suit was instituted by S. Tulsa Singh on the 7th December 1904 against A. C. Wingrove, as principal debtor, and Natha Singh, as surety, for recovery of Rs. 6,500 principal and interest, on the strength of the agreement, dated the 5th September, 1903 on the following allegations:—

(1). That on the 23rd September 1903, defendant No. 1 (Wingrove) had borrowed Rs. 6,000 from the plaintiff on the security of defendant No. 2 (Natha Singh) in order to carry on his (defendant's) contract for the supply of stone ballast to the North-Western Railway and the Resident Engineer, Patiala State; that the said amount was deposited with the Alliance Bank in the joint names of the plaintiff and defendant No. 1; that under the agreement entered into by defendant No. 1 with the plaintiff, the former was to pay to the latter Rs. 3,500 out of the profits of the concern and to pay him Rs. 500 out of each cheque received from the North-Western Railway, and that both the defendants had hypothecated to the plaintiff their properties as set out in the deed of agreement by way of security for the loan.

(2). That defendant No. 1 had paid Rs. 1,500 to the plaintiff out of the money received by him from the North Western Railway.

(3). That defendant No. 1 had not paid into the Alliance Bank the amount of the third cheque received by him from the North Western Railway and had in fact misappropriated the same; that the said defendant had transferred the contract to another person contrary to the conditions of the agreement in question; that the term of the contract with the Railway had expired in March 1904, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole amount advanced by him to Wingrove.

(4). That though the plaintiff was entitled to charge interest on the principal debt at the rate of two per cent. per mensem, he was content to receive interest at the rate of one per cent. at which rate the amount of interest due by the defendant came to Rs. 500. Upon these allegations the, plaintiff prayed for a decree for Rs. 6,500 against both the defendants personally and with a lien on the properties hypothecated under the agreement sued upon. Wingrove, defendant No. 1, did not appear in Court and the proceedings against him were, therefore, ex parte. In answer to the plaintiff's claim, Natha Singh, defendant No. 2, pleaded in substance that although he had stood surety for Wingrove under the agreement, dated the 23rd September 1903, he was discharged and was no longer liable on his contract of suretyship because,—

(1) the plaintiff had done certain acts inconsistent with his (defendant No. 2's) rights as surety, and

(2) the plaintiff had omitted to do certain acts which his duty to the surety required him to do.

By reason of these acts and omissions on the part of the plaintiff, it was pleaded, the eventual remedy of defendant No. 2 against the principal debtor defendant No. 1 had been impaired and on this ground defendant No. 2 was not liable as surety. It was further pleaded that the plaintiff was bound to give credit to defendant No. 2 for the sum of Rs. 1,500 which the plaintiff had admitted to have received from defendant No. 1, and that defendant No. 1 had as a fact, received only Rs. 5,300 out of the Rs. 6,000 which the plaintiff had agreed to advance to him, Rs. 700 having been re-paid by defendant No. 1 to plaintiff soon after the execution of the deed of agreement. On an objection being raised by the plaintiff's Pleader that the allegations of defendant No. 2 as to the acts that disentitled the plaintiff to relief against him were too vague and indefinite, defendant No. 2's Pleader put in a detailed written statement in which were set out the various grounds on which defendant No. 2 claimed to be discharged from his contract of suretyship. Of these, the principal grounds, which it is necessary to notice for the purpose of this decision, were as follows:—

(1). The plaintiff had deposited in Bank only Rs. 5,300 instead of Rs. 6,000 as stipulated for in the deed of agreement, deducting a sum of Rs. 700 said to have been due to him from Wingrove on account of previous debts. This was a breach of the agreement between the parties, and defendant No. 2 was not liable to the extent of Rs. 700.

(2). According to the agreement, the amount of all the cheques to be received from the Railway authorities had to be deposited in the Bank to the credit of the joint account. In contravention of this stipulation, however, Wingrove had received from the Railway and converted to his own use a cheque for Rs. 2,200. The plaintiff did not take the necessary steps to prevent this being done and defendant No. 2's rights had thereby been prejudiced.

(3). A quantity of concrete which, was stored at the lime kiln in the Ambala Cantonment and which had been hypothecated with the plaintiff by Wingrove, had been allowed by the plaintiff to be sold by Wingrove contrary to the terms of the agreement.

(4). Mrs. Wingrove had got attached a sum of Rs. 500 out of the amount of the last cheque received from the Railway authorities by Wingrove, and an objection to that attachment had been filed in the Divisional Court, Ambala, by the plaintiff and defendant No. 2. The plaintiff, however, did not appear in Court to support his objection, and the Divisional Judge threw out the objection on the ground that defendant No. 2 had no locus standi to object to the attachment in question; through plaintiff's negligence, therefore, defendant No. 2 suffered to the extent of Rs. 500.

(5). Udhe Ram and Chhajju Mal, who had a decree against Wingrove, had realized Rs. 519-10-1 out of the security deposit of Wingrove which was lying in the office of the Examiner of Accounts Lahore, in Wirgrove's name, and the plaintiff had taken no steps to prevent this being done and to realize the money himself, though the said deposit had been hypothecated to the plaintiff under the agreement.

Upon the pleadings of the parties, the District Judge, framed six issues (page 28 of the record) which need not all be noticed at this stage. The most important of those issues is issue No. 2 with reference to which the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed and on which the decision of the present appeal turns. It runs as follows:—

Has plaintiff in any way, and, if so, in what way, acted contrary to the terms of the agreement? And is he, therefore, disentitled to relief against defendant No. 2? On this issue, the District Judge has held that plaintiff had done certain acts which were inconsistent with the rights of defendant No. 2 and had also omitted to do certain acts which his duty to defendant No. 2 required him to do, with the result that the eventual remedy of defendant No. 2 against Wingrove had been thereby impaired; and that that being the case, under section 139 of the Contract Act, defendant No. 2 was discharged. The plaintiff's suit has, therefore, been decreed ex parte against Wingrove, but has been dismissed against defendant No. 2; though, however, dimissing the suit against him, the District Judge has not allowed defendant No. 2 his costs, on the grounds that during the trial of the suit, his objection that plaintiff's brother, Devi Charan Singh, should be impleaded as a co-defendant was frivolous and that the objection thus raised had considerably delayed the decision of the case.

The plaintiff has preferred an appeal to this Court from the decree dismissing his suit against Natha Singh, defendant No. 2, while the latter has filed cross-objections impuguing that part of the decree which disallows him costs of the suit. Although several questions of a more or less controversial character have been discussed before us in the course of the argument advanced by the appellant's Pleader, it is only necessary to notice such of them as bear directly upon the question of the alleged discharge of the surety under the provisions of section 139 of the Contract Act. We may at once say that after giving every weight to the contentions raised by the learned Pleader, we think that the view taken by the District Judge is correct, namely, that by reason of certain acts and omissions on the part of the plaintiff, the eventual remedy of defendant No. 2 against the principal debtor, Wingrove, was substantially impaired, and that, therefore, under section 139 of the Contract Act defendant No. 2 was discharged.

The material clauses of the written agreement, dated the 5th September 1903, on which the plaintiff's suit is based, and which bear more or less directly upon the argument advanced before us, are as follows:—

"2. That all cheques or money, which are now or may hereafter become due or payable to the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove under the above contract, shall be paid into the credit of the said joint account with the Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, Ambala.

"3. That all the cheques drawn against the said joint account with the said Bank shall be signed jointly by the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove and the said Sardar Tulsa Singh, and neither party is at liberty to withdraw from the said Bank any moneys standing at the credit of the joint account without the consent of the other party.

"4. That the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove shall write to the Examiner of Accounts, North-Western Railway, Lahore, requesting him to pay direct to the Agent, Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, Ambala, all moneys that may be or become due to the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove under the above-mentioned agreement, and further the said Mr. A. C. Wingorve hereby agrees and undertakes not to write or give any other instructions as regards the payments due to him by the Examiner of Accounts, North-Western Railway, Lahore, during the continuance of this agreement between the parties hereto or until such time as the full amount of Rs. 6,000 together with a further sum of Rs. 3,500 (making a total of Rs. 9,500) has been fully re-paid to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh.

"5 That the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove also agrees to endorse all his bills for the supply of his stone ballast to the North-Western Railway as payable to the Agent, Alliance Bank of Simla, Limited, Ambala, during the continuance of this agreement.

"6. That as further security for the payment to Sardar Tulsa Singh of the amounts mentioned in paragraphs 4 and 7 of this agreement, the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove hereby assigns to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh all his interest and rights in all and every stack of stone ballast which are now, or may hereafter be, belonging to the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove at Rupar, Doraha and Patiala or in transit to Doraha or Patiala and also in his, the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove's, stacks of lime and kankar in Ambala and all cheques and security deposit due to the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove from the North-Western Railway and Patiala State and the said Mr. Wingrove further agrees not to in any way dispose of or mortgage such said stacks without the consent of the said Sardar Tulsa Singh.

"7. That in consideration of the said Sardar Tulsa Singh opening with the said Bank the cash credit of Rs. 6,000 as mentioned in the preamble of this agreement, the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove hereby agrees to pay to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh the sum of Rs. 3,500 (rupees three thousand five hundred) as a bonus, or remuneration, this said sum of Rs. 3,500 to cover all and every charges for interest or other charges incurred by the said Sardar Tulsa Singh and to be payable to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh out of the profits accruing to the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove from his above-mentioned contracts with the North-Western Railway, etc.; and further it is agreed that out of each and every payment received from the North-Western Railway and Patiala State, a sum of not less than Rs. 500 shall be paid to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh, such payment to go towards liquidation of the cash credit of Rs. 6,000 and the bonus of Rs. 3,500.

"8. That the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove shall not, without the permission of the said Sardar Tulsa Singh, draw from the monies of the business a greater sum than Rs. 500 a month for his own personal use and expenses and for monies required for the purposes of the business it is agreed that the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove shall intimate to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh in writing, through either Babu Natha Singh or Babu Devi Charn Singh the object for which the monies are required.

"10. That as a further security for the cash credit opened with the Bank as hereinbefore stated, Babu Natha Singh, son of the late Bhai Hari Singh of Ambala city and of Patiala, also becomes a party to this agreement inasmuch as that he, the said Babu Natha Singh, bereby guarantees to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh the re-payment by the said Mr. A. C. Wingrove to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh of the said sum of Rs. 6,000 and as security therefor, he, the said Babu Natha Singh, grants and assigns to the said Sardar Tulsa Singh a lien to the extent of Rs. 6,000 on his, the said Babu Natha Singh's, properties situated in Ambala city and Patiala State as per details below:— * * * "

Although Natha Singh, defendant No. 2, signed the above agreement on the 23rd September 1903, it is ccmmon ground on both sides that the operation of the agreement was retrospective as regards his liabilities as surety and must be considered to have commenced on the 5th September 1903, when the said agreement was signed by the principal debtor, Wingrove. It is, we think, equally clear that if the surety's liabilities came into existence on the 5th September 1903, his rights as surety also vested in him as from the same date, and for the purposes of this case, the agreement must be considered to have been signed both by the principal debtor and by the surety on the 5th September 1903. The alleged acts and omissions of the plaintiff which are relied upon by defendant No. 2 as having resulted in impairing his eventual remedy against Wingrove and by reason of which he claims to be discharged from the contract of suretyship have already been set out above and it now remains to consider those alleged acts and omissions in detail in order to see whether they fall within the purview of section 139 of the Contract Act so that by reason of those acts and omissions defendant No. 2 is altogether discharged from liability.

(1). Defendant No. 2's first ground of complaint is that though the plaintiff had agreed to advance to Wingrove a loan of Rs. 6,000 for the purpose of carrying on the Railway contract, as a matter of fact he only advanced him a sum of Rs. 5,300, having taken from him a cheque for Rs. 700 in his own name in alleged payment of previous debts said to have been due by Wingrove to himself (plaintiff). A reference to the Cash Credit Account, Exhibit D. W. I. opened by the plaintiff and Wingrove with the Alliance Bank of Simla (page 10 of the record), shows that the account commenced on the 5th September 1903 by payment into the Bank of a sum of Rs. 7,550. Of this amount Rs. 3,550 was deposited by the plaintiff and Rs. 4,000 by Wingrove (see evidence of Kali Charn, page 32 of the record and of plaintiff himself—page 39). We further find that on the 7th September, a cheque for Rs. 700 drawn in favour of the plaintiff was cashed by him. For defendant No. 2, it has been contended that this sum of Rs. 700, was paid by Wingrove to the plaintiff himself in liquidation of a private debt which had nothing whatever to do with the Railway contract, and that as the plaintiff drew this sum against the joint account in contravention of the provisions of the written agreement, dated the 5th September 1903, he did an act inconsistent with the rights of the surety and that he cannot, therefore, hold the surety liable under that agreement at least to the extent of this amount. For the plaintiff, it has been argued that on the 5th September, Wingrove paid in Rs. 4,000 out of his own pocket, that this amount remained his own private property notwithstanding that it was treated as part of the joint account, that the sum of Rs. 700 aforesaid must be considered to have been drawn against the said amount of Rs. 4,000, and that, therefore, the rights of the surety under the written agreement were in no way jeopardised. We find ourselves unable to accept this argument. Under clause 2 of the agreement, Wingrove was bound to pay into the Bank to the credit of the joint account all monies which were due or payable to him under the Railway contract on the 5th September 1903; and a reference to the evidence of Mathra Das, (D. W. No. 5 p. 32 of the record), shows that on the 21st August 1903, a sum of Rs. 4,606 was found due by the Railway authorities to Wingrove on account of his stone ballast contract, and that on that date, a bill for that amount was sent to the Examiner for payment. It is reasonable to suppose that this bill was duly paid and that it was Rs. 4,000 thus received by Wingrove from the Railway authorities that was deposited by him in the Alliance Bank of Simla on the 5th September 1903 as part of the joint account in pursuance of the 2nd clause of the agreement aforesaid. This sum of Rs. 4,000, therefore, ceased to be his own exclusive property as soon as it was deposited in the sense that he could not deal with it except for the purposes of carrying on the Railway contract; and it is quite clear that the sum of Rs. 700 drawn by cheque on the 7th September against the joint account was so much money paid to the plaintiff as private creditor of Wingrove in direct contravention of the letter and spirit of the deed of agreement. Plaintiff himself was a party to this breach of the agreement, and as he thus participated in the conversion of part of the joint funds to purposes unconnected with the Railway contract, he certainly did an act which was inconsistent with the rights of defendant No. 2 as surety. It has been urged for the plaintiff that of this sum of Rs. 700, Rs. 200 was due by defendant No. 2 himself to the plaintiff on a promissory-note, that that promissory-note was cancelled by this payment, and that, therefore, defendant No. 2, being aware of this payment and having benefited by it, is precluded from raising the objection that the act of the plaintiff in accepting the payment of Rs. 700 from Wingrove was inconsistent with his rights as surety. But there is no independent evidence on the record of Rs. 200 being due on a promissory-note by defendant No. 2 to the plaintiff, the latter's evidence on this point (page 40 of the record) being flatly contradicted by that of the former (page 44). We may note here that it was not until the 24th September 1903 that the plaintiff paid into the Bank the balance Rs. 2,450, which, together with the sum of Rs. 3,550 which he had paid in on the 5th September, made up the total amount of the loan, Rs. 6,000. As, however, between the 5th and the 24th September, the plaintiff had already drawn Rs. 700 from the Bank against the joint account in liquidation of a private debt due by Wingrove, it must be held that the plaintiff paid in only Rs. 5,300 and not the full amount of Rs. 6,000 which, under the agreement, he was bound to deposit in the Bank. We hold, therefore, with reference to the item of Rs. 700 that the objection of defendant No. 2 has been fully established.

(2). The facts bearing upon the second objection raised by defendant No. 2 are these:—

Mathra Das (D. W. No. 5) proves that the last bill submitted by Wingrove in respect of his contract was for Rs. 2,687-12-2. This bill was sent to the Examiner, Public Works Accounts, on the 3rd February 1904. Of the amount due on this bill, a sum of Rs. 500 was attached by order of Court for payment to Mrs. Wingrove, wife of Wingrove, (which attachment forms the subject of the fourth objection raised by defendant No. 2); and the balance, Rs. 2,187-12-2, was received by Wingrove himself but was never paid into the Bank to the credit of the joint account. Wingrove, however, sent Rs. 500 out of this amount in his hands to the plaintiff in pursuance of the stipulations contained in the 7th clause of the agreement, and the plaintiff accepted this sum. He never questioned Wingrove as to what amount of money he had received from the Railway authorities, nor did he take any steps to compel him to pay the balance in his possession (Rs. 1,687) into the Bank to the credit of the joint account, as provided by clause 2 of the agreement. The plaintiff, when examined as a witness, made the following statement with reference to this item (page 39 of the record):—

"Mr. Wingrove got a cheque in February 1904 for Rs. 2,600 for his Railway contract and it did not go into the account but that is the only instance I know in which he got money for the Railway contract and did not credit it to our joint account. He did not pay me any of this Rs. 2,600 directly, but Natha Singh, defendant, brought me Rs. 500 saying that it was part of this, Rs. 2,600 and was my part of this Rs. 2,600: Wingrove took the cheque for Rs. 2,600 from the Court of the District Judge, Ambala, and promised me to pay it into our joint account. As he went to Patiala, I did not take any steps to see that he did put this money in. This Exhibit D2 is the receipt I gave for this sum of Rs. 500."

Thus, from the plaintiff's own evidence, it is clear that he was aware of Wingrove having received a sum of Rs. 2,600 from the Railway authorities on account of his contract, that he (plaintiff) himself received Rs. 500 out of the said amount from Wingrove in pursuance of the agreement, but that he took no steps whatsoever to see that Wingrove paid the balance into the Bank to the credit of the joint account as he was bound to do under the said agreement. It cannot be seriously contended that this omission on the part of the plaintiff to enforce the terms of the agreement did not amount to gross negligence in the performance of his duty to the surety; and it is clear to our minds that by this negligence Wingrove was enabled to misappropriate the amount of Rs. 1,687, which was the balance remaining in his hands after Rs. 500 had been attached by Court at the instance of Mrs. Wingrove. The surety's rights were thus clearly prejudiced and his eventual remedy against Wingrove was certainly impaired. For the plaintiff it has been argued that after Wingrove had received direct from the Railway authorities Rs. 2,187 and had himself misappropriated the sum of Rs. 1,627 as aforesaid, the plaintiff could only protect his own rights and those of the surety by bringing a suit against him at once; and that all that he was, therefore, guilty of, was that he omitted to sue Wingrove immediately after his misappropriating the amount in question. Such omission, however, on the part of the plaintiff, it has been urged, does not, in the absence of any provisions of guarantee to the contrary, discharge the surety (section 137 of the Contract Act) and that the surety cannot thus claim to be discharged from the contract of suretyship. To this it is sufficient to reply that the complaint of defendant No. 2 against the plaintiff is, not that the plaintiff forebore to sue Wingrove in time to compel him to disgorge the amount which he had misappropriated, but that, owing to gross negligence on the part of the plaintiff, Wingrove did not carry out clauses 2 and 4 of the agreement and that when the plaintiff became aware of a cheque for Rs. 2,600 having been received by Wingrove from the Railway authorities, he did not take the very elementary precaution of calling upon him before receiving the sum of Rs. 500 for his own (plaintiff's) personal benefit to deposit the balance at once in the Bank, thus effectually preventing all chance of his misappropriating the money. We think that this complaint is well-founded, and we have no hesitation in holding that it was through the plaintiff's gross carelessness that Wingrove was enabled to receive and misappropriate the said sum of Rs. 1,687. Section 139 of the Contract Act clearly applies, in our opinion, to negligence of this kind on the part of the creditor, and the second objection of defendant No. 2 must, therefore, be held to have been established.

(3). As regards the third objection, the evidence of Sorabji (page 36) conclusively proves, that after the Railway contract had come to an end, a quantity of kankar belonging to Wingrove was purchased by the witness for Rs. 384, and that the money was taken credit for by Sorabji in part payment of a debt due to him by Wingrove. The kankar in question had been hypothecated by Wingrove to the plaintiff under clause 6 of the agreement, and immediately on the termination of the Railway contract, the plaintiff ought to have taken necessary action to sell this kankar and to receive its price in liquidation of part of the debt due to himself. The plaintiff admits that he knew about the sale of this kankar by Wingrove and yet he took no steps whatever to protect his rights and those of the surety.

(4). Defendant No. 2's position is equally clear with respect to the fourth objection. As has been stated above, Mrs. Wingrove got a sum of Rs. 500 attached out of the amount of the last cheque for Rs 2,687 received by Wingrove from the Railway authorities. An objection to that attachment was filed in Court by the plaintiff and defendant No. 2, but the plaintiff did not appear to prosecute the case, and the Court decided that defendant No. 2 had no locus standi to object to the attachment. The plaintiff admits all this; and yet his Pleader argues that the fact that the plaintiff did not appear in Court in support of his objection is perfectly immaterial and that defendant No. 2's rights as surety have not in any way been jeopardised in reference to the sum of Rs. 500 which Mrs. Wingrove had appropriated. We find ourselves unable to accept this extraordinary argument; for it is clear to our minds that qua this sum of Rs. 500, the plaintiff deliberately flung to the winds his own rights under the agreement and omitted to do an act which his obvious duty to defendant No. 2 required him to do. He is not, therefore, entitled to call upon defendant No. 2 to carry out the contract of suretyship, seeing that the latter's remedy against the principal debtor has been impaired by plaintiff's gross negligence.

(5) As regards the fifth objection raised by defendant No. 2, namely that Udhe Ram and Chajju Mal had, owing to plaintiff's negligence, realised Rs. 519-10-1 out of the security deposit of Wingrove and that defendant No. 2 was not liable to the extent of that amount, we think that this objection must be held to have been made out. Under clause 6 of the agreement, the plaintiff had a lien on the security deposit of Wingrove, the plaintiff knew that Wingrove's contract with the Railway had come to an end in March 1904, and should, therefore, have taken steps at once to enforce his lien on the said security in the same way as Udhe Ram and Chajju Mal had managed to execute their decree against the same. He not only did not endavour to enforce his lien on the said security deposit but he preserved extraordinary silence and made no objection to Wingrove's decree-holders attaching it and realising Rs. 519 out of it. Such conduct on the part of the plaintiff clearly falls within the purview of section 139 of the Contract Act.

It follows from the above findings that in this case the plaintiff has done acts which were inconsistent with the rights of defendant No. 2 as surety and has also omitted to do certain acts which his duty to defendant No. 2 required him to do; and as a result of those acts and omissions, defendant No. 2 has suffered to the extent of Rs. 3,790 (Rs. 700 plus Rs. 1,687 plus Rs. 384 plus Rs. 519 plus Rs 500) inasmuch as to this extent his eventual remedy against the principal debtor has been impaired. The plaintiff admits in his plaint that he had received Rs. 1,500 from Wingrove, and since under clause 7 of the agreement, he was entitled to receive by way of bonus a sum of Rs. 3,500 only out of the profits accruing to Wingrove from the Railway contract, and as there is no evidence on the record that any such profits had accrued to Wingrove, the plaintiff clearly is not entitled to retain the said sum of Rs. 1,500 over and above the Rs. 6,000 sued for as the principal debt. He must, therefore, give credit to defendant No. 2 for this sum of Rs. 1,500, and after giving him this credit, he is only entitled to sue defendant No. 2, if at all, for a sum of Rs. 4,500 only. But, as we have seen above, defendant No 2 has suffered by reason of the acts and omissions of the plaintiff, which amount to gross negligence on his part, to the extent of Rs. 3,790; in other words, the eventual remedy of defendant No. 2 against the principal debtor was very substantially impaired. That being the case, under section 139 of the Contract Act, defendant No. 2 must be held to have been discharged.

We accordingly maintain the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal.

As regards the cross-objection filed by defendant No. 2, we must hold, in view of the findings recorded above, that the plaintiff's suit against him was wholly unjustified, and the District Judge was not, therefore, right in disallowing costs to defendant No. 2. We, therefore, direct that the plaintiff should bear defendant No. 2's costs both in the lower Court and in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2632 OF 1908.

May 2, 1912.

Present:—Sir Lawrence Jenkins, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice N. Chatterjea.

JARIP KHAN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

DURFA BEWA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 85 cl. (2)—Sub-letting by raiyat—Permanent lease—Registration effected in contravention of law—Effect of lease.

A sub-lease by a raiyat purporting to create a permanent tenancy, that is, to create a term exceeding nine years, even if registered in breach of section 85 clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, must be treated as though it was not registered, for it was a registration in contravention of law. The document, therefore, is inadmissible in evidence, and cannot affect the holding.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal arises out of a suit whereby the plaintiff prays that his jote and dar-jote rights may be declared to the lands in suit and that a decree for khas possession may be passed in his favour.

The plaintiff in this case does not rest his claim on any prior possession that has been established, but solely upon a document. That document is a sub-lease by a raiyat purporting to create a permanent tenancy. It, therefore, purports to create a term exceeding nine years. Section 85 sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that "a sub-lease by a raiyat shall not be admitted to registration, if it purports to create a term exceeding nine years." The duty, therefore, incumbent on the Registrar, when such a document is presented to him. is not to admit it to registration. This duty is brought pointedly to the notice of the Registrar by a rule of the Registration Department which prescribes that when a sub-lease executed by a raiyat purporting to create a term exceeding nine years is presented for registration, it shall be returned at once with a note to the following effect, recorded on its back, viz., not admissible under sub section (2) section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). Therefore, when this document, on which the plaintiff rests his claim to succeed in this suit, was presented, there can be no doubt as to what should have been done. Had the law been obeyed, the document would not have been registered. If it has not been registered, then under section 49 of the Registration Act, not only would it not affect any immoveable property comprised therein but it could not be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property; so that for the purpose of this litigation, the document, if not registered, would have been as though it did not exist. Does it then make any difference that in contravention of the law it was registered? I think not. To hold any other view would mean this that if the Registrar could be deceived or induced into a breach of his duty, rights would be created which would otherwise not exist, and that cannot have been the purpose of the Legislature. Therefore, it appears to me that this document, though purporting to be registered in breach of section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in fact, must be treated as though it was not registered, for it was a registration in contravention of law. The result then is that we have no proof of this document, and as a consequence no proof of the title on which the plaintiff rests. More than that, as I have already pointed out, the plaintiff cannot fall back on any prior possession as tenant or otherwise, so as to attract in his favour that class of decisions of which the one, Lala Surabh Narain v. Catherine Sophia (1), is a type. Nor do I think that we can accept other evidence of this grant without contravening the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act, and, in fact, I do not understand that there has been in this case any evidence of the grant tendered other than the document which was improperly registered.

It has been brought to our notice that there are a number of cases in which the provisions of section 85 have come under consideration: but in none has this particular point been the actual basis of a decision. In this case, we have had the advantage of clear and pointed arguments and they appear to me to out-weigh the dicta brought to our notice. There is one case which calls for particular notice, the case of Manik Borai v. Bani Charan Mondal (2), which at the first blush presents some resemblance to the present, but its actual circumstances did not call for or elicit a decision on the precise point with which we are concerned. We have examined the record, and find that what was actually decided is to be found at page 653, where the Court pronounced its final conclusion in these words: "We must, therefore, hold that in the case before us, the suit ought not to have been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had acquired no valid title to the property because even though the instrument under which he claims be inoperative under section 85 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he had a subsisting interest when the action was commenced." Had it there been actually decided that section 85 clause (2) had the limited operation for which the appellant contends before us, we should, of course, have followed that decision. But our view rests upon this, that whatever may have been the intention of the Legislature, it saw fit to carry out the particular purposes indicated in sub-section (2) by a provision which must of necessity have been of universal application. In forbidding registration, it forbade for all purposes the production of that document as evidence, and withheld from it any ability to affect immoveable property.

The only other point which has been urged before us is that the Court of appeal below has erred in holding that the recognition of the plaintiff by the superior landlord as a tenant was of no avail to him. That is a matter on which both Courts are against the present plaintiff-appellant, and, in my opinion, rightly so. On the facts, I think the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court decided rightly when he said that the fact that the plaintiff was recognized by the superior landlord as a tenant was of no avail to him.

The result, then, is that, in my opinion, the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be confirmed with costs.

Pleadings—Compromise during suit—Court's duty to inquire if parties are bound by compromise set up by one of them—Decision on pleadings of parties.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for a certain sum, basing his claim on a balance of account struck by the latter. The claim was dismissed as not proved. In the course of the proceedings, the defendant put in applications stating that under pressure of people in the village, a certain compromise was arrived at between the parties. On appeal, the Divisional Judge, taking into consideration defendant's applications and without going into the merits of the case, decreed the claim for the sum settled by the said compromise:

Held, that the Appellate Court should have inquired as to whether the compromise was binding between the parties, and if the compromise was not binding, whether the plaintiff had proved his case on the merits.

Petition, under section 70(a) of Act XXV of 1899, for revision of the order of the Divisional Judge, Hissar Division, dated the 19th January 1911, modifying that of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 27th October 1910, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Beni Parshad Khosla, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Devi Dial, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, Kahn Singh, plaintiff, sued Narain Singh, defendant, for Rs. 999-14 principal and interest. He alleged that the defendant had had dealings with him for a long time and in the end, on 12th November 1905, struck a balance for Rs. 804-13 in plaintiff's favour, affixing a one anna stamp and his thumb impression and agreeing to pay interest at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem. Defendant denied having ever struck the balance. He admitted that he had dealings with the plaintiff, but stated that 10 years ago the account with the plaintiff was settled and it was decided that the debt due to him (plaintiff) would be paid by his brother. The first Court considered the evidence in the case and had the so-called thumb impression of the defendant examined by the F. P. B. of Phillour, whose report was to the effect that the thumb impression was so blurred that nothing could be made of it. On a review of the whole evidence, that Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not proved his case and so dismissed the suit with costs.

In the course of the proceedings in the first Court, defendant had put in an application, dated the 18th May 1910, and another application, dated the 31st May 1910, in which he stated that acting under pressure of people in the village he had agreed to settle the claim by paying to plaintiff Rs. 200 in cash and by mortgaging with him 12 bighas of land for Rs. 300 thus admitting that he owed Rs. 500. When the case came up before the Divisional Judge on appeal, that Judge agreed with the Court below that the thumb impression was undecipherable, but that the evidence generally for the plaintiff was not interested or partial and that the claim was not a false one. Then taking up the two applications by the defendant aforesaid, the Divisional Judge came to the conclusion that the parties were bound by the compromise aforesaid and that defendant was liable for Rs 500. He, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 500, parties to bear their own costs. Defendant now comes up on the revision side and I have admitted the petition under clause (a). It seems to me that the lower Appellate Court has not dealt with the case correctly. There were really two issues before that Court.

(1). Was there a binding compromise between the parties? And

(2). If not, on the merits has plaintiff proved his case?

Now, as to the second issue, the lower Appellate Court has come to no definite finding. It has simply stated, in a general way, that the evidence for the plaintiff does not appear to it to be interested or partial, but it has not definitely found whether defendant really struck that balance or not. It seems to have gone no further than this that the defendant certainly did owe some money to the plaintiff at some time and that he has not proved that he ever paid it up. But this is not sufficient, for plaintiff clearly based his case upon the acknowledgment by defendant and the balance aforesaid. Further, as regards the first of these two issues, the Court has neither accepted the compromise nor rejected it. If it had accepted the compromise, it should have given a decree for Rs. 200 and 12 bighas of land in mortgage, but it gave a decree for Rs. 500 cash. It is neither a decision in accordance with the compromise nor on the merits of the case. I, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below, and remand the case for re-trial of the appeal on the two issues stated above.

Stamp on this revision will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Case remanded.

Babu D. L. Kastgir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the first defendant in an action for declaration of title to immoveable property and recovery of possession thereof. The plaintiffs-respondents allege that they are under-tenure-holders and have been deprived of the lands comprised in their tenancy by the appellant, the Maharajah of Tipperah, who obtained a decree for rent against the superior tenure-holder on the 29th February 1884 and in execution thereof purchased the properties on the 6th February 1888. The Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiffs upon the question of the existence of the under-tenure. They have also found that it was necessary for the defendant to annul the under-tenure in the manner prescribed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and that he has not complied with the requirements of the statute. The sole point in controversy thus is, whether it was obligatory upon the defendant to follow the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and whether by reason of his failure to do so, the title of the plaintiffs remains unaffected. It has not been and cannot be disputed, in view of the decision of the Full Bench in Titu Bibi v. Mohesh Chunder (1), that if the sale be regarded as a sale under Act VIII of 1869 B. C., the under-tenure was voidable at the election of the auction-purchaser and no formal notice was necessary as required by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The argument before us has, therefore, centred round the question whether the sale was under Act VIII of 1869 B. C. or under Act VIII of 1885.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that although the execution sale took place on the 6th February 1888, the rights of the parties must be deemed to be regulated by the provisions of the Bengal Rent Act (VIII of 1869 B. C.), which was at the time generally, though erroneously, assumed to govern sales in execution of decrees obtained, as in the case before us, before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force on the 1st November 1885. Reference has been made to the cases of Lal Mohun Mookerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (2) and Uzir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha (3), which were subsequently overruled by the decision of the Full Court in the case of Jogodanund Singh v. Amrita Lal (4), to show that when the appellant made his purchase in 1888, the provisions of the Statute of 1869 were understood to be applicable to proceedings in execution of decrees made before the commencement of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Reference has further been made to the case of Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami Naicker (5), to show that the rights of the parties ought to be determined, not with reference to the true construction of the law but according to the erroneous interpretation prevailing at the time. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. Let it be assumed that in 1888 it was erroneously supposed that a sale in execution of a rent-decree obtained before the 1st November 1885 was governed in its incidents according to the provisions of the Statute of 1869. It does not follow by any means that the defendant can resist the claim of the plaintiffs on the ground that he was under an erroneous impression in 1888 and did not take steps to have the notice under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 served within the time prescribed thereby. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Abdul Aziz Khan v. Appayasami Naicker (5) is, as explained in the case of Khoda Baksh v. Sader Pramanik (6), of no assistance to the appellant. That case is not an authority for the broad proposition that the legal effect of a transaction must be determined in all cases with reference to the law as understood or misunderstood at the time the transaction takes place. In fact, such a view is opposed to the elementary doctrine that judicial decisions merely expound the law and do not make new laws. We must take it, therefore, that the rights of the parties in this case have to be determined with reference to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If that position is adopted, there is no room for controversy that the defendant has not acquired any valid title as against the plaintiffs. The notice served under section 167 was admittedly ineffectual to annul the interest of the plaintiffs. It is also conceded that no question of limitation arises, because it has been found by the Courts below that the defendant has not been in occupation for more than twelve years.

The result, therefore, is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

The fact of exceeding the right of private defence, which a man has, cannot make him a member of an unlawful assembly, and he can only be convicted and punished for the individual act which he himself has done in excess of the right of private defence.

Where the accused have been acquitted by the Sessions Judge of a charge under section 325, Indian Penal Code, the High Court can convict them under section 323.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge of Midnapur, convicting the appellants under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing them to two years' rigorous imprisonment, on December 18, 1911.

Mr. Monier, Counsel and Babu Hirendra Nath Ganguly, for the Appellants.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment and sentence of the learned Sessions Judge of Midnapur, who, agreeing with both the assessors, found the appellants, Kunja Bhuniya and Panchu Bhuniya, guilty of the offence of rioting under section 147 and sentenced them to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. There were charges under section 304 read with ss. 149 and 325, Indian Penal Code, read with s. 34 in respect of the injuries caused to one Bariar, who met his death in consequence of the assault. The learned Judge, finding that the fracture of the skull which caused the death, was an isolated act committed by one Srinibash and finding also that the charge under section 304 read with s. 149 was withdrawn, did not take the assessors' opinion on it, but he says in his judgment, and we think erroneously, considering the findings which we shall surely have to come to, that the same remarks really apply to the charge under section 325 read with s. 34 as none of the contusions found on Bariar were severe.

Now what is really found in this case is that the accused party were justified in going to the land with the peon who had a warrant in execution of a Civil Court decree, and that they were interfered with and one of their number, the drummer, was pushed or struck with a lathi by the deceased Bariar, who had come out from his house with a party of his adherents and opposed the lawful delivery of possession. This is what gave the appellants' party the right of private defence, and the Judge seems to change his mind more than once as to whether they had this right of private defence or not, and he finally seems to come to the conclusion that the assembly became unlawful by reason of the accused retaliating when they were obstructed in the lawful exercise of their rights, and he then seems to think that they made an independent attack upon the deceased's party and that the deceased's party then also had a right of private defence. We confess, we are unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Judge. Once an attack was made on persons in the lawful exercise of their right over the property in question, they were undoubtedly entitled to the right of private defence; and the only question which can arise after that is, whether any members of the party individually exceeded that right. People, who were in the exercise of lawful rights, cannot be held to have been members of an unlawful assembly, nor can that assembly become unlawful by reason of their repelling the attack made upon them, by persons who had no right to obstruct them, nor by reason of their exceeding the lawful use of the right they had. We have laid down before, and we desire to lay down again, that the fact of exceeding the right of private defence which a man has cannot make him a member of an unlawful assembly and he can only be convicted and punished for the individual act which he himself has done in excess of the right of private defence; and it is because we think that these two appellants, Kunja and Panchu, did exceed that right in that they continued to beat Bariar with lathis after he had been struck down with a fractured skull and was lying in the water in a practically moribund condition that we have to consider the question of law which we just now pointed out had been wrongly decided by the learned Judge with reference to the charge under section 325 read with section 34. That charge includes the charge under section 323, and notwithstanding the finding of acquittal under section 325, we can, on the whole case being open to us on the charges originally framed, convict and punish any of these appellants on any fact which may be found against him under section 323. What they have been acquitted of is causing fracture to the skull of Bariar, but they have not been acquitted of causing simple hurt in a cruel and unnecessary manner after the deceased had fallen and was incapable of rising. For this, we think they deserve a severe punishment; and, while we are obliged to set aside the conviction and sentence under section 147 as being illegal, we think that it is within our power and also distinctly our duty to convict the appellants under section 323.

We accordingly direct that the appellants, Kunja Bhuniya and Panchu Bhuniya, be rigorously imprisoned for one year under section 323, Indian Penal Code.

With this modification, the appeals are dismissed.

A surety, under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, cannot be made liable for an amount larger than the one for which the principal has executed the bond.

JUDGMENT.—Under section 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the bond is to be executed with or without sureties. The principal executing the bond is the person ordered to do so. The surety or sureties stand security for the principal. It follows that the surety or sureties only stand security for the sum in the bond executed by the principal.

In the present case, the bond executed by the principal was for Rs. 100, but the surety stood security for Rs. 200. This was wrong. It is ordered and directed that, if the conditions of the bond be broken, only Rs. 100 shall be collected from the surety in the event of the principal sum not being recovered from C. E. Ellis.

Revision—Practice—Matters not urged before first Court of revision, if can be urged in moving High Court—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195, 203—Dismissal of complaint, without recording reasons, bad—Complaint against Police officer—Government Circular that offence should be inquired into by first class Magistrate—Meaning of Circular—If case be made over to another Magistrate, that Magistrate to have jurisdiction to decide case finally and order sanction for prosecution—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—Sanction to prosecute.

Matters which are not urged before the first Court of revision, may be urged in moving the High Court.

It is an imperative provision of law that a Magistrate shall briefly record his reasons for dismissing a complaint. There can be no question of irregularity where the provisions of the statute are imperative and are directly disobeyed.

Where a Magistrate did not record any reason for dismissing a complaint but directed that the complainant should be prosecuted under section 211, Indian Penal Code:

Held, that the order of dismissal was without jurisdiction and altogether bad, that there must be a further inquiry and that there cannot be any proceeding under section 211, Indian Penal Code, until such further inquiry has been made.

No Circular of the Government can authorize Magistrates to infringe or in any way alter the statute law.

The Government Circular, directing that when a Police officer is charged with a serious offence the offence should be inquired into at once on the spot by a Magistrate of the first class, does not mean that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate may send the case to a Subordinate Magistrate to hold a local investigation under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, and then afterwards treat it as if the matter was still on his file. What the Circular means is that an experienced first class Magistrate should himself hold the inquiry, and if he is to depute it to another first class Magistrate, the latter officer should from the first have seizin of the case and should investigate it and decide it finally. An order for the prosecution of the complainant for bringing a false case should be given by this latter officer; the former officer who deputes the case to the latter officer has no power to grant the sanction.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tangail, dated February 7th, 1912, directing the prosecution of the complainant under section 211, Indian Penal Code, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, on February 29th, 1912.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Mymensingh to show cause why an order for further inquiry in this case should not be made and why the order for prosecution under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code passed should not be set aside on detailed grounds which, after considering the general allegations of the petitioner we ourselves formulated with some care. The learned Judge takes exception to the Rule on the ground, that these reasons, which, as we have said, we ourselves formulated with some care, are not grounds which were urged before him and this is an infringement of the spirit of the High Court's order that in revision, matters must first of all be urged before the first Court of revision. We do not think it is so. The matter was put before us by the learned Vakil in precisely the same general way in which it was put before the learned Judge, the principal arguments being, firstly, that on the evidence, further inquiry should be ordered, and, secondly, that even if such further inquiry were not ordered, the evidence did not justify the proceeding under section 211. We found that there were rather more intricate and important points involved in this matter; and if the petitioner takes advantage of the superior intelligence and legal training of the learned Vakils of this Court, we cannot see why he should be debarred from arguing even new matter in moving this Court. It may very well be that the learned Vakil in the mofussil neither knew nor appreciated the points which might be raised in a case of this kind.

Now, coming to the merits of the matter; the learned Magistrate admits that he is out of Court, inasmuch as he did not record any reasons for dismissing the complaint. It is an imperative provision of the law, which has been specially enacted in the later amendment of that law in section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. The law says that in such cases, he shall briefly record his reasons for dismissing the complaint. There can be no question of irregularity where the provisions of the statute are imperative and are directly disobeyed. We need not go into the other points inasmuch as if the order of dismissal is without jurisdiction and altogether bad, there must be a further inquiry and there cannot be any proceeding under section 211 until such further inquiry has been made.

Having regard to the very unfortunate results, which a certain Circular of the Government of Bengal which is constantly being referred to before us with regard to inquiries which ought to be made into the conduct of Police officers when they are charged with any offence, we wish to point out that no Circular of the Government can authorize Magistrates to infringe or in any way alter the statute law. We have no doubt that this Circular was never intended to cause any modification in the procedure laid down by the Code of Criminal Procedure, nor does it appear to us to necessitate any alteration in the regular procedure of the Courts. The Government very properly have said that in their opinion when a Police officer is charged with a serious offence, that offence, should be inquired into at once on the spot by a Magistrate of the first class. That does not mean that the Sub-Divisional officer, if he has not got time to make the inquiry himself, can make use of the provisions of section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, and send it to a Subordinate Magistrate to hold a local investigation and examine both sides, and then afterwards treat it as if the matter was still in his file. What the Circular means and what the proper procedure is, is that an experienced first class Magistrate should himself hold the inquiry, if possible, and if he is to depute it to another first class Magistrate, that first class Magistrate should from the first have seizin of the case and should investigate the case in any way he thinks proper and should decide it finally. But the view which some of the lower Courts have taken of the Circular has resulted in their holding a vicarious trial by means of another Magistrate hearing both sides and then ordering prosecution for bringing a false case without having disposed of the original complaint. All sorts of irregularities and failures of justice have followed in consequence. We hope that after this expression of our opinion, the procedure adopted will in future be in conformity with law. In this case, we think the best way to deal with it would be to summon the Sub-Inspector before the Magistrate having jurisdiction and call upon him to answer to those offences which the investigating Magistrate has found there is reason to believe he committed, so as to save all further necessity for inquiries under section 202 or any other preliminary investigation.

The Rule is made absolute in these terms and there will be further inquiry in the manner we have indicated.

Rule made absolute.

CRIMINAL REFERENCE NO. 25 OF 1912.
April 18, 1912.

BHIKA HOSSEIN—ACCUSED.

Police officer, complaint against—Government Circular, meaning of—If case be made over to another Magistrate, the latter to have jurisdiction to decide case finally and order sanction for prosecution—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 203, 476, 529—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211.

When a complaint is made against a Police officer the Magistrate, who entertains the complaint, under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code, must, either go to the spot and make inquiry himself and issue process if he finds it necessary to call upon the accused to answer to anything, or if he makes it over under section 192 to any other Magistrate of the first class, that Magistrate must be vested with full seizin of the case and must continue the inquiry upto the necessary order of discharge, acquittal or conviction, as the case may be.

The Government Circular, with regard to inquirie into complaints against Police officers, does not refer to any kind of local investigation under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, and the local investigation which it mentions, is a full and complete judicial inquiry on the spot after issuing process issued, hearing witnesses on both sides, and taking the explanation of the accused person.

A complaint was made before a District Magistrate against a Police officer. He allowed the complainant to make his complaint before a Deputy Magistrate at the head quarters. That Deputy Magistrate transferred the investigation to the Sub-Divisional officer, at B. After inquiry by the Sub-Divisional officer he found the case to be false. Then the Deputy Magistrate at the head-quarters re-called the case and passed an order under section 476, Criminal Precedure Code, directing the trial of the complainant under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code:

Held, that the order for prosecution under section 476 was without jurisdiction, that the erroneous order of transfer to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate may be cured by section 529 and give jurisdiction to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, but the Deputy Magistrate at the head quarters can have no jurisdiction to re-call the case and deal with it under section 203 or pass any orders under section 476.

This was a Reference under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, from the Sessions Judge of Dinajpur, recommending that so much of the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Dinajpur, dated January 18th, 1912, as directs the trial of the accused under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, for an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code, be set aside.

Mr. J. N. Roy, Counsel and Babu Manmotha Nath Mukerjee, for the Accused.

Mr. Kenrick, K. C., Advocate-General, and Mr. Monier, Counsel, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Dinajpur recommending that the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate at head-quarters under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the trial of the complainant under section 211 and sending the case to the District Magistrate for orders should be set aside. At the same time, he informed us that there was a motion before him to order further inquiry into the matter. He did not think it proper to deal with it himself because it might prejudi our order in regard to the matter under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. He says it seemed to him that the proper course to take was to submit this Reference for decision before proceeding to dispose of the other motion.

We need not, therefore, go into the point of necessity for further inquiry under section 203, as we have dealt with it in a similar case to this in a somewhat lengthy judgment delivered this morning, in which we pointed out that the Government Circular, with regard to inquiries into complaints against Police officers, has been greatly misunderstood, that that Circular cannot be held to refer to any kind of local investigation under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code, and that the local investigation which it mentions is a full and complete judicial inquiry on the spot after process issued and hearing witnesses on both sides and taking the explanation of the accused person.

It is clear that the accused person cannot be called upon for explanation nor can he be called upon to produce witnesses unless and until there is ground for issuing process against him, and the law says that if upon complaint there is ground for issuing process against him, the Magistrate shall issue summons for the attendance of the accused. That is section 204. The idea seems to have been that the Police officer might have an opportunity of defending himself and getting his accused charged with bringing a false case without a trial, that is to say, judicial trial. Now that would be as unfair to the complainant as the converse procedure would be to the accused. We must take it that the Government intended that both sides should have full and free justice, and, therefore, when a complaint is made against a Police officer of a certain offence, under section 202, the Magistrate who entertains the complaint must either go to the spot and make inquiry himself and issue process if he finds it necessary to call upon the accused to answer to anything, or if he makes it over under section 192 to any other Magistrate of the first class, that Magistrate must be vested with full seizin of the case and must continue the inquiry up to the necessary order of discharge, acquittal or conviction, as the case may be. But that is hardly the point which the learned Judge has referred to us. This is a point which he will have to deal in the light of the remarks which we have just made.

The point which he makes is that the Deputy Magistrate at head-quarters had no power as such to transfer the investigation to the Sub-Divisional officer of Balmghat, and the District Magistrate on his explanation has frankly admitted that this is so; but, as he points out, an error made in good faith is cured by section 529. Granted that this is so, this Sub-Divisional officer was vested with full seizin of the case and he alone can inquire into it and pass final orders. But this is just what the petitioner in this case intended to avoid when he went to the District Magistrate with his complaint; and it appears to us that the reasons which weighed with the District Magistrate in allowing him to make his complaint before the officer at head quarters, are equally cogent now. Nothing has occured since to render it the less desirable that some officer other than the local officer at Balmghat should make this inquiry. The cure of the erroneous order of transfer by section 529 would only give the Sub-Divisional officer, as we have seen, jurisdiction; it could not confer jurisdiction on the Deputy Magistrate at head-quarters to re call the case to be dealt with under section 203 or pass any orders under section 476. All those orders, therefore, are ultra vires and without jurisdiction. Whether there should be a further inquiry into the case or not is a matter which the Sessions Judge will now, no doubt, have no difficulty in deciding. But we must make the Rule absolute as far as this Reference is concerned and hold with the learned Judge that the order for prosecution under section 476 is without jurisdiction and must be set aside.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 235, 537—Misjoinder of charges is an illegality.

Proximity of time between acts does not necessarily constitute such acts parts of the same transaction.

A joinder of charges under sections 454 and 325 of the Indian Penal Code is not warranted by section 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, especially where the offence of house trespass is clearly distinct from a subsequent attack on the complainant while on his way to inform the Police.

Nga Ta Pu v. Emperor, 2 L. B. R. 19, referred to.

Misjoinder of charges is an illegality and not a mere irregularity which is covered by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Subrahmania Ayyar v. Emperor, 25 M. 61; 28 I. A 257; 11 M. L. J. 233, 5 Bom. L. R. 540; 5 C.W.N. 866, followed.

SHEOBALAK RAI v. BHAGWAT PANDAY.

Appeal against the conviction and sentence of Special Powers Magistrate of Tharrawaddy, under section 454,75 and 325, Indian Penal Code.

JUDGMENT.—The joinder of charges under section 454 and section 325, Indian Penal Code, in this case was not warranted by the provisions of section 235, Code of Criminal Procedure, as remarked in Nga Ta Pu v. King-Emperor (1). Proximity of time between two acts does not necessarily constitute them parts of the same transaction. The house trespass on the complainant's house was clearly distinct from the subsequent attack on the complainant when he was on his way to inform the Police.

As to the effect of the misjoinder, the Courts are bound by the Privy Council ruling in Subrahmania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (2), which is to the effect that the misjonder is an illegality and not merely an irregularity curable under section 537, Criminal Procedure Code.

The convictions and sentences in this case are, therefere, set aside and it is ordered that the accused shall be tried separately on the two charges.

I note that the aggregate punishment (rigorous imprisonment for eight years) awarded by the Magistrate is, in my opinion, very excessive even when the previous convictions for theft are taken into consideration.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 146—Attachment of disputed property—Order without taking evidence wholly without jurisdiction.

Where a Magistrate makes an order under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code, attaching the disputed property, without taking any evidence, the order is wholly without jurisdiction and should be set aside.

Sheikh Mansur Ali v. Mati Ullh, 12 C.W.N. 896; 8 Cr. L. J. 202; and Bejoy Madhub Chowdhury v. Chandra Nath Chuckerbutty, 5 Ind. Cas. 40; 14 C.W.N. 80; 11 Cr. L. J. 27, referred to.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Arrah, dated March 6th, 1912, attaching the lands in dispute and directing the Police to gather the crops standing thereon, under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Babus Chandra Sekhar Prosad Singh and Jyotish Chandra Bose, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling on the District Magistrate of Shahabad to show cause why the order under section 146 should not be set aside as wholly without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the Magistrate had not taken any evidence as was necessary in order to enable him to determine. if possible, who was in possession.

Now, as regards the duties of the Magistrate under section 146, it was laid down, in the case of Sheikh Mansar Ali v. Mati Ullah (1), that the Magistrate in the absence of information might have himself held a local inquiry under section 148 or in various ways might have informed himself as to the facts of the case; as he had not done so, it was held that he declined jurisdiction and the order complained of was set aside. This ruling has been followed by this Court in the experience of one of us who has been sitting upon this Bench for the greater part of two years, and has never, as far as we know, been differed from. There is a ruling in the case of Bejoy Madhub Chowdhury v. Chandra Nath Chuckerbutty (2), in which the learned Judges profess to distinguish the ruling in Sheikh Mansar Ali v. Mati Ullah (1), on the ground that the Judges set aside the order in that case because the Magistrate did not give sufficient time for regular proceedings to be followed. But as we have just pointed out, that was only one ground and a minor ground for setting aside the order. The main ground was the ground we have just now cited and that ground appears to us to be an obviously good ground, for the law says that it is only if the Magistrate decides that none of the parties was then in such possession, or is unable to satisfy himself as to which of them was in such possession, that he can attach the property, and it is perfectly clear that he cannot say he is unable to satisfy himself if he has never made the slightest effort to do so. He had only to send a Kanungo out to the spot and take his report, or send for the headman of the village and ask him what the facts were; he would have then fully armed himself with jurisdiction, but he did nothing of the kind, and it can be clearly distinguished from Bejoy Madhub Chowdhury v. Chandra Nath Chukerbulty (2), where the Magistrate said he was unable to satisfy himself. He does not even say that he has had the slightest difficulty. His order is as follows,—"No evidence produced by either side; lands attached under section 146." Whatever view, therefore, be taken of the rulings, that order is clearly incompetent and without jurisdiction.

The order must be set aside and the lands released from attachment.

Madras Motor Vehicles Act (I of 1907)—Motor rules, Rule No. 9—Omission to blow the horn at turning—Negligence.

An omission to sound the horn, when a motor car driver goes from the right side to the wrong side of the road for the purpose of turning, which causes a collision with another vehicle, constitutes an offence under Rule 9 of the Rules framed under the Madras Motor Vehicles Act, 1907.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, in C. C. No. 268 of 1912.

FACTS.—The accused, a motor car driver, was charged with reckless and negligent driving of his motor car in a public road under rule 9 of the Government Rules under the Motor Vehicles Act, 1907.

The occupants of the motor car, after making a sketch and a little before lighting-up time, asked accused to drive the car slowly. The driver crossed from his own side of the road to the wrong side to make a turn, and failed to blow his horn at the turn. A horn was heard on the rear and a gentleman passed on a motor bicycle. The car proceeded and there was collision between it and a motor bicycle, which was ridden by one Captain Fraser, and the latter was thrown off the road.

The Magistrate found that the omission to blow the horn, when turning, caused the collision and convicted the accused.

The accused moved the High Court in revision.

Mr. D. Chamier, for the Petitioner,

Mr. J. L. Rozario, for the Crown.

ORDER.—Under Rule 9, a motor car must not be driven in a public place recklessly or negligently or in a manner which is likely to endanger life, etc., or which would be otherwise than reasonable and proper, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the natural condition and use of the road, and to the amount of the traffic which is actually on the road at the time or which may reasonably be expected on it. Under rule 12, every motor driver must have a suitable horn and sound it whenever expedient to prevent danger to the public. In this case, the Magistrate has found that on the Adayar road, while it was still light, but cannot have been long before lighting-up time, the petitioner, for the purpose of turning, had to go on to the wrong side of the road, that, before turning, the occupants of car looked up and down the road without seeing any thing coming, but none-the-less had to desist at the sound of a motor horn to allow a cyclist coming up from behind to pass, that, when the cyclist had passed, the driver resumed the process of turning, and in spite of what had just happened, still omitted to sound his horn, and that, while his car was on the wrong side of the road, another motor cycle came up and collided with it. These findings of fact, in my opinion, afford ample ground for convicting the petitioner for failing to drive in the careful manner prescribed in Rule 9 set out above, and I see no reason to interfere in revision. A case has been cited about Salisbury plain, but nothing can be less like Salisbury plain than the Adayar road about this time of the evening.

The petition is dismissed.

Jurisdiction—Discharge of accused by High Court at Criminal Sessions—Re-trial of accused—Whether order of discharge any bar to re-trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 403, 437.

An order of discharge does not operate as any bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint or upon a Police report or under section 190 (c), Criminal Procedure Code.

Mir Ahwad Hossein v. Mahomed Askari, 29 C. 726 (F. B.), followed.

Therefore, a Magistrate has jurisdiction and is bound to adjudicate on any criminal information properly laid before him against an accused person, who had been discharged by the High Court in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, without the order of discharge being set aside.

Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of 24-Pergannahs to show cause why further inquiry should not be made in the case of the accused on charges under section 376 and other sections of the Indian Penal Code; that is, the Advocate-General entering Nolle prosequi, amounting to the discharge of the accused at his trial before the High Court in its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction, may be set aside.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel and Babu Hemendra Nath Mitter, for the Crown, Petitioner.

Mr. K. N. Chowdhri, Counsel, and Babu Satish Chandra Ghose, for the Accused, Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the question raised on this Rule can be simply answered by pointing out that the order of discharge made by Mr. Justice Stephen cannot be set aside by any tribunal and does not require to be set aside.

Upon all the authorities, an order of discharge does not operate as any bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint or upon a Police report or under section 190 (c), Criminal Procedure Code. This was finally settled in the case of Mir Ahwad Hossein v. Mahomed Askari (1) by a Full Bench of this Court. If this is the rule of law in the case of Presidency and Provincial Magistrates, where the higher Courts have been specially empowered to interfere and order fresh inquiry, and if in those cases, it is unnecessary to set aside the order of discharge or order fresh inquiry, a fortiori it is unnecessary in the case of a discharge by the High Court in the exercise of its Original Criminal Jurisdiction, where there is no authority that can interfere with the order of discharge. We do not order further inquiry in this case since it is unnecessary. It is enough for us to lay down that the Magistrate is mistaken in declining jurisdiction which he undoubtedly has, and he is bound to consider and adjudicate on any criminal information properly laid before him against the accused.

Further inquiry—Process issued and trial held under section 506, Indian Penal Code—Discharge of accused for offence under section 500, if legal—Defamation—Discharge of accused—Magistrate thinking there may be grounds for making defamatory remarks—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 500, 506—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 242, 437.

Process was issued against the accused under section 506, Indian Penal Code, and he was tried under that section. He was discharged of an offence under section 500, Indian Penal Code, and his plea to the charge under section 506 was not recorded.

Held, that the proceedings were irregular; that the plea of the accused ought to have been taken under section 506, as the law provides that in summons cases the first thing to be done is to ask the accused what he has got to say; and that the discharge of the accused under section 500, when he was charged under section 506, was without jurisdiction.

'The accused cannot be discharged of an offence under section 500, Indian Penal Code, because the Magistrate thinks that there may be some substance in the defamatory remarks made by the accused.

Rule against the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why there should not be further inquiry into the case in which the accused was discharged.

Babus Atulya Charan Bose and Ramani Mohan Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhri, Counsel, and Babu Girish Chandra Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling on the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why there should not be a further inquiry into this case inasmuch as there was no summons under section 500, Indian Penal Code. Process was issued under section 506 and the trial took place under that section and the accused has been discharged for an offence under section 500; the proceedings are, therefore, without jurisdiction.

'The learned Magistrate in his explanation says that the issue of process under section 506 was a lapsus calami; he tried the case as one under section 500 and the evidence placed before the Court was entirely evidence in support of a case under that section. But we find that at law at any rate that cannot be so, because the offence complained of as set out in the indictment is criminally intimidating the complainant on or about the 14th June 1911, in Calcutta, section 506, Indian Penal Code, and that was the offence to which the plea of the accused ought to have been taken. Apparently, the Magistrate did not think it necessary to do so. This is also an irregularity. The law provides in summons cases that the first thing to be done is to ask the accused what he has got to say.

Then, as regards the trial which is said to be under section 500, we can only say that if it was intended to be under that section, the points of law which arise in a case of defamation have been wholly ignored. The learned Magistrate says that the complainant had some ground for making the defamatory statements he did. That does not justify him in any way whatever under section 500. It is only when a person to whom accusation may be preferred in good faith against another is a person who has lawful authority to deal with the subject-matter of the accusation, that the accusation is justified; and if you tell a man he is guilty of fraud, the only case in which you can plead good faith is if you made that accusation before a Court properly constituted for the purpose, and even then the onus is on the defendant to prove his good faith. There is here no question of justification. The question of good faith is entirely ignored, and merely because the Magistrate thinks that there may be some substance in the defamatory remarks he discharges the accused. This is, of course, not in accordance with law and there must be a further judicial inquiry in which the defamatory matter must be set out clearly under section 500, Indian Penal Code, and the accused must be asked to justify it, if he can, and then be tried under that section according to law.

Defamation—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 500—Receiver—Charge of defamation against Receiver—Sanction of Court, whether necessary—Defamation arising out of matter of repairs of estate under charge of Receiver.

It is not a general rule of law that in all criminal proceedings, the leave of the Court is not necessary to prosecute a Receiver.

Dunne v. Kumar Chandra Kishore, 30 C. 593; 7 C. W. N. 390; and Fink v. Corporation of Calcutta, 30 C. 721; 7 C. W. N. 706, relied upon.

ANATH NATH DEY v. MOHENDRA NATH.

Sanction is required to proceed against a Receiver when he acts for the protection of the estate in his hands.

Therefore, where the alleged act of defamation arises out of a matter of repairs of the estate in the possession of the Receiver and is based upon a letter in which he claims that he is acting on behalf of the estate, a charge of defamation aganist the Receiver is incompetent without the leave of the Court.

As the Receiver in this case was appointed by the original side of the High Court, the case was sent to that Court for disposal of the question whether leave of the Court is required.

Rule calling on the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta to show cause why the hearing of the case should not be transferred from the file of the Second Presidency Magistrate to that of any other Magistrate.

Babus Atulya Charan Bose and Ramani Mohan Chatterjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel and Babu Girish Chandra Pal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling on the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta to show cause why the hearing of this case on remand should not be transferred to some other Presidency Magistrate, on the ground that the learned Second Presidency Magistrate has misconceived our orders and is not prepared to try the case from the beginning in accordance with the directions we have given.

Now, had this matter been before us as an ordinary case in this simple form, we should have felt disposed to make the Rule absolute and to ask the Chief Presidency Magistrate to take the case back to his own file and either dispose of it himself or make it over to some other Presidency Magistrate. But an objection has been raised, and very properly raised, by the learned Standing Counsel, who appears for the Receiver who is the accused in this case, that the bringing of this case without the leave of the Court which appointed the Receiver is an act of contempt and that the case is incompetent without such sanction.

We have carefully considered the authorities and we have come to the conclusion that the matter is one at least of great doubt, and if there is any doubt, then it is clear that we cannot decide the jurisdiction of the original side of the Court. It was laid down in A. M. Dunne v. Kumar Chandra Kisore (1) that a Receiver cannot be made a party to section 145 proceedings which are criminal proceedings. It is, therefore, not a general rule of law that in all criminal proceedings, the leave of the Court is not necessary to prosecute. It was thrown out as a query in that case that a Receiver can neither sue nor be sued without the leave of the Court; and in a subsequent case in the same volume, W. R. Fink v. The Corporation of Calcutta (2), a Court of Criminal revision held that the case of A. M. Dunne v. Kumar Chandra Kishore (1), which we have just, referred to is an authority for the point that a Receiver cannot be made a party to any suit or proceeding without the leave of the Court appointing him. The word proceeding obviously has been added because it has been held that he could not be made a party to section 145 proceedings. But the word equally applies to a prosecution for defamation. An application to the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate for process is a proceeding and it is at that stage that the sanction became necessary, if it was necessary at all. Now, it so happens in this case that the accused is a defendant in the action and a part owner in the property as well as a Receiver under the Code; and it is argued that it was in his capacity as owner that he was brought up before the Municipal Magistrate for neglecting to execute certain repairs out of which this action has arisen. But it was held in the case of A. B. Miller v. Ram Ranjan Chakravarti (3), that the receiver of the High Court does not represent the owner, of the estate for which he is the Receiver, but is merely an officer of the Court and as such cannot sue or be sued except with the permission of the Court, so that where he even happens to be part owner he cannot be brought up before the Municipal Bench for neglect to repair a building within the Corporation of Calcutta except with the leave of the High Court; and this was what was decided in the case of W. R. Fink v. The Corporation of Calcutta (2), to which we have just referred. That being so, it appears to us that the alleged act of defamation, arising out of this very matter of the repairs and based upon a letter which claims for the accused that he is acting on behalf of the estate, would not lie without the leave of the Court. The whole matter seems to be of a very slight and unimportant character, that the words are in themselves defamatory and require justification. But the portion of the letter which seems to bring the case within the rule that sanction is required when the act of the Receiver is done for the protection of the estate in his hands, is contained in the last paragraph and is as follows:—"However, from your conduct it appears that your intention was not only to interfere with my proper management of the estate but to involve the same in unnecessary expenses, a thing most reprehensible for a tenant."

It is not for us to decide whether sanction is necessary but there being doubt on the point, it is our duty to stay the proceedings until the question has been decided by this Court sitting on the original side. The petitioner is at liberty to move the Court on the original side and obtain an order either giving him leave to prosecute or stating that leave is not necessary. In the event of his obtaining either of these orders, the Chief Presidency Magistrate will proceed to deal with the case himself or to make it over to some other Magistrate as we have suggested above.

The Rule will be thus partially made absolute and partially discharged in terms of the judgment we have delivered. In the meantime, further proceedings will be stayed and the record will remain with the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

Rule partly made absolute.

Application by one Anath Nath Dey for an order that sanction, if necessary, be granted to prosecute Mohendra Nath Srimony, the defendant No. 2, in the aforesaid suit, who is a Receiver appointed by the Court in the above suit under sections 500 and 503 of the Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Pugh, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. C. Ghose, for the Receiver.

JUDGMENT.—All that I am prepared to say is that on the petition coming on before me, it appears to me no sanction is necessary to proceed against a Receiver appointed by the Court for a breach of the ordinary Criminal law of the country. The cases in which the sanction of Court has been held necessary are that class of cases, such as that reported as Fink v. The Corporation of Calcutta (1) where the Receiver was prosecuted as owner and occupier of certain premises held as in the possession of the Court, and the offence against him was under the Calcutta Municipal Act that the premises were in a state dangerous or unfit for human habitation. In that case, it was rightly held that the Receiver was not criminally responsible and the Court itself was in possession of the premises in respect of which the prosecution was instituted. In another case mentioned by Mr. Ghosh, an Advocate of this Court was prosecuted under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and Prinsep and Handley, JJ., held that the prosecution did not lie without sanction. There the evidence was that the Receiver was in possession of immoveable property in respect of which the prosecution was instituted and that in fact he was in such possession in obedience to the order of the Court.

(1) 30 C. 721; 7 C. W. N. 706.

But that it is necessary to obtain the sanction of this Court or of any other Civil Court for the prosecution of a person, who happens to be a Receiver appointed by the Court, in respect of any criminal act committed during his tenure of such office, I do not agree. I make no order on this petition.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 423 (1) (d), 439, 476 (1) and (2)—Revision—High Court's power to make consequential order.

Under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a High Court has power to revise an order made under section 476 (1) and to direct that the proceedings started under section 476 (2) should cease.

Noor Mahomed v. Aung Gyi, 3 L. B. R. 234; 12 Bur. L. R. 318; 5 Cr. L. J. 123, referred to.

Section 423, clause (1) (d) gives a High Court power to make any consequential order that may be just and proper. Where an order under section 476 (1) is set aside, the proceedings under section 476 (2) should also cease.

Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Prome, for revision of the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Prome, dated 8th November 1911, directing the prosecution of the applicant for giving false evidence under section 193, Indian Penal Code.

ORDER.—I have gone through the different proceedings and agree with the learned Sessions Judge that there is ground for revising the Magistrate's order which was passed under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That this Court has the power to revise such an order was laid down in the case of Noor Mahomed v. Aung Gyi (1). The Magistrate to whom the case was sent has proceeded under section 476 (2) and so the further question arises as to whether, if the order passed under section 476 (1) is set aside, this Court can stop the proceedings of the Magistrate acting under section 476 (2).

Section 439 of the Code gives this Court power, when acting in revision, to exercise the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by section 423, and clause (1) (d) of that section gives the power to make any consequential order that may be just or proper. It seems to be only just and proper that, if an order under section 476 (1) is set aside, the proceedings under section 476 (2) shall also cease. To allow them to proceed would render of no avail an order cancelling an order under section 476 (1) and would permit a trial to be brought to a conclusion for proceeding with which it has been ruled that no grounds exist. Furthermore, the order under section 476 (1) having been set aside, no material exists on which proceedings under section 476 (2) can be based.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Prome, sending the case of Mg. San Tin for trial to the Court of the second Additional Magistrate, Prome, under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and I further direct that the proceedings now being taken against Mg. San Tin by the second Additional Magistrate cease and that Mg. San Tin be discharged of the charge laid against him.

Order set aside.

Suburbs of Calcutta—Station of Howrah—Order and good Government—Act XXI of 1857, s. 2, cl. 1—Reasonable suspicion—Accused found to be in possession of cement—No evidence that cement missing from complainant's premises—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 411—Difference between s. 411 and s. 2, cl. 1 of Act XXI of 1857—Stolen article—Possession.

The accused was convicted for being in possession of a certain quantity of cement; and because there was a heap of cement lying on the premises of the East Indian Railway Company at L. and because the accused was a mistry in the employ of the Company at L., it was assumed that this cement was stolen from the Company:

Held, that, in the absence of any evidence that shortly or immediately previous to the finding of the cement in the possession of the accused, a quantity of cement belonging to the Company had been missing, there could not be any reasonable suspicion which would bring the case within section 2 of Act XXI of 1857.*

The only difference which section 2 of this Act makes between an offence under this Act and one under section 411, Indian Penal Code, is that it is not necessary under this Act to offer proof that the stolen property has been in the hands of a third person who actually stole it, as is the case under section 411.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Howrah, dated May 9th, 1912, convicting the petitioner under section 2 of Act XXI of 1857, and sentencing him to a fortnight's rigorous imprisonment, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the District Magistrate of Howrah on May 10th, 1912.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Howrah to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner should not be set aside on the ground that there is no finding that the cement was stolen property, and also why the Act XXI of 1857 was used in this case when the case appears to fall under section 411, Indian Panal Code.

Now we find that this person has been convicted for being in possession of a certain quantity of cement; and because there was a heap of cement lying on the premises of the East Indian Railway Company at Lilua, and because the petitioner is an electric mistry in the employ of the East Indian Railway Company at Lilua, it was calmly assumed that this cement was stolen from the Railway Company. This we need hardly point out is not a reasonable suspicion. It would have been perfectly easy to call the officer in charge of the cement at Lilua to state that shortly or immediately previous to the finding of this cement in the possession of the accused, a certain quantity of cement belonging to the Company had been missing. Then there might have been reasonable suspicion which would bring the case within the meaning of this Act. The only difference which section 2 of this Act appears to us to make between an offence under this Act and an offence under section 411, Indian Penal Code, is that it is not necessary under this Act to offer proof that the stolen property has been in the hands of a third person who actually stole it as is the case under section 411. But beyond that, it is impossible to see how there can be a reasonable suspicion unless the owner comes forward and says that his property has been stolen, for if no cement was ever stolen from the East Indian Railway, there can be no reasonable suspicion that a man carrying cement stole it or received it knowing it to be stolen. On the principle enunciated in the judgment and the explanation of the lower Court, it would appear that if a person in Howrah was found in possession of a certain amount of coal, he might reasonably be suspected of stealing it from the East Indian Railway Company, because there is no doubt a heap of coal on the premises of that Company. There is absolutely no difference between the two cases.

The sanction and sentence must be set aside and the accused acquitted and released from his bail.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 94—Production of document or other thing incriminating accused—Issue of summons to accused for—Whether permissible.

It is competent to a Magistrate to issue summons to an accused person under section 94, Criminal Procedure Code, to produce a document or other thing, the production of which might tend to incriminate him.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the 2nd Class Magistrate of Kawali, dated 5th December 1911, in C. C. No. 344 of 1911.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, the Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The question raised in this petition is, whether it is competent to a Magistrate under section 94, Criminal Procedure Code, to issue a summons to an accused person to produce a document or other thing, the production of which might tend to incriminate him. The words of the section are general. No exception is made in favour of an accused person, though several exceptions are specified in clause (3) of the section. The question was considered at length in the case reported in Ahmed Mahomed Jackariah and Co. v. Ahmed Mahomed (1), and it was held that it was clearly the intention of the Legislature to make section 94 applicable to an accused person, notwithstanding that this involved a departure from the general principle of the English law. A similar view was apparently taken in the case reported in In the matter of the complaint of H. H. The Nizam of Hyderabad v. A. M. Jacob (2). A contrary view was taken in the case reported in Ishwar Chandra Ghoshal v. Emperor (3), in which the learned Judges referred to sections 342 and 343, Criminal Procedure Code, which were not referred to in the two Calcutta cases noted above. In Ishwar Chandra Ghoshal v. Emperor (3), however, no one appeared to support the Magistrate's action and the learned Judges did not refer to cases of Mahomed Jackariah and Co. v. Ahmed Mahomed (1) and In the matter of complaint of H. H. The Nizam of Hyderabad v. A. M. Jacob (2). The Magistrate always has the power to issue a search warrant to obtain the production of a document or other thing in the possession of the accused. The issue of a summons is a milder means of attaining the same end. I am of opinion that the ruling in Ahmed Mahomed Jackariah and Co. v. Ahmed Mahomed (1) should be followed. I, therefore, dismiss the petition.

Petition for revision, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of the order of Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated 6th March 1912, modifying that of the Magistrate, 1st class, Pind Dadan Khan, dated 20th December 1911, convicting petitioner.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been found guilty of the offence of defamation under section 500, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500 or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for one year. In the course of a criminal trial for an offence under section 309, Indian Penal Code, the petitioner, who was examined as a witness for the prosecution, made a statement which has been held by both the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge in the present case to have been defamatory of the complainant, Bodh Raj. The question for decision in this revision is whether the petitioner is not liable to be criminally prosecuted for the offence of defamation under the Indian Penal Code because the defamatory statement was made by him as a witness in a judicial proceeding. It is urged by the petitioner's Counsel that witnesses as a class are exempt from the operation of section 499, Indian Penal Code, in respect of defamatory statements, made by them concerning any persons in their character as witnesses, such statements being privileged by the occasion; and that, therefore, the petitioner in the present case has been wrongly convicted of the offence of defamation. In support of his contention, Counsel has cited Manjaya v. Shesha Shetti (1), Queen Empress v. Govinda Pillai (2), In the matter of Alraja Naidu (3), Queen-Empress v. Babaji (4), Queen Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (5) and Woolfun Bibi v. Jesarat Sheikh (6). These authorities, no doubt, support the position taken up by him, but the contrary view has been held by two Division Benches of this Court in Fateh Muhammad v. Empress (7) and in Kirpal Singh v. Hukam Singh, (8), which is printed as a foot-note to the case just cited, and by Sir Meredyth Plowden in Maya Dass v. Queen-Empress (9). In a recent case in the Allahabad High Court, Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (10), the majority of the Judges have taken the same view as this Court; and we notice that in Queen Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (5), Mr. Justice Telang observed that if the point which arose in the case before him had been res integra, he would have been of opinion that a witness could be prosecuted under the Indian Penal Code for defamation in respect of statements made by him in the course of a judicial proceeding. The learned Judge felt constrained to follow the decision to the contrary which had already been given by his own Court [Queen Empress v. Babaji (4)] and which was in conformity with the opinion expressed by the High Court of Madras.

The question under consideration has been discussed so fully by this Court in the three cases cited above and also by the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (10), that we need say no more in this place than that we entirely agree in the view taken in those cases; and we accordingly hold that the petitioner in this case was not exempted from the jurisdiction of a Criminal Court in respect of the defamatory statement made by him concerning the complainant. Both the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have held that that statement was not covered by any of the exceptions to section 499, Indian Penal Code, and it is, therefore, clear that the petitioner's conviction for defamation was fully justified.

We dismiss the revision.

A High Court has no power to send for the record of a case which in intention and in fact has been begun and continued under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Application for revision by Shohrat Singh.

Mr. Sorabji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Howard, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The proceedings, out of which this application has arisen, were proceedings instituted by one Daryao. He came to the Magistrate alleging that he was in possession of certain landed property, that a dispute likely to cause breach of the peace existed regarding it and that this dispute he further alleged came from the side of one Shohrat Singh. He asked the Magistrate to take action under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Thus, he put before the Magistrate a case which came clearly within the provision of section 145 of the Code provided always that he established the fact that he was in possession and that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed.

The Magistrate then, after considerable delay and various intermediate orders issued, made an order in writing stating that he was satisfied on the ground that a breach of peace did exist about land within the local limits of his jurisdiction and he required Shohrat Singh and Daryao to put in written statements of their respective claims as regards the fact of their actual possession of the subject of dispute. This application and the findings mentioned above gave the learned Magistrate jurisdiction to proceed under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code. I am told that after he had reached this stage, the Magistrate went wrong and passed certain orders which are said to be without jurisdiction. But, as I understand the law, I have no power to send for the record of a case, which in intention and in fact has been begun and has been continued under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code. If the Magistrate has fallen into error, the person aggrieved is not without remedy, but the remedy is not one by way of review from this Court. This has been laid down by this Court in a case which appears to me precisely similar to this [Jhingai Singh v. Ram Partab (1)] and with still greater emphasis by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Hurbullubh Narain Singh v. Luchmeswar Singh (2). The application before me is dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—False evidence—Offence against public justice—Sanction to prosecute—Discretion of Judge.

An offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code is an offence against public justice. The person best qualified to say whether a prosecution should or should not be instituted is the Judge before whom the evidence was given and who had considered all the facts of the case.

Criminal revision against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Meerut.

Mr. Ahmad Kareem, for the Applicant.

Mr. C. Dillon, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This petition for revision arises out of an order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge of Meerut. That Judge was asked to grant sanction for the prosecution of eight men. These eight men were witnesses for the defence in the case of King-Emperor v. Behary, decided by that particular Judge himself. After he had decided the case, he took action under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code and directed the prosecution of such witnesses as he thought it desirable to prosecute. He refused to give sanction for the prosecution of the eight persons concerned in this petition, on the grounds that if they did perjure themselves, they played a very secondary part and the chief witnesses have been ordered to be prosecuted. An offence under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code is an offence against public justice. The person best qualified to say whether a prosecution should or should not be instituted is the learned Judge before whom the evidence was given and who had considered all the facts of the case. It may well be, and unfortunately too often is, the case at present in this country that false evidence is given in Courts without compunction and without remembrance on the part of the persons concerned that they are committing an offence of a serious nature. I do not, however, consider that the best or most effective way of checking this kind of offence is by a wholesale prosecution of all persons who may be considered to have given false evidence. The interests of justice and of the public are best secured by the prosecution of ring-leaders and by deterrent sentences in their case when they are found to have intentionally given false evidence. In a case like the present where the judgment shows that the learned Sessions Judge was fully cognizant of the facts of the case and had carefully considered the ends of justice, I am not prepared to interfere with his discretion in the matter I, therefore, reject the application.

Application rejected.

Clause (2) of section 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908 applies to an application for a certificate under Order XLV of the Civil Procedure Code, that is, the time spent in obtaining copies of the judgment and decree of the High Court is to be excluded in computing the period of six months within which an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council must be presented.

This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of the High Court made on June 3rd, 1910. Copies of the judgment and decree were applied for on June 12th, 1910 and they were ready on August 30th, 1910. Application for leave was presented on December 5th, 1910.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by way of a petition to the Court under Order XLV, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, by one desiring to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

A preliminary objection has been raised that the application is out of time, and in support of this, it is argued that clause (2) of section 12 of the new Limitation Act does not apply to an application for a certificate under Order XLV of the Code. But the answer to this is furnished by the phraseology of Article 179 of the first Schedule of the Limitation Act, which describes an application of this kind as an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is manifest, therefore, that clause (2) of section 12 of the Limitation Act does apply to applications such as the present, and the objection fails.

As the decree from which it is sought to appeal is one of reversal, the only question is whether the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute is of the requisite amount, or whether it involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to property of the value of Rs. 10,000

The facts are these: The appeal now before us relates to rent, and it is said that the tenants have been evicted from a part of the land included in the tenancy, and the result has been that the High Court has decided that the rent is suspended and no claim, therefore, lies as long as the eviction continues.

The amount of the rent is Rs. 1,300 and odd, and it is claimed on the part of the applicant that if this sum of Rs. 1,300 is capitalized, it will reach a sum of more than Rs. 10,000. Further, it has been said on the part of the applicant that the eviction has been brought about by the creation of leases in favour of the tenants in perpetuity which cannot be brought out, and, therefore, the dispossession must continue for ever. It is accordingly claimed that the amount of the capitalized value of Rs. 1,300 would be more than Rs. 10,000; but the other side says that the capitalized value falls far short of that amount.

We have not before us the materials necessary for the decision of this question, and we must, therefore, utilize the provisions of rule 5, Order XLV of the Code, and refer the dispute to the Court of first instance to determine the amount or value and return its report to this Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 23, 25 cl. (a), 76—Ejectment—Excavation of tank—Suit for ejectment—Subsequent suit for rent—Forfeiture—Waiver—Improvement—Use of land rendering same unfit for purposes of tenancy—Digging tank which is a practical necessity—Ground of ejectment.

SOURINDRA MOHAN v. RAHIM BAKHSH.

The plaintiffs instituted a suit for ejectment against certain occupancy-raiyats under clause (a) of section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A suit for rent was subsequently commenced in respect of a period subsequent to the alleged forfeiture:

Held, that there was no waiver at the date of the commencement of the suit, and the claim for ejectment could not be defeated on that ground.

Mansur Ali v. Abdul Karim, 1 Ind. Cas. 753; 10 C. L. J. 187, referred to.

Before a landlord can succeed in an action under section 25, clause (a), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is obligatory upon him to prove that the land has been used in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy; what has to be considered is the effect of the act upon the entire land comprised in the tenancy.

Therefore, where a holding comprises 66 bighas and the tenants sub-let 4 bighas to an under-lessee who excavated a tank on 2 bighas, and it was found that the tank had not rendered the land of the tenancy unfit for the purposes thereof, but was a practical necessity:

Held, that the raiyat could not be ejected under clause (2) of section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Nadia, dated October 7th, 1909, affirming that of the Munsif of Ranaghat, dated May 17th, 1909.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs sued to eject their tenants for having in collusion with their under-tenants excavated a tank on the land in suit and thereby rendered it unfit for the purposes of cultivation. The tenants pleaded that as occupancy-raiyats, they had the right to use the land in any manner which did not materially impair its value and that the tank was an improvement to the holding.

The Munsif found that the tenants had an occupancy-right, that the tank was an improvement, which had considerably increased the value of the holding in suit, and that the claim of ejectment could not succeed on the ground of waiver. On the last question, the Munsif said:—

"It appears also that even after the excavation of that tank in Baishakh 1313, the plaintiffs brought a suit for rent, against the tenants in respect of the jama in question, which fell due up to the year 1314, and obtained a decree. The plaintiffs, by their conduct, therefore, must be held to have waived their right to ejectment. [Kali Krishna Tagore v. Fuzle Ali Chowdhry (1), Jogeshuri v. Mahomed Ebrahim (2) and Kedarnath Nag v. Khetturpaul (3)].

(1) 9 C. 843; 12 C. L. R. 592.
(2) 14 C. 33.
(3) 6 C. 34.

The Munsif dismissed the suit, and the plaintiffs appealed to the District Court, which said:—

"It appears from the plaintiffs' evidence that the excavation took place in 1313 and that in the year following, 1314, they sued the tenants for rent of the holding and obtained a decree. There are rulings which make it clear that such conduct on their part amounts to a waiver by them of a right to eject the tenants on the ground of such excavation [Kedarnath Nag v. Khetturpaul(3), Kali Krishna Tagore v. Fuzle Ali Chowdhury (1) and Jogeshuri v. Mahomed Ebrahim (2)]. It is immaterial, I think, under such circumstances, that the tenants did not raise the question of waiver definitely in their written statement. The point arises directly from the evidence on the record and it was taken in argument in the lower Court on the tenants' behalf. Moreover, I think that the tank which was dug with the full knowledge of the plaintiffs and which they have not cited any evidence to show to have been unnecessary, may be regarded as having been required. There is equally no evidence on the side of the tenants as to no other water-supply being available, but it may be assumed that the sub-tenant would not have spent a sum, which is said to have been about Rs. 3,000, and must, for the size of the tank covering some 2 bighas of land, have been considerable, unless it was considered a practical necessity. Under these circumstances, it is difficult to say that the tank has otherwise than improved the holding. It certainly is not shown to have impaired its value."

The appeal was accordingly dismissed, and the plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Babus Iwarka Nath Chakravarti, and Mohendra Kumar Mitra, for the Appellants.

Babu Hem Chandra Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs in an action in ejectment. The plaintiffs commenced this action under clause (a) of section 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to eject the defendants on the ground that they, as occupancy-raiyats, had used the land comprised in their holding in a manner which rendered it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy, because they had excavated a tank on the land in suit. The Courts below have concurrently dismissed the suit on two grounds, namely, first, that the plaintiffs had waived their right to eject the defendants, as, subsequent to the excavation of the tank which is alleged to have caused a forfeiture of the tenancy, they received rent from the defendants, and, secondly, that the excavation of the tank had improved the holding and was not shown to have impaired its value. This decision has been assailed before us on behalf of the plaintiffs on two grounds; namely, first, that the question of waiver ought not to have been decided because it was not expressly raised either in the pleadings or in the issues, and that in any view, upon the admitted facts, no question of waiver arises; and secondly, that the facts found are not sufficient to show that the excavation of the tank constitutes an improvement within the meaning of section 76 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, the first contention is well founded, but the second must be overruled.

In support of the first ground, it is pointed out that the tank was excavated in April 1906 and that the notices required by section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as a necessary preliminary to the commencement of an action under clause (a) of section 25 were served on the 20th April 1907. The present suit was instituted on the 31st March 1908. A suit for rent was subsequently commenced on the 13th July 1908. Consequently, although, as explained by this Court in the cases of of Kali Krishna Tagore v. Fuzle Ali Chowdhry (1), Jogeshuri v. Mahomed Ebrahim (2), Sita Nath v. Basudeb (4), a landlord may, by acceptance of rent from his tenant subsequent to the date of forfeiture of the tenancy, be deemed to have waived his right to eject him, there was no waiver at the date of the commencement of the suit [Cf. Mansar Ali v. Abdul Karim(5)]. Possibly, the claim for rent might have been successfully defeated by the plea that as the plaintiffs had already sued the defendants as trespassers, it was not competent to them to hold them liable for rent. We are, however, not concerned with the decision in the rent suit. The conclusion at which we arrive is that the claim for ejectment cannot be defeated on the ground of waiver.

In support of the second ground, it has been contended, upon the authority of the decision in Govinda Chandra Basu v. Kamiruddi Soyal (6), that in order to constitute an improvement, it is necessary to show that the tank in question was excavated for the storage, supply or distribution of water for the purpose of agriculture or for the use of men and cattle employed in agriculture. It may be conceded that this position is well founded and that the finding of the District Judge is defective from this point of view, but it is obvious that it is unnecessary for the defendants to establish that the tank in question was an improvement within the meaning of section 76 to enable them to defeat the claim for ejectment. Section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that when a raiyat has a right of occupancy in respect of any land, he may use the land in any manner which does not materially impair the value of the land or render it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. Section 25, clause (a), then provides that an occupancy-raiyat shall not be ejected by his landlord from his holding except in execution of a decree for ejectment passed on the ground that he has used the land in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. Consequently, before a landlord can succeed in an action under section 25, clause (a), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is obligatory upon him to prove that the land has been used in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. It is obvious that what has to be considered is the effect of the act upon the entire land comprised in the tenancy. In the case before us, the holding comprises sixty-six bighas. The tenants sub-let four bighas to an under-lessee who excavated a tank on two bighas. The Courts below have concurrently found that the excavation of the tank had not rendered the land of the tenancy unfit for the purposes thereof. The District Judge has also found that the tank was a "practical necessity." The inference follows that the landlords have not established that the land comprised in the holding has been used in a manner which renders it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. Their claim for ejectment, therefore, cannot be sustained.

APPELLANTS
versus
HAJIMIYA MAHAMAD AMIN—
RESPONDENT.

Co-sharers—Possession—Adverse possession—Assertion of hostile title—Disclaimer of title—Mortgage by co-owners—Clandestine redemption and re-mortgage by one owner—Right of the other owner to redeem mortgage.

The possession of joint property by one co-sharer does not constitute adverse possession against any other co-sharer until there has been a disclaimer of the latter's title by open assertion of a hostile title by the former.

A. and B. jointly mortgaged certain property in 1866 to C. In 1882, A. alone redeemed the mortgage without the knowledge of B. and, shortly after, A. re-mortgaged the property to D., without B.'s knowledge.

D. leased the property to C.'s heirs who were already in possession as first mortgagees. No knowledge of exclusion and adverse possession by A. could be imputed to B.

In 1908, B. sued to redeem the mortgage of 1866:

Held, that so long as A. took no steps to assert a title against B. in such a manner as to challenge his right to redeem his interest from A., the possession of A. or his mortgagee D. would not be adverse to B. except in so far as the mortgagee might set up a limited title under Article 134 of the Limitation Act.

Vasudev v. Balaji, 26 B. 500, explained and distinguished.

Ramchandra v. Sadashiv, 11 B. 422, Bhaudin v. Sheikh Ismail, 11 B. 425, Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin, 16 B. 191 and Vithal v. Dinkarao, 3 Bom. L. R. 685, relied upon.

Appeal against the order passed by the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 335 of 1909, reversing the decree passed by, and remanding the suit to, the Subordinate Judge at Mahad, in Civil Suit No. 228 of 1908.

The appeal was heard by Beaman and Hayward, JJ.; their Lordships differed in opinion and delivered the following

JUDGMENTS

BEAMAN, J.—All the facts material to be known are that a mortgage was jointly effected by Sakhling and Anapurnabai. Whether these two persons were joint mortgagors, or tenants-in-common, does not appear and, in my opinion, is now immaterial.

Subsequently, Anapurnabai redeemed alone, without the knowledge of Sakhling. This was in 1882. On the same day she, re-mortgaged, without the knowledge of Sakhling, to the defendants. The actual physical possession was not changed. The old mortgagees are found to have remained in possession as before under the new mortgage, but whether as mortgagees of the previous mortgage or after having attorned to the new mortgagees does not appear.

The plaintiff sues as the assignee of the heirs of Sakhling to redeem.

According to the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Vasudev v. Balaji (1), the effect of the redemption of a mortgage by one of two or more joint or co-mortgagors, is to extinguish the whole equity of redemption. It is true that he expressly declines to decide such a case as this where the redemption was clandestine and without the knowledge of the co-mortgagor. This was in reference to the argument that to do so would be to prejudice co-mortgagors who were no parties to the proceedings of covert redemption. I cannot entertain the slightest doubt, having regard to what was being then urged on behalf of the plaintiff and the context, that this reservation was limited to the rival contentions, (a) for the plaintiff, that his equity was not, and (b) for the defendant, that it was, extinguished by the redemption. In the case before Jenkins, C. J., the redemption was made by one of two co-mortgagors, against both of whom a decree for sale had been obtained by the mortgagee. But the principle of the case as a whole, so far as it goes, is unmistakably clear. Redemption by one of two or more co-mortgagees extinguishes the entire equity of redemption, and all that survives in the co-mortgagors, who were not co-redeeming mortgagors, is a right to have their proportionate shares of the mortgaged property on paying off their proportionate share of the mortgage-debt, costs, principal and interest, etc. And the mortgagor who redeems has a lien or charge on the shares of his co-mortgagors to that extent, including, of course, their share of all the expenses legitimately incurred for the purpose of saving the property. This being so, it appears to make little difference in theory whether the co-mortgagors did or did not know of the redemption. For if such redemption has in law the effect of putting an end to the equity, then a new relation is immediately set up as between the one mortgagor who has redeemed and the other mortgagors who have not. The former has a lien on the shares of the latter. He may be in or out of possession. If in, then he holds their shares subject to the charge. And in a subsequent suit to obtain possession by the mortgagors out of possession of their shares, the Court held very emphatically that Article 144 applied, and that as the suit had not been brought within twelve years of the redemption, the co-mortgagors were time-barred. This could only mean one thing, that in the opinion of the learned Chief Justice, the possession of the lienor in possession was adverse to his co-mortgagors from the moment of redemption. It is not a case of any person holding adversely to the equity of redemption, which, in spite of Cholmondeley v. Clinton(2), and much contained in the case of Tarubai v. Venkatrao(3), I think, can be easily shown in every case to be impossible unless expressly made possible by Statute (Article 134). It means only this, that in certain circumstances the equity of redemption is extinguished by operation of law. It has, indeed, been used up and exhausted. For it is a fundamental principle of the law of mortgage that a mortgage must be redeemed in its entirety, not piecemeal. In the Full Bench decision of Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (4), it was held with equal clearness and emphasis that when one of several tenants-in-common mortgages, without the knowledge or consent of his co-tenants, the whole or any part of the tenancy-in-common, the possession of the mortgagee going in under his mortgage, is "ownership" from the first moment of taking possession not only against his own mortgagors but against all the co-tenants who should have been but were not mortgagors. The basis of the reasoning of Farran, C. J., on this point is too clear to admit of serious dispute. The quality of the possession as between parties contending on the one hand that it was, on the other, that it was not, adverse, is to be determined by the intention of the person possessing. In the case of mortgagees put in under a mortgage, it must always (unless the contrary be shown, which I think it never can) be regarded as adverse alike to the mortgagors and all other persons who might have been but were not mortgagors. The reasoning summarily brushes aside all considerations touching the knowledge of the co-mortgagors and to that extent seems to me to make a large advance on the old and well settled rule that in the case of tenants-in-common, one cannot be excluded unless the act amounts in law to an ouster, in which this much has, I think, always held to be included, that he must know of it. In Tarubai's case (3), while agreeing with the conclusion, I must dissent from a great part of the judgment in which it seems to be held that had the original mortgagor known of what was being done, his equity of redemption would have been barred. I cannot bring myself to assent to the necessary premiss that the wholly unauthorized act of volunteers, who were no parties to the mortgage, could in any circumstances start a period of possession adverse to the equity of redemption, or indeed that any physical possession by anybody could in any circumstances be adverse to an incorporeal right vested exclusively in the mortgagor and never passing from him (except by his own will and act). If a third person steps in and redeems my mortgage, why need I raise a protest? He had no right to do it, and his act appears to me to be in law a mere nullity so far as the equity of redemption is concerned; it goes no further than to substitute him for the original mortgagee (if so far) and leave him as much exposed as the former to be redeemed.

Applying the principles of the two cases, I first mentioned, to the facts before us, the result would be this. In 1882, when Anapurnabai redeemed without the knowledge of Sakhling, the equity of redemption, of which Sakhling then had half, was extinguished and Anapurnabai held the land as tenant-in-common with Sakhling plus a charge on his half for his half share of the mortgage debt, costs, principal and interest. That charge she could only enforce within twelve years, but being in possession, her possession as lienor would, in my opinion, be clearly adverse to Sakhling. I can give no other meaning to the decision of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, nor can I believe that he overlooked so obvious an argument as that while Article 132 restricts the period within which a person having a charge may enforce it, it does not comprise a case in which the person having the charge is in actual possession. The argument is that if that be so, then the person liable to the charge may, if the person entitled to it has not sued to enforce it within twelve years (having been in possession all that time), recover on the first day of the thirteenth year, without paying a penny of the charge for which he was liable during those twelve years. The fact that Jenkins, C. J., without even adverting to such a contention, dismissed the plaintiff's suit, is, I think, a sufficient answer. The rights of persons standing in such relations appear to me to be reciprocal, just as the rights of mortgagor and mortgagee are reciprocal. The Article is framed as it is because ordinarily the person having the charge is out of possession, and so the possession of the person owing the charge is treated as adverse. A fortiori, I should have thought, when the person having the charge is in possession, that possession must be adverse to the person who owes it: so that when no steps have been taken either to pay off, or enforce the charge during twelve years, the case naturally falls under the general principle of Article 144. That appears to me to be the law governing this case. In 1882 Anapurnabai redeemed, and there was an end of Sakhling's equity of redemption. The same day she mortgaged to the defendants, and their possession, according to Farran, C. J.'s judgment, immediately became adverse to her and Sakhling equally. This suit, therefore, since the plaintiff cannot rely on any fraction of the equity of redemption having survived in Sakhling (which was the ground of his claim), has long since been barred by limitation: and no question as to whether Sakhling knew that he was excluded arises.

The validity of this conclusion rests upon a chain of reasoning, in which one link needs strengthening. It is not clear from the findings of Courts below whether the mortgagees of Anapurnabai really obtained possession. The original mortgagees are said to have been in ostensible possession, but I have assumed that what was meant was that they attorned to the mortgagees under the mortgage executed by Anapurnabai to the defendants. Unless this were so, there would have been no possession adverse or otherwise to be reckoned with in the defendants. But if the defendants really did obtain possession under the mortgage of 1882, then I feel that there is no escape whatever from the effect of the judgment of the Full Bench and that the knowledge of the predecessors-in title of the plaintiff becomes entirely immaterial. I have ventured to doubt whether that is a correct interpretation of the law, but there can, in my opinion, be no doubt at all that it is what was ruled by the Full Bench and, therefore, binding on us. I would, therefore, remand an issue to the lower Court to be tried, "Did the defendants obtain possession under their mortgage of 1882?" and if that be found in the affirmative, I would reverse the decree of the Court below and dismiss this suit: if in the negative, then I would confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

HAYWARD, J.—The lower Appellate Court has not recorded its findings with that precision which is desirable, but it appears to have held that the property in suit belonged originally to the first cousins, Sakhling and Babling, and was mortgaged with possession to Bajirao in 1866, after Babling's death, by Sakhling and Anapurna, the mother of Babling, that whether the property in suit was originally owned as joint family property or as a tenancy-in-common by Sakhling and Babling, it became, by adverse possession consequent on the mortgage, a tenancy-in-common in the hands of Sakhling's heirs and of Anapurna; that the property in suit was redeemed from the heirs of Bajirao and re-mortgaged with possession to the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in 1882 without the knowledge of Sakhling's heirs by Anapurna; that the heirs of Bajirao nevertheless remained in possession professedly as the tenants of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 but not so as to affect Sakhling's heirs with knowledge of exclusion or adverse possession by Anapurna; that Sakhling's heirs included Ganling, one of the vendors of plaintiff, who had thus obtained a subsisting interest in the equity of redemption and was entitled to redeem the property from the defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

The lower Appellate Court has, in my opinion, come to a correct conclusion. The effect of the redemption by Anapurna was to place her in the position of a lienor with regard to her co-tenants, Sakhling's heirs, and had Anapurna thereafter held the property exclusively as her own to the knowledge of Sakhling's heirs, she would, no doubt, have obtained exclusive title by adverse possession as indicated in the cases of Ramchandra Yashvant Sirpatdar v. Sadashiv Abaji Sirpatdar (5) and Vasudev v. Balaji (1). But it has been contended that even without knowledge, Sakhling's heirs must be held to have lost their title by the adverse possession of Anapurna's mortgagees on the strength of the Full Bench decision in Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (4). What was, however, decided in that case was that knowledge of the true owner's title did not prevent the mortgagees obtaining by adverse possession complete title as mortgagees. No question was there raised as to the true owner's knowledge of the adverse possession of the mortgagees. This question has been exhaustively discussed in the case of Tarubai v. Venkatrao (3), where it has been shown that, without knowledge or circumstance that could have given knowledge to the true owner, there could be no adverse possession on the part of the mortgagees. Reference can also be made to the case of Purshottam v. Sagaji (6).

The lower Appellate Court's decision ought, therefore, in my opinion, to be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Owing to this difference in opinion, the following question of law was referred to the third Judge:—

"Whether a co-mortgagor can lose his equity of redemption by adverse possession of his co-mortgagor who has, without his knowledge and without circumstances that could have given knowledge, redeemed the mortgage and re-mortgaged the property to other mortgagees."

Mr. Coyaji, with him Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. A. Khare, for Resepondent No. 1.

Mr. D. C. Virkar, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether the interest of Anapurnabai has been for over twelve years adverse to the plaintiff.

Anapurnabai in 1882 redeemed from one Bajirao or his representatives certain out-standing mortgages, and the plaintiff, or those under who mhe claims, as co-mortgagors with Anapurnabai, became entitled, as soon as they should pay their share of the redemption money, to enjoy the property jointly with her. A short time after redeeming the mortgages, Anapurnabai mortgaged the property to the first and second defendants by Exhibit 21, and it may be assumed, for the purpose of this judgment, that the first and second defendants have been in possession as mortgagees since that time, and have leased out the property to the descendants of Bajirao, the redeemed mortgagees. The lower Court finds as a fact that no knowledge of exclusion or adverse possesson by Anapurnabai can be imputed to the plaintiff's vendors. So long as Anapurnabai took no step to assert a title against the plaintiff or those under whom he claimed in such a manner as to challenge their right to redeem their interest from her, the possession of Anapurnabai and her mortgagees would not be adverse to the plaintiff or his predecessors in-title, except in so far as the mortgagees might set up a limited title under Article 134 of the Limitation Act. There is ample authority for this proposition, the Bombay cases being Ramchandra Yashvant Sirpatdar v. Sadashiv Abaji Sirpatdar (5); Bhaudin v. Sheikh Ismail (7); Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin (8) and Vithal v. Dinkarao (9).

Shortly stated, the possession of joint property by one co-sharer does not constitute adverse possession against any other co-sharer until there has been a disclaimer of the latter's title by open assertion of a hostile title by the former.

On behalf of the appellants, reliance has been placed upon the judgment of this Court in Vasudev v. Balaji (1). That judgment expresses approval of three of the Bombay cases above referred to, but the finding of the District Court was accepted that there had, in fact, been twelve years' adverse possession on the part of the redeeming co-mortgagor. It cannot, therefore, be taken as an authority in support of the appellants' case.

I am, therefore, of opinion, that the judgment of the Assistant Judge was correct, and Succession (Property Protection) Act (XIX of 1841), s. 3—Inquiry—Question to be considered before taking action under.

It is necessary before action can be taken under Act XIX of 1841 that the provisions of section 3 of that Act are strictly fulfilled. And in order to fulfil the provisions of that section, it is necessary to consider, (1) whether the opposite party has no title, (2) whether the person claiming is really entitled to the property, and (3) whether the person making the application is likely to be materially prejudiced if left to the ordinary remedy by a regular suit.

Phul Chand Lal v. Kishmish Koer, 6 Ind. Cas. 630; 11 C. L. J. 521 and Sato Koer v. Gopal Sahu, 34 C. 929; 12 C. W. N. 65, relied upon.

Where action was taken under Act XIX of 1841 without considering those three requisites, the High Court set aside the order.

Rule against an order of the District Judge of Hooghly made under Act XIX of 1841.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit, for the Petitioner.

Babus Boidya Nath Dutt and Bipin Bihari Ghosh (Senior), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was obtained on the opposite party to show cause why a certain order, passed by the learned Judge of Hooghly, under the provisions of Act XIX of 1841, should not be set aside on the ground that under the law it does not appear that he had jurisdiction to pass the order or that the requirements of the law necessary to pass the order do not appear to have been properly complied with. It appears that one Tinkori Dasi died at Benares after a short illness. Before her death, she left her house at Bhadreswar and went with the members of the family to which the present opposite party belongs to Benares. There she died. An application was made by the opposite party claiming to be related to the lady as relatives of her husband for proceedings to be taken by the District Judge under Act XIX of 1841. The Act was passed more than 70 years ago and it is not clear why, in the circumstances, the opposite party did not in the first instance adopt the ordinary course open to them under the law. They claimed as heirs of the husband of the deceased to be entitled to all the properties left by her and specially they claimed to be entitled to two boxes of ornaments which were left by her in her house. They claimed these boxes on the ground that before her death, she made over the keys of the boxes to them. The application was directed against the present petitioner who appears to be a relation of the spiritual guide of the lady and who appears to have lived with her for the last 16 or 20 years. This petitioner claimed title to the immoveable property left by the lady under a deed of gift and also claimed title to the moveable property which was in these boxes and in the house in which, in fact, those persons were living. The learned Judge proceeded to dispose of the case under the provisions of Act XIX of 1841 and, having tried the case more or less as a regular suit, delivered a long judgment in which he came to the conclusion that the title was with the opposite party, who were the petitioners before him and passed an order directing the properties to be made over to them. The other side, who was in possession of the property at the time of the death of the deceased, has come to this Court and has obtained the present Rule the terms of which have already been mentioned.

The question which we have to decide in this case is whether or not there were circumstances sufficient to justify the lower Court in acting under the provisions of this old Act passed no less than 70 years before, which has very seldom been used, instead of leaving the parties to follow the ordinary course and bring a regular suit to prove their title to the property. In two similar cases, the same question came before this Court, one disposed of in 1900 [Phul Chand Lal v. Kishmish Koer (1)] and other disposed of in 1907 [Sato Koer v. Gopal Sahu (2).] In these cases, it was pointed out that it was necessary, before action could be taken under Act XIX of 1841, that the provisions of section 3 of that Act should be strictly fulfilled and that in order to fulfil the provisions of that section, it was necessary to consider, first, whether the opposite party had no title; secondly, whether the person claiming was really entitled to the property and, thirdly, whether the person making the application was likely to be materially prejudiced if left to the ordinary remedy by a regular suit. In the present case it has not been shown to us nor does it appear to be declared on the judgment of the lower Court that the opposite party in this Rule, who were the applicants under the provisions of Act XIX of 1841, would have been materially prejudiced if left to the ordinary remedy of a regular suit. It would have been open to the Court, in which they brought their suit, at their instance, to give directions for the proper custody and protection of the property during the disposal of the suit and certainly it was very desirable that in a case like the present, the matter should be tried out in the regular way and not disposed of by summary proceedings under this old Act. The other points with regard to which the Court should be satisfied are that the person in possession of the property had no lawful title and that the claimant was really entitled to the property. In the present case, the person in possession set up a title which, if proved, would be a lawful title and she at the same time alleged that the opposite party had no title as the property in dispute was property which had come to the deceased from her own father. In these circumstances, it is impossible to say that the title set up by the petitioner was not a bona fide title or was not one which ought not to be considered and determined in a regular suit. Certainly, in the present case the conditions required by section 3, which are necessary to give the Court jurisdiction to act under Act XIX of 1841, do not appear to us to have been complied with. Following, therefore, the principles laid down by this Court in the two cases to which we have referred, namely, the cases of Phul Chand Lal v. Kishmish Koer (1) and Sato Koer v. Gopal Sahu (2), we direct that the Rule be made absolute, that the judgment and order of the lower Court be set aside and that the parties be referred to the Civil Court in order to prove in a regular suit their respective title to the property. The Court before which the application will be made by plaint or otherwise will, no doubt, take the steps necessary for the protection of the property pending the disposal of the suit. The result, therefore, is that the Rule is made absolute with costs three gold mohurs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sch. II, Art. 35 (l)—Small Cause Suit—Suit for injury—Assault—Threatening to beat with a shoe—Suit for compensation.

A suit to recover damages from defendant for running after plaintiff with a shoe in his hand, threatening to beat him and using abusive language, though not actually touching the plaintiff's person, is a suit for "injury to the person" within the meaning of clause 35 (l) of the second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and is, therefore, excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court.

The act complained of amounts to an assault and to an offence affecting the human body.

Application from the decision of the District Judge of Poona, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 10 of 1911, on appeal from the order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona, in Civil Suit No. 235 of 1911, and Civil Reference No. 13 of 1911, made by the Small Cause Court Judge at Poona.

FACTS.—Plaintiff brought this suit to recover damages from defendant on the ground that the latter ran after him with a shoe in hand, threatening to beat him and using abusive language.

It was admitted that the person of the plaintiff was not actually touched.

JUDGMENT.—The action complained of by the plaintiff would be an assault and an offence affecting human body under the Penal Code. It also would be an assault under the English law : see Stephens v. Myers (1). We think also that it was an injury to the person within the meaning of clause 35, sub-clause (l) of the second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and the suit was, therefore, not within the cognizance of the Small Cause Court.

We set aside the decree of the first class Subordinate Judge and remand the case for trial to him.

Execution of decree—Sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 22—Sale without notice—Whether sale void—Substantial injury.

Omission to serve a notice, under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 22 of the Civil Procedure Code, is not by itself sufficient to render a sale, which has subsequently been held, void.

Such omission would constitute a serious irregularity entitling the judgment-debtor to vacate the sale by proving that substantial injury has been the result of it.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge of Murshidabad, dated February 3rd, 1911, confirming that of the second Munsif of Jangipur, dated September 26th, 1910.

Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Appellants.

Babus Chandra Sekhar Banerjee for Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar and Babu Harish Chandra Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this appeal is whether the omission to serve a notice under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 22, of the new Code of Civil Procedure, corresponding to section 248 of the old Code, is by itself sufficient to render a sale, which has subsequently been held, void. In the present case, an application was made by the present appellants to have a sale set aside on that ground and the Court of first instance, treating the application as one under Order XXI, rule 90 of the new Code, came to the conclusion that the judgment-debtors had failed to prove any irregularity which by reason of the fact that it had caused substantial injury to them would be a sufficient ground for setting aside the sale. On appeal before the District Judge, the main question which seems to have been contested was whether the application was preferred under Order XXI, rule 90, corresponding to section 311 of the old Code, or under section 47 of the new Code, corresponding with section 244 of the old Code. The learned Judge appears to have been of opinion that the application was one under rule 90 of Order XXI of the new Code, but at the same time, he held that, even if it could be regarded as an application under section 47, as the judgment-debtors had failed to prove any substantial loss resulting from any irregularity, the application to set aside the sale could not succeed. The judgment-debtors have appealed to this Court and a preliminary objection is taken to the competency of the appeal on the ground that, as the application was one under Order XXI, rule 90, no second appeal would lie. The learned Pleader for the appellants has, however, contended that the application could not be one falling under Order XXI, rule 90, because the service of the notice under section 248 of the old Code was not a matter arising in the execution of the decree itself and he has further contended that the omission to serve the notice under section 248 of the old Code is itself sufficient to render the sale void. He has referred us to the decision of this Court in the case of Livinia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1). On the other hand, the learned Pleader for the respondent has relied on the decision of this Court in the case of Lakshmi Charan Sen v. Sris Chandra Roy (2). We have considered those two decisions carefully and, in our opinion, they do not support the view that the omission to serve the notice required by Order XXI, rule 22, is sufficient to render a subsequent sale void. In the case of Livinia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1), on which the appellants' Vakil relies, reference is made to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (3). Their Lordships of the Privy Council, in dealing with the question whether a sale held without the issue of a notice under section 243 of the Code is a nullity, expressed the opinion that the omission would constitute a serious irregularity entitling the judgment-debtor to vacate the sale; but, at the same time, they laid down that, after the sale had become complete, the sale was a reality which could be defeasible only in the way provided by law; and they seemed to favour the opinion, which was afterwards expressed by this Court in the case of Lakshmi Charan Sen v. Sris Chandra Roy (2), which is relied on by the learned Pleader for the respondents, that, though an application to set aside a sale on the ground that no notice has been served as required by Order XXI, rule 22, is one which cannot be made under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 90 of the new Code, corresponding with section 311 of the old Code but must be one made under the provisions of section 47 of the new Code corresponding with section 244 of the old Code, still in order to justify a Court in setting aside a sale on the ground of the omission to serve a notice under Order XXI, rule 22, it must be proved that the omission to serve such notice has resulted in substantial injury to the owner of the property sold. The learned Pleader for the appellants has also referred to the case of Gobinda Pershad alias Gobind Lal v. Rung Lal (4) to support the contention that the omission to serve the notice renders the sale void. We are not, however, prepared to follow the decision in that case and consider that we are bound by the decision of the Privy Council which has been followed in the two cases, which have been already mentioned and which are reported in Livinia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1) and Lakshmi Charan Sen v. Sris Chandra Roy (2). In the present case, both the lower Courts have found that the judgment-debtors failed to prove that they had suffered any substantial loss by the sale and, in those circumstances, we consider that both the lower Courts were justified in the conclusions at which they arrived that the sale could not be set aside.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal is dismissed with costs. We allow two gold mohurs as the hearing fee to be divided in equal shares between the two sets of respondents who have appeared.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 574 OF 1910.

February 2, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Johnstone and Mr. Justice Rattigan.

BADAMAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

NET RAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Succession—Escheat—Proprietor of land dying without heirs by relationship—Right of proprietors of thulla and patti of different tribes and gots.

In a suit for a declaration that the plaintiffs are owners in possession of lands, having succeeded as owners of thulla or patti left by a proprietor who died without heirs by relationship, and that the defendants had no right to the land, the Court must determine whether the plaintiffs have any right of succession by custom; the weakness of defendants' case should not be accepted as a proof of plaintiffs' title.

As a general rule the pattidars do not succeed and the land escheats, when among the pattidars are proprietors of different tribes or gots of the same tribe and the deceased has left no heirs by relationship.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Ambala Division, dated the 28th October 1909, confirming that of the BADAMAN v. NET RAM.

District Judge, Karnal, dated the 17th August 1909, decreeing the claim.

Lala Laipat Rai, for the Appellants.

Lala Dwarka Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Chajju, a Jat of got Dudhan, who was a co-proprietor of certain lands in Thulla Dayala, Patti Jattan, Mouza Ratangarh, died about 1908 and admittedly left no lineal or collateral heirs. Mutation of names in respect of his estate was in the first instance effected in favour of all the proprietors of the Patti Jattan which comprises Thulla Dayala and two other thullas but subsequently the Revenue authorities rescinded their previous order and directed mutation to be effected in favour of the proprietors of the Thulla Dayala only. Plaintiffs, who are the proprietors of the two other Thullas, Basti and Ratan, in the same patti, accordingly, sue for a declaration to the effect that according to law and custom, the proprietors of the patti, (i. e., of all three thullas) are entitled to the said land and not merely the proprietors of Thulla Dayala. The latter have been made defendants in the suit. The land is actually in possession of one Buali, a Teli, and this person admits the rights of plaintiffs. The Courts below have held that plaintiffs must be regarded as being in possesssion through him and that their suit for a declaratory decree is entertainable. Plaintiffs' suit has been decreed both by the District Judge and by the Divisional Judge, and defendants have applied to this Court for revision of these decrees; their application was admitted as a further appeal, under section 70 (1) (b) of the Punjab Courts Act and we have heard it argued as such. In our opinion, the onus probandi was upon plaintiff, who claimed a declaratory decree affirming their right to the land, to affirmatively establish their title, and this despite the fact, that they happen to be in possession of the land. Admittedly, they are not the lineal or collateral heirs of the deceased proprietor and we know of no authority to the effect that when a village proprietor dies without such heirs, the proprietors of the patti or of the village must be deemed to be entitled to succeed to his estate.

The lower Courts have lost sight of this aspect of the case and have regarded it as a contest purely between the proprietors of the patti (plaintiffs) and the proprietors of Thulla Dayala. They have weighed the respective claims of these two parties and because defendants have not been able to show a preferential right to the land, they have granted plaintiffs a decree for which they prayed. This was an entirely erroneous method of dealing with a case of this kind. There is no presumption that either plaintiffs or defendants are entitled to the property, and as plaintiffs ask the Courts to affirm by decree that all proprietors of the patti are owners of that property, the burden of proving their claim lay heavily upon them, and they were not entitled to the decree unless and until they had succeeded in affirmatively establishing their allegation. The weakness of defendants' case should not have been accepted as proof of plaintiffs' title. The question then is, whether plaintiffs have proved that they are entitled together with defendants to the estate of the deceased. Admittedly, Chajju was the last Jat of the Dudhan got in this village, and it is not denied that among the proprietors of patti are Jats of various gots and also certain Muhammadans and Brahmans. In such cases, the general rule is that in the event of a proprietor dying without heirs, his estate ordinarily escheats to Government (Digest of Civil Law in the Punjab, para. 28). When, therefore, plaintiffs claim a decree declaratory of their right to succeed to the property of Chajju, they are bound to show that this general rule does not apply to their case. What then is the proof adduced by them in support of their claim ?

They rely, in the first place, upon the Riwaj-i-am of the Thanesar tahsil. The lower Courts held that this document supports plaintiffs' claim, but we cannot agree. The important clause in the Riwaj-i-am is, undoubtedly, No. 47, which provides that in the event of a man dying without ek jaddis, all the proprietors of the patti who are of the same got will succeed. It is not contended that plaintiffs are of the same got as the deceased, Chajju, but it is argued that in the absence of members of the proprietary body of the same got, all other proprietors in the patti are entitled to succeed. We cannot accept this argument, for it seems clear to us, after a perusal of clauses 40 and 47 of the Riwaj-i-am, that the intention was to make provision merely for such collateral relations of the deceased as were unable to prove affirmatively their descent from a common ancestor. In villages in this Province, it is often found that certain persons are unable to trace descent from an ancestor common to themselves and a deceased person whose property they claim, and the utmost they can show is that the deceased and themselves were of the same got. In such cases, Courts are asked to presume descent from a common ancestor simply on that ground. It seems to us that it was to provide for such cases that the entry was made in the Riwaj-i-am and that it was not intended thereby to confer rights upon persons who could not possibly have belonged to the family of the deceased. In any case, the entry in question does not directly support plaintiffs' case. The entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1353 is the next piece of evidence relied upon by plaintiffs, but it affords them even less assistance. If provides that if a village proprietor goes away or is lost sight of, and there are no heirs (warisan), the proprietors of the village can take possession of his land and that they shall all be responsible for payment of land revenue and other Government demands.

Apart from the objection that this provision relates to the proprietors of the whole village, and not merely the proprietors of the patti, it is obvious that it confers no right of succession as owners or heirs. It merely provides that, in the event of a proprietor leaving the village, if there are no heirs to the property, the whole village will have to bear the burden of paying Government demands, and that as some compensation, the proprietary body of the village may take possession of the derelict property, [see as to this, Harnam Singh v. Partab Singh (1)]. It is conceded that the oral evidence in this case is of no value, and thus plaintiffs' claim rests solely upon the entries in the Riwaj-i-am and the wajib-ul-arz. These, as we have shown, do not establish their right to succeed to Chajju's property, and their claim must, therefore, fail. In granting them the declaratory decree for which they prayed, the Courts below were (as here already remarked) misled by regarding the case as one merely between plaintiffs and defendants. They are of opinion that defendants have no preferential or exclusive right to the property and they lay stress upon the fact that the thullas in the village are mere artificial units, without (as the Divisional Judge says) any recognizable "raison d'etre." Finding, then, that defendants have no exclusive right to the property, they conclude that plaintiffs' contention must be correct and that it devolves upon the proprietors of the patti. This is clearly a case of non sequitur and the Courts have lost sight of the fact that before plaintiffs can claim the decree asked for, they must prove not merely that defendants have no exclusive right to the property, but also that they themselves have a right to claim the declaration for which they pray. This they have entirely failed to prove and we, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

How far this decision will benefit either party is a matter with which we are not concerned.

Appeal accepted.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Transfer with a view to defeat an anticipated attachment—Transferee not sharing in fraudulent intention—Burden of proof on plaintiff when he sets up a deed as genuine—Finding of fact, right of appellant to challenge in second appeal—Inferences from facts found can be challenged in second appeal.

The mere fact that a transfer was made to defeat an anticipated attachment does not evidence an intent to defeat or delay creditors of the vendor.

Bhagwant Appaji v. Kedari Kashi Nath, 25 B. 202; 4 Bom. L. R. 986, referred to.

Where a plaintiff sues for a declaration that a particular transfer in his favour is a good and valid one, it is incumbent upon him to make out in the first instance the validity of the sale in his favour.

Although an erroneous finding of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal unless it is shown that there is an error of procedure or that there is no evidence in support of the finding, yet inferences drawn from facts found might be questioned in second appeal.

BAKHT BALI SINGH v. LEKHRANI KUNWAR.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge of Gonda, dated 14th February 1911, upholding that of the Munsif, Tarabganj, dated 21st December 1910.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that Udairaj, Hetia and some others were the proprietors of the village Sudamanpur. On the 12th of December 1900, they executed a deed of mortgage in respect of the entire village of Sudamanpur in lieu of Rs. 4,800 in favour of Musammat Lekhrani Kunwar, who sued Udairaj and others to recover the mortgage-money due on the deed of 1900. As Udairaj had not joined in the registration of the deed, a simple money-decree was passed against him on the 14th of April 1904. On the 10th of December 1906, Udairaj is said to have executed a deed of sale in respect of his share in Sudamanpur and of some other property in favour of Bakht Bali Singh, the plaintiff-appellant, in lieu of Rs. 1,400. Musammat Lekhrani Kunwar, in execution of her decree, attached the share of Udairaj in Sudamanpur on the 7th of February 1909. As Udairaj failed to pay up her decree, his share was sold and purchased by her on the 22nd of August 1910. On the 22nd of October 1910, the plaintiff-appellant instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, to have it declared that he was the owner of 1 anna 1 pie 4 krants 28-4/7 decimal share of Udairaj in Sudamanpur and that the sale of that share to the defendant-respondent in execution of her decree was invalid and ineffectual as against him. The claim was brought against Musammat Lekhrani Kunwar only. She denied the claim. She denied the alleged sale in favour of the plaintiff-appellant and said that if there had been one, it was fraudulent and collusive made at a time when the share of Udairaj was under attachment and with a view to defeat her decree. She said that the plaintiff-appellant never got possession of Udairaj's share and that the suit for a declaration was not maintainable.

The Court of first instance, the Munsif of Tarabganj, dismissed the claim. He found that, as a matter of fact, a deed of sale was executed in favour of the plaintiff-appellant on the 10th of December 1906, when no attachment of Udairaj's share was pending. But he held that the sale was fraudulent and collusive and was made with the object of defeating the decree of Musammat Lekhrani Kunwar. On appeal, the learned District Judge of Gonda affirmed the decree of the Munsif.

Bakht Bali Singh has preferred this second appeal. He contends that the evidence in the case does not disclose any circumstances showing the transaction of the 10th of December 1906 to be collusive. The circumstances enumerated by the lower Court, it is said, may perhaps point to the intention of Udairaj, the vendor, to defeat the decree of the respondent. But they do not show that the plaintiff-appellant shared in or was cognizant of that intention. And unless there is evidence to show that the vendee conspired with the vendor to defeat or delay the creditors of the latter, the sale in question must be held to be good and valid. Nor is it said that the mere fact of the sale having being made on the eve of an impending attachment of the property sold renders the sale invalid in spite of the knowledge of the vendee of the impending attachment. The appellant refers to the following case in support of his contention:—Bhagwant Appaji v. Kedari Kashinath (1).

The facts of the Bombay case were that the Bhagwant filed a suit against Ganpati, the manager of a Hindu undivided family, to recover a sum of money due to him. On the day the suit was filed, Bhagwant obtained an order of attachment before judgment of certain property belonging to the family of Ganpati. Before the attachment was actually made, Martand, a member of the joint family, sold the property against which an order of attachment had been made and some other property to one Kedari. But before the execution of the sale-deed in favour of Kedari, notice of the order of attachment was served both on Ganpati and Kedari. Bhagwant then filed a suit against Ganpati and Kedari to have it declared that the sale to Kedari was fraudulent and void and that the property about which an order for attachment before judgment was made was liable to attachment in execution of his (Bhagwant's) decree. Bhagwant relied on the provisions of section 53 of Act IV of 1882, in support of his case. The High Court held that although the object of the sale to Kedari was to defeat an anticipated execution, that did not show that the intent was to defeat or delay the creditors so as to render clause (1) of section 53 applicable. And it was also held that clause (2) of section 53 of Act IV of 1882 did not apply as it was not proved that the sale in question was made fraudulently or for a grossly inadequate consideration. The Bombay case is not on all fours with the present case. In the former case, Bhagwant wanted to avoid the sale in favour of Kedari on two grounds, namely, first, that the sale was made, after notice to the vendor and the purchaser of the impending attachment, with the object of defeating the anticipated execution, secondly, that the sale to Kedari was fraudulent and colourable. Their Lordships of the Bombay High Court, after an exhaustive review of the case-law on the subject, came to the conclusion that the mere fact that a transfer was made to defeat an anticipated attachment did not evidence an intent to defeat or delay creditors of the vendor. They found on the evidence in the case that the allegation as to the sale to Kedari being fraudulent had not been established. In the present case, the sale to Bakht Bali has not been held by the lower Court to be invalid on the ground that it was made to defeat an anticipated attachment. Nor has any such argument been advanced for the respondent before me. The finding against the plaintiff-appellant is that he has failed to prove that the sale in his favour was genuine and free from taint of fraud. Bakht Bali came into Court for a declaration that the transfer in his favour, prior to the decree of Musammat Lekhrani Kunwar, was a good and valid one and that the proceedings subsequent to his sale did not affect the transfer in his favour. It was, therefore, for him, in the first instance, to make out the validity of the sale in his favour, as Bhagwant the plaintiff in the Bombay case was required to establish his case first, namely, that the sale he wanted to avoid was not genuine. The case of Shib Narain Pahari v. Shankar Panigrahi (2) is also in point on the question of burden of proof. In fact, the learned Pleader for the appellant admitted in the end that the onus was on his client to prove that the sale of the 10th of December 1906 was genuine and free from taint of fraud. The lower Courts have found that the plaintiff-appellant has failed to prove the genuine character of the sale in his favour. This finding, according to the learned Pleader for the respondent, is one of fact and cannot be questioned in second appeal. He argues that the appellant ought not to be allowed to discuss the value of the evidence as to the character of the sale. But the appellant, relying on a dictum of the Bombay High Court in the case already mentioned, contends that he can, for reasons to be given presently, challenge the finding of the lower Court. The dictum is as follows :— "There can be no room for doubt that an erroneous finding of fact, however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be, could afford no ground for entertaining this appeal unless it be shown either that there was error in procedure or that there was no evidence before the lower Court proper for its consideration in support of that finding, though, on the other hand, inferences drawn from the facts found might be called in question in second appeal." Vide Bhagwant Appaji v. Kedari Kashinath (1).

This view of the law has been enunciated in other cases also, some of which have been referred to in the Bombay case. I think that the appellant can, for any of the reasons given in the dictum just quoted, assail the finding of the lower Court. He attacks it on one ground only, namely, that the circumstances found by the lower Court do not warrant the inference that the sale of the 10th of December 1906 was collusive and fraudulent. The facts found by the lower Court which led it to make an inference adverse to the appellant are these :—

1. The fact that the vendor and vendee are both thakurs.

2. The improbability of the vendee wishing to purchase a fractional share in a village nearly thirty miles from his own home.

3. The abstention of the appellant from objecting to the attachment of the property in the execution proceedings.

4. The facts that more than a year before the sale, the decree-holder suspected the intentions of the judgment-debtor and secured a temporary injunction restricting him from making an alienation.

(2) 5 C. W. N. 403.

S. N. DAR, B. A. LL. B.,
Vakil High Court.

5. The suspiciously careful manner in which the deed of sale was drawn up.

The learned Pleader for the appellant, taking up each circumstance, argues that it does not necessarily show that the sale in favour of his client was nominal. The argument is ingenious. But the inference of the lower Court is not based on any single circumstance. It is drawn from the cumulative effect of all the circumstances enumerated above. Now I am not prepared to say that the said circumstances do not justify the inference made by the learned Judge. There is no explanation forthcoming for the appellant of any of the facts which have led to an adverse inference being made against him. It is not explained, for example, why he should have purchased a small piece of land so far from his village that the management of it would only entail loss on him or if he had really purchased it, why did he make no objection to its attachment. I think that the plaintiff-appellant has failed to prove the genuine character of the sale in his favour.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 916 OF 1910.

November 30, 1911.

Present:—Sir N. G. Chandavarkar, KT., Judge, and Mr. Justice Russell.

NATHUBHAI NARANDAS—

versus

MANORDAS LALDAS—

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 53, 54—Award —Decree—Suit—Appeal—Second Appeal—Decision by Assistant Judge—Forum of appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (2), 93, 96, 100.

No second appeal lies to the High Court from an award by a District Court on appeal from an award made by an Assistant Judge's Court under the Land Acquisition Act.

Reading sections 53 and 54 of the Land Acquisition Act with section 96 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be taken to have been the intention of the legislature to place an award under the Land Acquisition Act on the footing of a decree.

Nilkanth v. Collector of Thana, 22 B. 802, Ladha Ebrahim & Co. v. Assistant Collector of Poona, 35 B. 145, 12 Bom. L. R. 839, 843; 8 Ind. Cas. 166, not approved.

Section 53 of the Land Acquisition Act has the operation of putting proceedings before the Court on the same footing as proceedings in a suit.

Where the amount in dispute is less than Rs. 5,000, an appeal against the decision of a Subordinate Judge or an Assistant Judge on an award lies to the District Judge and not to the High Court.

Ranchhodbhai Vallavbhai v. The Collector of Kaira, 11 Bom.L.R. 317; 33 B. 371; 2 Ind. Cas. 492 folllowed.

Balaram Bhramaratar Ray v. Sham Sunder Narendra, 23 C. 526, dissented from.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Thana, in Appeal No. 328 of 1909, confirming the awards in References Nos. 5 and 7, made by the Assistant Judge of of Thana.

JUDGMENT.—This case raises an important and difficult question. Two references, Nos. 5 and 7 of 1904, under the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894, were decided by the Assistant Judge of Thana, who in No. 5 ordered that the whole amount of the award, viz., Rs. 2,005-0-5 should be paid to the mortgagee, Manordas Laldas, each party bearing his own costs, and in No. 7 confirmed the Collector's award, Manordas having objected that the amount awarded by the acquiring officer was too little.

Appeal No. 328 of 1909, of the District File, was decided by the acting District Judge of Thana who dismissed it with costs.

The above second appeal has been filed in this Court and the preliminary objection is raised by Mr. Rao, for the respondent No. 1, that no second appeal lies, and he relies, in the first place, upon section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act. That provides that:—

"Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals from original decrees, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the award or from any part of the award, of the Court in any proceedings under this Act."

Now section 96 of the Code of Civil Procedure (V of 1908), first clause, is as follows:—

"Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree, passed by any Court, exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court."

The extreme difficulty in this case arises in consequence of two decisions of the Bombay High Court, first, Nilkanth v. Collector of Thana (1), decided under the former Land Acquisition Act, X of 1870, where it was held that that Act did not provide for or contemplate an award for compensation being enforced against the Collector by execution proceedings, and there is no general law which enables a Civil Court to enforce such a statutory liability, when imposed upon a Collector or other civil officer by means of execution proceedings without a suit. And Farran, C. J., at p. 808 says: "In the above view, it is unnecessary for me to consider whether an award made under the provisions of Act I of 1894 can be enforced against the Collector by execution proceedings. That is a complex problem which has been set by the Legislature for solution by the Judges. Such problems often arise when the provisions of one Act are introduced by reference into another and incorporated with it." We may mention in passing that we entirely agree with that remark, and this is the second occasion, within a short time, on which we have had to animadvert upon this mode of Legislation.

That case was expressly followed in the case of Ladha Ebrahim & Co. v. The Assistant Collector of Poona (2), where Scott, C. J. says: "With regard to the first question, we think the reasoning of the majority of the Court in Nilkanth v. Collector of Thana (1) sufficiently establishes that an award under the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 is not a decree or order capable of execution under the Code of Civil Procedure and is, therefore, not within the purview of the section." But in Zemindars of Dhar v. Rana (3), it was decided that an adjudication made by a Court under either section 26 or 30 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, or on appeal under section 54 by the Chief Court as to compensation or apportionment of compensation is tantamount to a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure and capable of execution, and that a party entitled to any benefit under a decree passed in an appeal under section 54 is entitled to recover the same by process of execution through the Court which passed the original decree or award.

In that case, the Punjab Chief Court distinguished Nilkanth v. Collector of Thana (1) upon the ground that the effect of the provisions of the Act of 1894 on the question before the Court was not decided, and they quote the words which we have above set out from the judgment of Farran, C. J.

We must now refer to section 53 of the Land Acquisition Act, which provides that:—

"Save in so far as they may be inconsistent with anything contained in this Act, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all proceedings before the Court under this Act."

The following passage from the judgment of the Punjab Chief Court is so important to this present case that we set it out at length:—

"A comparison of the provisions of the previous Act X of 1870, with those of the present Land Acquisition Act, appears to show that proceedings in Court have now been almost entirely assimilated to those of an ordinary civil suit. The former Act prescribed a special procedure which had to be followed by the Court, and in the matter of appeal, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure for regular appeals had to be followed, vide sections 35 and 39. By section 36, the provisions of the Code as to adding parties, adjournments, death, marriage, and insolvency of parties, summoning of witnesses and their attendance, examination of parties and witnesses, production of documents and commission to examine witnesses and to make local inquiry were made applicable so far as they could be. The present Act, section 53, makes the Code applicable generally to all proceedings under the Act, except where inconsistent with anything in the Act itself. This would appear to be a notable departure from the policy of the previous Act. In our opinion, therefore, adjudication as to compensation or apportionment of compensation is tantamount to a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, though called an award in the Act. There is an overwhelming mass of authority for treating the award of the Court as a decree for purposes of appeal. See Sheo Rattan Rai v. Mohri (4), Muhammad Ali Amjad Khan

v. Secretary of State for India (5). The memorandum of appeal is stamped as one from an original decree. As far as we know, there is no authority to the contrary. The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rajah Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (6) to the effect that the settling of the amount or the distributing of the compensation by the Court is final and conclusive, supports the same conclusion.

"There is no good ground whatever for holding such a decree to be merely a declaratory one. Not only is there nothing in the Act to support the contention, but the whole scheme of the Act seems to negative any such conclusion. Under the Act when a reference is made to the Court, the Collector is required by section 31 to deposit the amount of compensation under his award in the Court, and the remaining sections of Part V of the Act show that the Court is vested with plenary authority in dealing with the money. It is not reasonable to infer under the circumstnces that the Court's adjudication is merely declaratory, and that it is incompetent to take any action in respect of its award or decree. The provisions aforesaid clearly require it to take action in various ways. A statute framed for a particular object ought to be deemed sufficient in itself, in the absence of clear indications to the contrary, to carry out that object. Moreover, the Legislature cannot be presumed to favour multiplicity of proceedings.

"We, therefore, hold on the first point that the award is a decree which is capable of execution."

This decision was not referred to in Ladha Ebrahim's case (2). But it appears to us that, reading together sections 53 and 54 of the Land Acquisition Act with section 96 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be taken to have been the intention of the Legislature to put awards under the Land Acquisition Act on the footing of decrees. Otherwise we cannot understand how the procedure applicable to appeals from original decrees can be made applicable to what are not decrees.

It is perfectly true, as Mr. Rao argued, that by section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a "decree" is defined as "the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit." The word "suit" has not been defined in the Code of Civil Procedure, and the latter half of section 582 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, in which it was declared to include an appeal in certain cases, has not been reproduced in the new Code of Civil Prcadure. But it has been held in Calcutta, with reference to the Bengal Court of Wards Act IX of 1879, that the term "suit" includes all contentious proceedings of an ordinary civil kind, whether they arise in a suit or proceedings. See Bhoopendro Narain Dutt v. Baroda Prosad Roy (7), and Hurro Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Sooradhonee Debia (8). In a later case, however, a less certain view seems to have been taken, and it was said that a "suit" ought to be confined to such proceedings as under that description are directly dealt with by the Code of Civil Procedure, or such as, by the operation of the particular Acts which regulate them, are treated as suits. See Watkins v. Fox (9), We do not find anything in the Land Acquisition Act inconsistent with the view we are putting forward; and section 53 of that Act has the operation of putting proceedings before the Court on the same footing as proceedings in a suit, it seems to us.

If we are right in saying that the award is a decree, then section 93 of the Code of Civil Proceedure lays down that an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court.

Now, the amount in dispute being less than Rs. 5,000, by Bombay Civil Courts Act XIV of 1869, section 16, the appeal lies to the District Judge, which by that section "is the Court authorized to hear appeals from the Subordinate Judge." See section 96 of the new Civil Procedure Code. And this has been expressly so held in Ranchhodbhai Vallavbhai v. The Collector of Kaira (10), where the learned Judges, Chandavarkar and Heaton, JJ., apply the reasoning in Laxmi v. Aba(11). With regard to this decision, however, it is to be observed that in the case of Balaram Bhramaratar Ray v. Sham Sunder Narendra (12), where the amount in dispute was less than Rs. 5,000, the Calcutta High Court held that the appeal lay to the High Court. There, at page 529, the learned Judges say as follows:—

"Upon the question raised in the Rule, namely, whether the District Judge was right in holding that the appeals in these cases lay not to his Court, but to the High Court, we are of opinion that the answer ought to be in the affirmative. It is true that by section 39 of Act X of 1870, it was provided that the appeal shall lie to the High Court, unless the Judge whose decision is appealed from is not the District Judge, in which case the appeal shall lie in the first instance to the District Judge; but that Act has been repealed by Act I of 1894, and the only saving clause is that in sub-section (2) of section 2, which provides that all proceedings commenced under the Land Acquisition Act (X of 1870) shall, as far as may be, be deemed to have been commenced under the Act of 1894. We must, therefore, look to the provisions of Act I of 1894 to see whether an appeal lies or not, and, if any appeal lies, to what Court.

"Now section 54 of Act I of 1894 enacts: 'Subject to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, applicable to appeals from original decrees, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from the award or from any part of the award of the Court in any proceedings under this Act.' The proceedings in these cases, though commenced under the old Act, must, by virtue of the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 2 of Act I of 1894, be deemed to be proceedings under the latter Act. That being so, section 54 would apply to the case, and under that section, the appeals lie to the High Court."

But, in accordance with the usual practice in these cases, we must follow the judgment in Ranchhodbhai Vallavbhai v. The Collector of Kaira (10), above referred to, and hold that no appeal lies in this case to this Court.

But the question remains whether a second appeal lies to this Court from the decision of the District Court sitting in appeal from an award of the Assistant Judge's Court made under the Land Acquisition Act.

Under section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, a second appeal lies to this Court from any decree passed in appeal by a Court subordinate to it. In the Punjab case above cited, it was held that an award made by a District Court under the Land Acquisition Act is a decree, because section 53 of the Act directed that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all proceedings before the Court under the former Act. A decision of the District Court under the Land Acquisition Act is called in the Act itself an "Award" and the question of appeal is dealt with in section 54. Only one appeal is allowed by that section; the right to appeal is a creation of Statute. Had it been the intention of the Legislature to allow a right to a second appeal also in such cases, it would have said so. We cannot infer such a right merely from the language of section 53, because, had the general words of that section been intended by the Legislature to apply the provisions of the Code relating to appeals also to second appeals, section 54 would have become unnecessary. The irresistible inference is that no second appeal lies to this Court from an award made by a District Court in appeal from an award made by an Assistant Judge's Court, whether the award is treated as a decree or not.

This second appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs on the ground that it does not lie.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Second Appeal—Finding of lower Appellate Court based upon alleged evidence not existing in record—Decision "contrary to law".

The circumstance that a finding of a lower Appellate Court is based mainly upon evidence which is explicitly referred to and avowedly re-produced in the judgment, but is not to be found anywhere in the record, vitiates the decision and renders it contrary to law within the meaning of section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908.

Bibee Ameeran v. Shaikh Cherag Ali, 24 W. R. 343, relied upon.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of 24-Pergannahs, dated May 3rd, 1909, reversing that of the Sub-Judge of 24-Pergannahs, dated June 19th, 1907.

Babus Nil Madhab Bose and Shiba Prosonna Bhattacharyya, for the Appellant.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Krishna Prosad Sarbadhikari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree of the District Judge of the 24-Pergannahs reversing a decision of a Subordinate Judge and dismissing a suit for the recovery of possession of some 600 bighas of land in the Sundarbans. The plaintiff's vendor, Shama Charn Das, obtained from the landlord, the third defendant, on the 22nd June 1909, a permanent lease for the reclamation of a chak in the lot known as Jeha Khal; and the first defendant obtained a similar lease on the 12th August following, of two adjoining chaks, one to the north and the other to the east, of the chak, of Shama Churn Das. The plaintiff charged that the defendant had, by erecting an embankment south of the Bhardut Khal, which was fixed by the leases as the northern boundary of the former's chak and the southern boundary of the first of the latter's chaks, encroached upon, and wrongfully taken possession of, the land in suit. The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree subject to the payment to the defendant of the expenses actually incurred by the latter in reclaiming the lands; but on the defendants' appeal, the suit was dismissed in toto, and the plaintiff has now preferred this second appeal.

The learned District Judge has found that there was in the lease (by which he must have meant each of the leases) a clause providing that there should be a consultation and arrangement between the parties regarding the precise division of the lands covered by the two; that, in pursuance of this understanding, it was agreed between Shama Churn Das and the defendant that the embankment complained of should be erected on the boundary and that the embankment was erected accordingly. These are undoubtedly findings of fact, and it has been strongly pressed upon us by Dr. Ghosh that, as such, they are conclusive and cannot be questioned on second appeal. Prima facie, certainly, it would seem to be so; and we are fully alive to the limitations imposed on us by section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 and the rulings of the Judicial Committee in such cases as Durga Chowdhrani v. Jawahir Singh Chowdhri (1) and Ramratan Sukal v. Nanlu (2). But in this instance, the first of the learned District Judge's findings involves a construction of title-deeds which is not above criticism. And the second is based mainly upon evidence which is explicitly referred to and avowedly re-produced in the judgment, but is not to be found anywhere in the record. The latter circumstance, at least, must, in our opinion, be held to vitiate the decision and render it "contrary to law." "Shamachandra's son swears," so runs the judgment, "that there was such a consultation" (that is to say, a consultation between Shamacharan Das and the defendant as to the demarcation of the boundary between the lands leased), "and that Shamacharan agreed to the division that was proposed; Shamacharan's son swears that he went and pointed out to Peary Mohan's people where the bundh was to be built," and "Ram Das, Shamacharan's son, swears that he went and saw this bundh when it had been built, and approved of it." Now, we have read the whole of the evidence with care, and we find that, as has been submitted by the learned Vakil for the appellant before us, there is no trace of any statements such as those quoted. The only "consultation" of any sort, to which Ram Das alludes, was one between himself and the plaintiff when they together called upon a Pleader in connection with the contemplated conveyance to the latter; and nowhere does Ram Das say that he agreed to the division proposed by the defendant, or that he saw the embankment complained of after it had been erected and approved of it. And Kartik, who was Shamacharan's peon and is the only witness answering that description, far from asserting that he pointed out to the defendant's people where the embankment was to be made, strenuously declares that he opposed its erection and desisted only because he was threatened with death by Peary Mohan's emissaries. Now, here the learned District Judge has committed himself to a much graver mistake than the mere misunderstanding of the effect of a witness's deposition: he has referred to evidence which does not exist at all, and has based his decision principally, if not entirely, upon it. The case is really very similar to that of Bibee Ameerun v. Shaikh Cherag Ali (3), in which Ghosh and Mitter, JJ., observing that when the main ground which a Judge below takes has no existence, the Appellate Court cannot be satisfied that his estimate of the evidence was a proper one, remanded the appeal for a re-consideration of the evidence as it really stood, and not as it had been supposed to have stood. We feel that we ought to pursue the same course here, discharge the decree of the learned District Judge, and direct that the appeal be re-heard. The costs will abide the result.

(1) 17 I. A. 122; 18 C. 23.
(2) 19 I. A. 1; 19 C. 249.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE— RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 14—Suit to set aside ultra vires order—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 73, 135—Collector's power to interfere with private property.

If a Collector purports to deal with land which is prima facie the property of an individual who has been in peaceful occupation thereof and not of the Government, he is not dealing with that land in his official capacity but is acting ultra vires.

Article 14 of the Limitation Act, 1877, does not apply to a suit to set aside an order which is ultra vires of the officer passing the order.

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Dharwar, in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1908.

Mr. Coyaji with him Mr. G. S. Mulgaokar, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Rao, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff herein sued to be declared owner of a piece of ground in Mouje Gadag measuring eight feet long from North to South and thirty-three feet broad from East to West, immediately to the south of the present building of the plaintiff and also for an injunction to restrain the defendant, the Secretary of State, from interfering with the plaintiff's enjoyment of the ground or extending his building thereover. Although the plaint does not, in so many words, pray to set aside the Deputy Collector's order hereinafter set out, still para. 4 which says inter alia that "this order is erroneous and illegal. Government had no title whatever to the plot" obviously involves such a consequence. It appears that the plaintiff purchased first a plot of land from the Basel Mission, which is marked on the plan (Exhibit 18) measuring as stated in the deed (Exhibit 10), fifty-six feet East and West to the North, twenty-nine feet East and West to the South, and fifty-seven feet on the east side and fifty-four feet on the west side, the Southern boundary being given as Government Betta land. Subsequently, the plaintiff bought another piece of land to the North of the former thirty-five feet East to West and eight feet North to South, and the plaintiff has built upon the said pieces of ground.

The learned Judge in the Court below has found, and we have had no argument addressed to us to the contrary, that the plaintiff purchased and is entitled to sixty-two feet from North to South, but that, as a matter of fact, he has up to the present time built over only sixty feet; in other words, that he is entitled to build over a space of two feet further to the South than what he has already built over.

On the 27th December 1906, the District Deputy Collector passed the order (Exhibit 24), the effect of which was to restrain the plaintiff from building over the said two feet. It was in the following terms:—

"I personally inspected the ground in dispute and also took measurements. It is not now in the condition in which it was when it was purchased. The building of that time is removed and the present one is newly built. In the deed of sale under which this ground was purchased, the boundaries of the ground purchased have been mentioned. It is mentioned therein that on the North there is the backyard of Gowda. Recently, out of that backyard, a portion adjoining this ground in dispute was got by Malkajappa by way of purchase. To the East thereof, he now holds what has now come to the share of Dyamangowda. The old wall built on the boundary of the backyard of his share exists now. That wall alone is the index to determine the ground purchased. In the deed of sale, the measurements of four sides have been mentioned. From the corner between the North and the East, (that is), from the North-East corner of the above wall, the measurement North to South from the corner to the East along the whole length of the building is fifty-seven feet. Malkajappa says that the measurement of the building should be taken in a straight line and that thus the ground up to the point at which it measures fifty-seven feet to the South belongs to him. What he says is not correct. In the deed of sale, it is mentioned that towards the East the measurement of the building including an open ground and trees is fifty-seven feet. It is also mentioned that the measurement East to West is fifty-six feet towards the North. These two measurements are found to be correct if they are taken from the above-mentioned North East corner. What Malkajappa says is wrong. The building now existing and the measurement in the sale-deed tally (a difference of one foot or half a foot is not of any importance. Now, after the dispute arose, the Circle-Inspector took measurements according to scale. They might not have been taken in that manner when they were entered in the deed of sale formerly). From the existing condition, it does not appear that the Government land is included in the building now built by Malkajappa. Therefore, it does not appear necessary to take further steps in this matter. But now the building should not be allowed to be extended on the South over a larger space than it occupies at present. It should be allowed to remain in its present dimensions. Besides informing Malakajappa in writing of the above decision, steps should be taken to supply a dakhla (a copy of it) to the village also."

We have set the order out at length, for it seems to us that it is an order which "interfered with the plaintiff's possession so as to give rise to a cause of action, and not simply administrative orders which need no setting aside." See per Parsons, J., Surannanna v. Secretary of State for India (1). The plaint was filed on the 11th of August 1908, and the defendant has raised a plea of limitation, under Article 14 of the Limitation Act of 1877. The plaintiff in his plaint says that he unsuccessfully filed before the Revenue authorities appeals against the District Deputy Collector. But we agree with the learned Judge's opinion that that fact will not affect the question of limitation. See Abaji v. Secretary of State for India (2). The learned Judge held, as we have pointed out, that the plaintiff is in fact entitled to the two feet extra to the south of his present building; but that the suit is barred under Article 14 of the Limitation Act.

The question we have to decide is: Is this view correct? It is admitted that the Deputy Collector in, passing the said order, purported to act under section 37 of the Land Revenue Code, which runs thus:—

"All public roads, lanes and paths, the bridges, ditches, dikes and fences, on, or beside, the same, the bed of the sea and of harbours and creeks below high-water mark, and of rivers, streams, nalas, lakes and tanks, and all canals, and water-courses, and all standing and flowing water, and all lands, wherever situated, which are not the property of individuals or of aggregates of persons legally capable of holding property, and except in so far as any rights of such persons may be established in or over the same and except as may be otherwise provided in any law for the time being in force, are and are, hereby declared to be, with all rights in or over the same, or appertaining thereto, the property of Government; and it shall be lawful for the Collector, subject to the orders of the Commissioner, to dispose of them in such a manner as he may deem fit, or as may be authorized by general rules sanctioned by Government, subject always to the rights of way, and all other rights of the public or of individuals legally subsisting.

(2) 22 B. 579 at p. 582.

"Explanation:—In this section 'high-water mark' means the the highest point reached by ordinary spring tides at any season of the year."

Obviously, the important words in that section are "all lands, wherever situated, which are not the property of individuals, etc., and except in so far as any rights of such persons may be established in or over the same."

Section 135 of the Land Revenue Code runs as follows:—

"Any suit instituted in a Civil Court to set aside any order passed by the Collector under section 37 or 129, in respect of any land situated within the site of a village, town or city, shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence, if it has not been instituted within one year from the date of the order."

Article 14 of the Limitation Act of 1877 runs as follows:—"To set aside any act or order of an officer of Government in his official capacity, not herein otherwise expressly provided for." The words "or order" were not in the Limitation Act of 1871. The important words in that Article are "in his official capacity." Judging of this case by the light of this legislation alone, it appears to us that, if a Collector purports to deal with land which is prima facie the property of an individual, who has been in peaceful occupation thereof and not of the Government, and passes an order with reference thereto, he is not dealing with that land in his official capacity, but is acting ultra vires. If this is so, then the judgment of Jenkins, C. J., in Surannanna v. Secretary of State for India (1), is directly applicable; so also is Bejoy Chand Mahatab Bahadur v. Kristo Mohini Dasi (3) (see especially Trevelyan, J.'s judgment in that case); and Balvant Ramchandra v. Secretary of State for India (4). We have read the three judgments in Surannanna's case (1) but have been quite unable to differentiate this case from the judgment of Jenkins, C. J., nearly the whole of whose judgment is applicable to the present case.

(3) 21 C. 626.

(4) 29 B. 480; 7 Bom. L. R. 497.

If we are right in this opinion, it follows that the decree in the lower Court must be reversed and the decree we would pass is:—Declare the plaintiff entitled to the strip of land measuring two feet North and South and thirty-three feet East and West, and grant an injunction restraining the defendant, his servants and agents, from interfering with his possession thereof, dismiss the plaintiff's suit in so far as he claims any relief in respect of the remaining six feet of the said southern strip and direct each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Decree reversed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104, sub-s. (1) cl. (c)—Appeal—Award—Order modifying award—How far appealable.

The provision in clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 104 of the Civil Procedure Code that an appeal shall lie from an order modifying or correcting an award, does not confer an unrestricted right of appeal, and when an order has been made modifying an award, the validity of the whole award cannot be called in question in an appeal preferred against that order, but the appeal is allowed against the order only in so far as it modifies the award.

Appeal from the order of the Sub-Judge of Gaya, dated September 21, 1911.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Appellant.

Babus Umakali Mukherji and Khetra Mohan Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The substantial question of law which calls for decision in this appeal relates to the construction of section 104, sub-section (1), clause (c), of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. That clause provides that an appeal shall lie from an order modifying or correcting an award. On behalf of the appellant, it has been argued that this clause, in effect, confers an unrestricted right of appeal; in other words, that when an order has been made by which an award has been modified or corrected, in an appeal preferred against that order, the validity of the whole award may be called in question. On behalf of the respondent, it has been argued, on the other hand, that the true effect of the clause is to allow an appeal against the order only in so far as it modifies or corrects the award. In our opinion, there is no room for controversy that the contention of the appellant is unfounded. If the argument of the appellant were to prevail, the result would be that the party in whose favour the award has been modified or corrected would be at liberty to prefer an appeal and to question the propriety of the award in so far as it went against him. This could hardly have been intended by the Legislature. In the case before us, the appellant was the defendant in an action for money commenced against him by the plaintiff-respondent. The matters in controversy were referred to three arbitrators who submitted their award in due course. The defendant took exception to the award on all possible grounds The Subordinate Judge considered those objections in detail and overruled every one of them except the objection as to costs. He held that the arbitrators had no authority to make an award as to the costs of the litigation. The result was that the Subordinate Judge modified the award in so far as the order for costs was concerned and confirmed the award in every other respect. The appellant now contends that as an order had been made modifying the award, although the modification is in his favour, he is entitled in the present appeal to re-agitate all the questions on the merits which were decided against him by the Subordinate Judge. In support of this view, reference has been made to decisions under the Code of 1882, of which Kali Prosanno Ghose v. Raiani Kant (1) may be taken as the type, where it was held that upon an appeal against a decree made in accordance with an award it was competent to the Court to consider whether there was any legal award on which a valid decree could be founded. Those decisions are of no assistance to the appellant, whose case must be determined with reference to the terms of the provisions of the Code of 1908. We are, therefore, of opinion that the only question open for consideration in the present appeal is the question of costs. In so far as that question is concerned, it has not been suggested that it is in any way improper.

The result, therefore, is that the order of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Maintenance—Minor son—Right to maintenance not dependent on custody—Charge on property of father—High Court—Law applicable to Muhammadan family relations—English Law—Hindu Law—Cutchi Memons.

When the family relations of Muhammadans, such as marriage, guardianship and maintenance, come into litigation before the High Court of Bombay, the Court should be guided by the laws and usages of Muhammadans. The English law of family relations cannot be applied to such cases.

The rights of maintenance are enforceable under Anglo-Muhammadan Law and the right to enforce them under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code is unaffected by the fact that there is a concurrent permission for their enforcement in Criminal Courts under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Under Muhammadan Law, a minor son can sue his father for maintenance. This right to maintenance can be enforced against the father even when the custody of the minor is withheld from the father and the minor is in the lawful custody of his mother.

Emperor v. Ayshabai, 6 Bom. L. R. 536; 1 Cr. L. J. 599, relied upon.

The maintenance of a minor son cannot be charged on the father's property.

Cutchi Memons are governed by the principles of Hindu Law with regard to inheritance and succession only and not with regard to maintenance.

MAHOMED JUSAB v. HAJI ADAM.

Messrs. Dastur and Havelivalla, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Jinnah and Desai, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff a minor son, sues by his next friend, his mother, to recover maintenance from the defendant, his father. The plaintiff is a boy under seven years of age and in the lawful custody of his mother who has, however, been divorced by his father. It is sought to charge the maintenance on the father's property. The parties are Cutchi Memons subject in matters of inheritance and succession to Hindu law.

The defendant pleads that a minor son cannot sustain a suit for maintenance against his father and that the amount claimed is excessive and not chargeable on the father's property.

The first question to decide is the law applicable to the case. It has been contended that the English law under which the father's duty to provide maintenance is a moral and not a legal obligation, as pointed out at page 114, para. 266 of Vol. 17 of Halsbury's Laws of England, is applicable under the terms of the Letters Patent of 1823, continued in force by clause 19 of the present Letters Patent of this Court. Those terms are as follows: "Yet, nevertheless, in the cases of Mahomedans....., their inheritance and succession to lands, rents and goods, and all matters of contract and dealing between party and party shall be determined in the case of Mahomedans by the laws and usages of the Mahomedans...or by such laws and usages as the same would have been determined by if the suit had been brought and the action commenced in a Native Court." Those terms would appear not to include family relations such as marriage, guardianship and maintenance, but, at the same time, they do not expressly exclude recourse in such cases to the laws and usages of Mahomedans. No authority has been quoted for the application of the English law of family relations and there are manifest difficulties and objections in the way of such application. Where the family relations of Mahomedans come into litigation, there remains, therefore, nothing for guidance except the laws and usages of Mahomedans, and such laws and usages have, as a matter of practice, it is believed, been followed in such cases in this Court.

It has, however, been contended that in any case the Muhammadan law as to maintenance is a law of imperfect obligation imposing a moral and not a legal obligation. The distinction between laws of perfect and imperfect obligation has been discussed in detail by Abdur Rahim at page 62 of his Principles of Mahammadan Jurisprudence, where he has described the laws as to domestic relations to be laws of perfect and not imperfect obligation Later on at page 343, Abdur Rahim has referred to the maintenance of children being a right against their father. So also Wilson, in Chapter VI of his Anglo Muhammadan Law, has treated the rights of maintenance as rights enforceable under Anglo Muhammadan Law, and in para. 142 has asserted the right of minor sons to maintenance from their father on the authority of page 456 of Baillie's Digest. The remarks of Trevelyan in Chapter XXII of his Law Relating to Minors would not appear to be based on any authority relating to Anglo Muhammadan Law. So that there would appear to be no reason to doubt that rights of maintenance are enforceable under Anglo Muhammadan Law. That being so, the right to enforce them in Civil Courts, under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, is unaffected by the fact that there is a concurrent provision for their enforcement in Criminal Courts under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code as pointed out in the case of Ghana Kanta v. Gereli (1).

It has, however, been further contended that the right to maintenance cannot be enforced under Muhammadan Law so long as the custody of the minor is withheld from the father. But this would not appear to be the case, for it has not been denied that the right to the coustody of the minor plaintiff, who is a boy under seven years of age, rests with his mother even though she has been divorced, and this right would appear to have been recognized by Muhammadan Law for the benefit of children of tender age and to be independent of the obligation resting on the father to maintain his children. These principles have been indicated upon the anthority of Hamilton's Hedaya, pages 138 and 146, in Wilson's Notes to paras. 49 and 107 of his Anglo Muhammadan Law, and have

There remains only for consideration the amount of maintenance to be allowed. It has been contended that bare subsistence can alone be enforced and not maintenance according to the condition of life of the father. This contention must, in my opinion, be allowed in default of express authority under Muhammadan Law, and no such authority has been quoted nor would appear to be forthcoming as stated in Wilson's Notes to para. 140 of his Anglo Muhammadan Law. Now the plaintiff has been offered, since his mother's divorce, Rs. 7-8-0 a month which cannot, in my opinion, be held to be less than bare subsistence for a child under seven years of age.

But in any case, it would, in my opinion, hardly be possible to award a higher maintenance upon the evidence produced as to the father's position in life. Prior to the divorce, the maintenance allowed for both mother and child was only Rs. 25 plus Rs. 9 for house rent though three years earlier as much as Rs. 30 plus Rs. 13 for house-rent had been allowed. This appears from the correspondence between the parties, Exhibits A and B. This maintenance was paid out of the earnings from the defendant-father's shop and rents received from two houses, and the defendant alleges the shop has been working for years at a serious loss and that Rs. 60 a month is all he gets for his share in the two houses. On the other hand, the mother alleges the shop to be worth Rs. 100 to 150 a month and the rents six or seven hundred rupees, but there is nothing beyond the mother's own statement in support of her estimate of the income, which would appear to have greatly exaggerated the father's real position in life. It has only to be added that no authority has been quoted for charging the maintenance on the father's property and there would appear to be none under Muhammadan Law. No distinct interest can be claimed in the father's property, for though the parties are Cutchi Memons, it is only with regard to inheritance and succession that they can claim to be governed by the principles of Hindu Law. Reference was made to the case of Haji Noor Mahomed v. Macleod (3), in support of a wider extension to Cutchi Momons of Hindu Law. But that was a decision of a Single Judge purporting to follow the Appellate Bench decision in the case In the matter of Haroon Mahomed (4), and it appears from the remarks at page 194 of that report that the decision rested actually on the application only of the rules of succession of Hindu Law. It will not, therefore, conflict with the decisions in the cases of Ahmedbhoy v. Cassumbhoy (5) and Bai Baiji v. Bai Santok (6).

Upon the issue whether the plaint discloses any cause of action—my finding must accordingly be in the affirmative; upon the issue whether the defendant is not entitled to have the plaintiff to live with him and to maintain him in his own house—in the negative; upon the issue whether a minor Cutchi Memon can sustain a suit for separate maintenance against his father and have the maintenance charged on the property in his father's hands whether self-acquired or ancestral—that he can sustain the suit but not so as to charge the maintenance on the father's property; and upon the issue whether Rs. 7-8 agreed to be paid for maintenance of the plaintiff in the "talaknama" of the 2nd April 1911 is not a proper amount of maintenance having regard to the position and income of the defendant, and if not what other sum would be proper maintenance for the plaintiff—that Rs. 7-8 as agreed to be paid is a proper amount. There must, therefore, be a decree in favour of the plaintiff declaring that he is entitled to recover from the defendant maintenance at the rate of Rs. 7-8 per month and for recovery of arrears at that rate due from the 1st March 1911 to judgment. As the plaintiff was offered maintenance at that rate before the institution of these proceedings, each party must bear his own costs.

ORDER.—The facts of this case are set out in the order of reference dated the 13th December 1911, and the point for decision is whether, in view of the language of Order XXI, rule 2, sub-rule (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, a Court executing a decree can, for the purpose of deciding whether or not the application for execution is within time, recognize a payment made by the judgement-debtor which has not been certified or recorded in the manner prescribed by Order XXI, rule 2, sub-rules (1) and (2).

As stated in the referring order, there is a long series of decisions of the various High Courts to support the proposition that such payments can be recognised for the purpose of determining a question of limitation. Most of these decisions are cited in the case reported in Roshan Singh v. Mata Din (1).

On the other hand, there is the decision in the contrary sense of a Judge of this Court in Musammat Sheorani v. Chandarpal (2).

All these rulings were passed with reference to the terms of the last clause of section 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, which reads as follows:—

"Unless such a payment or adjustment has been certified as aforesaid, it shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree."

The corresponding provision of the new Code which applies to the case in hand is expressed in the following language:—

"A payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree."

The difference in the language of these two enactments was pointed out in the referring order as justifying the conclusion that the intention of the Legislature was to prevent the recognition of such payments for any purpose whatever. It has been strenuously argued on behalf of the decree-holder (opposite party) that the alteration in language has not effected any change in the meaning of the law and the only object of the alteration was to remove words which were redundant. We are unable to yield to this contention for it appears to us that as the rule now stands, it embodies an absolute and general prohibition forbidding the recognition of such payments for any purpose whatsoever. To say that a payment or adjustment shall not be recognized is a different thing from saying that it shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree. We do not think, therefore, we should follow the rulings relied upon by the decree-holder in this case, which rest upon the interpretation of an enactment the language of which has been materially altered since. And, as already pointed out, the interpretation put upon section 258 of the former Code was not accepted in the case reported in Musammat Sheorani v. Chandarpal (2). It is said that the report in the latter case does not show that the point was argued. Be that as it may, the opinion of the learned Judge responsible for the ruling was not a mere obiter dictum. He had to decide the question of limitation and held that an uncertified payment could not be taken into consideration in deciding the question. Apart from this, it appears to us that the interpretation of the rule now pressed upon us on behalf of the decree-holder would involve the introduction into the rule, as it now stands, of qualifying words which are not to be found in it. We are of opinion, therefore, that as the law now stands, an uncertified payment cannot be recognized by the Court executing the decree for the purpose of deciding an issue of limitation. We were also pressed with the argument that the lower Court's order should not be disturbed in revision merely on the ground that it had come to an erroneous decision on a point of law. Apart from the fact that the learned Judge, most probably from inadvertence, failed to follow a ruling of this Court, it cannot be said that there was merely a wrong decision on a question of law. In coming to the decision, the Judge did what, in our opinion, the law forbids in recognizing a payment uncertified by the decree-holder. His doing so amounts, in our opinion, to an illegality or material irregularity which is liable to be corrected by proceedings in revision. We allow this application, set aside the order of the Court below and direct that the application for execution be dismissed as time-barred. The applicants will get their costs in this Court.

(1) 26 A. 36; A. W. N. (1903) 179.

(2) 13 O. C. 137; 6 Ind. Cas. 1000.

Application allowed.

ENATULLA TALUKDAR—DEFENDANT No. 1—(RESPONDENT IN SECOND APPEAL)—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 22—Occupancy, non-transferable—Purchase by co-sharer landlord of non-transferable occupancy-right, effect of.

The case of Girish Chandra Chowdhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy, 27 C. 473, which lays down that, in the case of a non-transferable occupancy-holding, the holding itself, as apart from the right of occupancy, cannot be sold so as to give the transferee a right to retain possession of it, has not been overruled by any subsequent decision of a Full Bench.

Where such a holding is transferred to one of the co-proprietors, the occupancy-right ceases to exist, and the other co-proprietors are entitled to have joint possession with the transferee co-proprietor.

Girish Chandra Chowdhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy, 27 C. 473, followed.

Appeal, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, from a decision of Mr. Justice Holmwood, dated April 24th, 1911, in Second Appeal No. 1589 of 1909, affirming the decree of the Sub-Judge of Pabna and Bogra, dated May 4th, 1909, which had reversed that of the Munsif of Bogra, dated June 17th, 1908.

FACTS.—The plaintiff brings this suit to eject the defendant No. 1, Enatulla talukdar, from a 7-annas share of a jote on the ground that the jote was an occupancy-holding in possession of one Sarup Koch, the tenant, and was purchased by defendant No. 1 in execution of a mortgage decree against Sarup. After the auction purchase, the defendant No. 1 is in the possession of the jote as a trespasser, the holding not being transferable by custom. Hence plaintiff seeks to recover khas possession to the extent of 7 annas proprietary share either jointly with or on partition from her co-sharers, the pro forma defendants, by ejecting the principal defendant.

The defence, inter alia, was that section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars this suit.

The first Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to get khas-possession jointly with the pro forma defendants.

The defendant appealed to the District Court. That Court set aside the judgment of the Munsif and dismissed the suit. The Court made the following observations:—

"The original tenant, Sarup, has been in occupation of the homestead land appertaining to the jote with permission of the defendant No. 1. So the lower Court, relying on the ruling in Sailabala Debi v. Sriram Bhattacharji (1), passed a decree in plaintiff's favour for joint possession with other co-sharers; but it appears that section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the interpretation given to it in Jowodul Huq v. Ram

(1) 11 C. W. N. 873; 7 C. L. J. 303.

Das Saha (2), which was approved in Ram Mohun Pal v. Sheikh Kachu (3), were not brought to his notice. It has been held in these rulings that "the result of the purchase by co-sharer landlord of the occupancy-holding, is not the extinction of the tenancy right altogether, but only his occupancy-right in the holding," and that, "a co-sharer landlord is not entitled to joint khas possession with his co-sharer who has purchased the occupancy-holding of a tenant." The defendant No. 1, who has purchased the occupancy-holding in suit, is admittedly plaintiff's co-sharer. So the plaintiff is not entitled to joint khas possession to the extent of her share. This appeal is allowed and the decree of the lower Court set aside and judgment reversed and suit dismissed."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. The appeal was heard by Mr. Justice Holmwood, who dismissed the appeal by the following judgment:—

HOLMWOOD, J.—The only question which arises in this case is whether the ruling in Girish Chandra Chowdhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy (4) is still of full force and effect after the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Ram Mohan Pal v. Sheikh Kachu (3). The learned Judges in making the reference to the Full Bench clearly stated that they did not agree in the distinction drawn in the case of Girish Chandra Chowdhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy(4), distinguishing transferable from non-transferable occupancy-right. In either case, they considered the occupancy-right must cease to exist after purchase by the sale or joint proprietor. Now, although the Full Bench did not discuss the case of Girish Chandra Chowdhury v. Kedar Chandra Roy (4), it did lay down in very clear terms that the case of Jowaldul Haq v. Ram Das Saha(2) was rightly decided, as also two other cases which followed that case, and it was pointed out that this case, Jowadul Haq v. Ram Das Saha (2), was practically a decision of six Judges, and that the only thing which ceased to exist was the occupancy-right and this distinction is based by Mr. Justice Ghose upon this very case of a co-sharer landlord. He says: "To my mind there is an obvious distinction between the two cases contemplated by section 22. In the first mentioned case, I mean that in clause (1), the interest of the raiyat and the landlord becomes united in one and the same person, and the necessary result is that the tenant's right is merged in the higher right of the landlord, because the latter could not hold the land as a raiyat to himslf. But the like result does not follow in the other case, for the co-sharer landlord having acquired the rights of a raiyat could hold the land as a raiyat, if not to himself certainly to the other co-sharer landlord"; and this is precisely what has now been enacted in the latest Bengal Tenancy Act. Furthermore, Mr. Justice Ghose points out that "Section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act speaks of an occupancy-right, and in the circumstances mentioned in clause (2), it says, such 'occupancy-right shall cease to exist.' But it does not say that the holding itself shall cease to exist." As far as I can gather, the only ground upon which the plaintiff can come in is that taken in the case of Girish Chandra Chowdhry v. Kedar Chandra Roy (4), namely, that the sale of a non transferable occupancy-holding amounts to an abandonment of the holding. But as the Full Bench held that the tenancy does not come to an end by transfer to a joint landlord, I am unable to see how the question of abandonment can arise. In this particular case, the vendor was allowed to remain on the land in occupation of his homstead by the purchaser landlord. Although this, under the ruling in Sailabala Debi v. Sriram Bhattacharji (1), does not appear in every case to get rid of the plea of abandonment, yet if the tenancy is, as the Full Bench holds, continuous and is not extinguished, then it seems to me that the theory of abandonment cannot apply.

I think that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in the view which he takes of the Full Bench ruling, and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff appealed under section 15 of the Letters Patent.

Chowdhry v. Kedar Chandra Roy (4), for we are unable to perceive how it can be said that this case has been overruled by any subsequent decision of a Full Bench. On this basis, we must grant the plaintiff the relief to which she is entitled, that is, joint possession to the extent of 7 annas with the other co-sharers, that is, the principal defendants and the pro-forma defendants. We do not think that in the circumstances of the case, it is necessary to consider any further or incidental relief.

The appellant must have her costs in the High Court and in the lower Courts from the respondents, in proportion to her success, that is to say, on the basis of Rs. 60 the market-value of the 7 annas share.

Musammat KUBRA BIBI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Damages—Breach of contract—Mortgagee failing to discharge prior incumbrances with money left in his hands, effect of—Set-off—Court-fee.

Where a mortgagor, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, left money in the hands of the mortgagee to pay off a prior incumbrance, which the mortgagee did not pay off, the mortgagor is entitled in law to recover from the mortgagee the damages resulting from his failure.

A plea of set off is quite distinct from the plea of payment and should not be entertained until Court-fee with respect to it has been paid by the defendant in the Court of first instance, nor should it be entertained if the claim is not within the jurisdiction of the Court.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated 7th February 1911, upholding that of the Munsif, Akbarpur, dated 1st November 1910.

Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the appeal of one Syed Muhammad Raza, who was the defendant in the Court of first instance in a suit brought by one Musammat Kubra Bibi for the recovery of Rs. 494-3 by way of damages for breach of contract. The facts are somewhat complicated but for the purpose of disposing of this appeal, it will not be necessary to enter into all the details. The contract for breach of which damages are sought by the plaintiff was embodied in a document, dated the 17th February 1900, and executed by Kubra Bibi in favour of Mahammad Raza. This document was a mortgage of certain shares in three villages, Shadipur, Ninawan and Bebri, which were the property of Kubra Bibi. This property was already mortgaged to certain other persons, namely, Zahur Muhammad, Shafi Muhammad and one Baij Nath, but the land held in mortgage by these previous mortgages comprised certain plots of land in the village of Nandapur which were not included in the mortgage executed in favour of Muhammad Raza. To return to the deed executed in Muhammad Raza's favour, the mortgage-money was expressed to be Rs. 6,000 and it was stated that this sum was left with Muhammad Raza to pay off the previous mortgages. It will be apparent that the effect of the discharge of these previous mortgage-debts would have been to free the plots in Nandapur from the mortgages with which they were incumbered and to bring them into the possession of Musammat Kubra Bibi. The other mortgaged properties, of course, would have gone to Muhammad Raza in accordance with the terms of his mortgage. Kubra Bibi's case then was this, namely, that Muhammad Raza had failed to carry out his contract to redeem these previous mortgages, the result being that she was deprived of possession of these lands in Nandapur. She, therefore, sued for damages—the measure of damages being the amount of profits which could have accrued to her had these lands come into her possession after the previous mortgagees had been paid off. Both the lower Courts have decreed the claim. The main point taken in appeal here on behalf of the defendant-appellant is that he was not liable under the contract for damages. It is admitted that he did not pay off these previous mortgagees and that consequently the Nandapur lands did not come into the possession of Kubra Bibi. If we compare this contention with the defence which was set up by Muhammad Raza in the Court of first instance, it will appear that the case which has now been put forward on the appellant's behalf is inconsistent with the case he raised in the Court of the Munsif. In paragraph 13 of his written statement, the defendant, far from denying that there was a liability on his part for damages under the contract in suit, admitted that there was such a liability but put forward a fresh agreement, the effect of which according to him was to provide a method for the payment of the damages in question. He stated that in 1311 Fasli, it was agreed between him and Kubra Bibi that the loss she had incurred through her not getting possession of the Nandapur lands was to be made good by Muhammad Raza paying up the reveune due in respect of Kubra Bibi's share in the village of Nandapur. Evidence in support of this fresh agreement was put forward in the Court of first instance and was rejected as unworthy of credit. Both the Courts below have found that this agreement was not proved and this is a finding of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. To return to the contention which is pressed on behalf of the appellant here, the agreement is that although under the deed of 17th February 1900, money was left with Muhammad Raza to discharge the prior mortgages, he was under no legal duty to discharge those mortgages and, therefore, his failure to redeem them does not amount to any breach of contract for which damages can be claimed. I am unable to agree with this contention. In the deed executed in Muhammad Raza's favour, it is stated in the preamble that Kubra Bibi's property is in the possession of mortgagees and that interest is going on increasing to such an extent that the amount of the debts will soon exceed the value of the property. It is quite true, as pointed out by the appellant's learned Counsel, that this recital does not refer to the usufructuary mortgages in which the profits of the parties were being received in lieu of interest. Further on in the deed, it is said that the mortgage has been made with a view to discharging all the mortgage debts due to other mortgagees and that Rs. 6,000 are being left with Muhammad Raza for this purpose. At the bottom of the deed, there is a list of the various mortgagees who are to be paid off and this list includes the names of the mortgagees who are in possession of the Nandapur lands owned by Kubra Bibi. It may be, as argued by the appellant's learned Counsel, that this contract contains no express provision by which Muhammad Raza bound himself to discharge these previous mortgages at any particular time but I am quite satisfied that having regard to the situation of the parties, it must be taken that there was an implied promise on the part of Muhammad Raza to discharge the mortgage-debts. It cannot be doubted that what was in the mind of the mortgagor Kubra Bibi was that the result of her executing the mortgage in favour of Muhammad Raza and getting the previous mortgages discharged by him would be that she would come into possession of the Nandapur lands. It can hardly be supposed that the lady contemplated that she might have to wait for an indefinite time in order to get possession of these lands. On the contrary, it seems far more reasonable to suppose that what she wanted was to get possession of these lands as soon as possible. Mr. Wazir Hasan, who appears for the appellant, concedes that Kubra Bibi probably expected this result to follow from the transaction entered into between her and Muhammad Raza and it appears to me that once this concession is made, there is nothing to be said on behalf of the appellant. In the view which I take of this transaction, I have no doubt whatever that Muhammad Raza was under a legal obligation to discharge the previous mortgages promptly and to see that the Nandapur lands were made over to Musammat Kubra Bibi and as he had admittedly failed to discharge that duty, there can be no question as to his liability for damages for breach of contract. In the fifth ground of appeal, it is stated that the lower Appellate Court ought to have considered the effect of a particular sale deed, dated the 31st May 1901 ,both with regard to the question of agreement and to the question of the legal liability of Muhammad Raza for damages. This document is mentioned in paragraph 12 of the defendant's written statement, in which it is said that Kubra Bibi on the 31st May 1901 sold to Muhammad Raza the property mortgaged under the deed of the 17th February 1900 and other property for a sum of Rs. 14,000. It has been argued that this sale-deed had the effect of extinguishing the previous deed of the 17th February 1900 and of all the obligations incurred under it. It may be noted, in the first place, that this sale-deed of May 1901 was not produced in the Courts below nor has any satisfactory explanation of its non-production been put forward. There is no proof that any such deed was executed and, indeed, in the plaintiff's replication, it was denied that any such sale had ever taken place. It is impossible, therefore, to consider the legal effect of a document which was neither produced nor proved in the course of the trial. But, even assuming for a moment that this document had been produced and that its execution by Kubra Bibi had been established, I fail to see how it can be argued that the execution of the sale-deed released Muhammad Raza from any liability which he may have incurred by reason of his failure to redeem the previous mortgages. It has not been stated that the sale deed in question contains any express provision, which would have released Muhammad Raza from liability for damages, and if that is so, it cannot be contended that the mere execution of the sale-deed was a good discharge of any liability outstanding. The sale-deed may have had the effect of putting Muhammad Raza in the position of an owner instead of a mortgagee as he was before but in the absence of any express covenant, it would not release him from liability for damages for breach of any other covenant contained in the mortgage-deed. There only remains to be noticed another plea, namely, one of set off. It was alleged by Muhammad Raza that he had paid on Musammat Kubra's behalf certain sums on account of Government revenue due by her. These payments, he stated, were made in accordance with the agreement made in 1311 Fasli, to which reference has been made in a previous part of the judgment. He pleaded, therefore, that he was entitled to have credit for the sums paid on account of Government revenue. The Court of first instance found that as the agreement of 1311 Fasli had not been proved, it was not necessary to enter into the question of this payment of revenue. The Munsif remarked in his judgment that if the defendant had paid any sums on account of arrears of revenue due from Kabra Bibi, he might bring a suit for their recovery. The lower Appellate Court also refused to allow any claim of set-off to be raised in respect of these payments. It has been argued before me that a set-off should have been allowed but I am unable to agree that Muhammad Raza has any right to such a remedy. In the first place, no proper claim for set-off was put forward by the defendant in his pleadings. He only raised the plea of payment in order to show that nothing was owing by him to the plaintiff. No Court-fee was paid with respect to the sum mentioned in paragraph 16 of the written statement and, as has been pointed out by the respondent's learned Pleader, a claim for recovery of revenue paid on behalf of a co-sharer was not one of which a Civil Court could take cognizance. Suits of this nature lie only in the Revenue Courts. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the Courts below were correct in refusing to allow any set-off against the claim made by the plaintiff. The point of limitation which is mentioned in the memorandum of appeal has not been pressed. It is conceded that if the mortgage-deed of 1900 is evidence of a contract on behalf of Muhammad Raza to redeem the prior mortgages and thereby to procure the release of the Nandapur lands, then the suit is within time. As I have already decided in the respondent's favour that there was such a contract, the point of limitation fails. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

It has been brought to my notice by the parties in this case that I have omitted to deal with the 7th ground of appeal which is to the effect that the appellant was not liable for interest. The meaning of this plea is that the Courts below awarded the respondent interest on damages. It was conceded at the hearing of the appeal that no claim for interest on damages could properly lie inasmuch as the damages were supposed to be compensation for the total loss sustained by the plaintiff. The parties are agreed, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to succeed to this extent that the interest allowed by the lower Courts on damages should be disallowed. To this extent, therefore, the appeal should be decreed and in drawing up the decree of this Court, the office will be careful to see that the amount awarded by the Courts below as interest (Rs. 87-4-6) should be struck out.

Appeal allowed in part.

MOHESH CHANDRA SHAHA v. BRINDARANI CHOWDHURANI.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 324 OF 1910.

May 20, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Stephen and Mr. Justice Richardson.

MOHESH CHANDRA SHAHA AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

versus

Rani BRINDARANI CHOWDHURANI AND OTHERS—DECREE HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Appeal—Fruitless even if successful—Execution—Direction that properties, be sold in particular order—Appeal by judgment-debtor—Sale absolute—No appeal filed against order dismissing application to set aside sale—Whether appeal against first order competent.

In execution of a decree, the Court directed that the properties of the judgment-debtor should be sold in a particular order. The judgment-debtor appealed from that order. Before the appeal was heard, the properties were sold and objections to the sale were rejected:

Held, that the appeal was incompetent and should be dismissed, because, even if it were successful, it would be fruitless, as the sale could not now be set aside.

Appeal from the order of the Sub-Judge of Rungpur, dated April 6th, 1910.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose and Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhary, for the Appellants.

Babus Baidya Nath Dutt, Mukunda Nath Roy and Hem Chandra Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order made in the execution of a mortgage-decree on the 6th April 1910, directing that the mortgaged properties should be sold in the order in which they stood in the sale proclamation. Since this order was made, the properties have been sold in that order. That sale still stands although objections were taken to it not by the appellant now before us but by a third person. Now should the appellant succeed in making out that the order now before us is bad or improper, it would be futile for us to set it aside when that could not affect the sale which subsequently took place.

We say nothing as to the merits of the case before us which, in fact, have not been gone into. But we dismiss the appeal merely because the appeal, if it were successful, would be fruitless. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

RAJARAM v. KHANDU BALU.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No. 893 OF 1909.

November 25, 1911.

Present:—Sir Dinsha Davar, Judge.

RAJARAM RAJARAM—PLAINTIFF

versus

KHANDU BALU—DEFENDANT.

Gift—Deed of gift—Validity—Burden of proof—Absence of power of revocation—Suit for setting aside deed—Grounds for setting aside—Conditional gift—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 126.

The burden of proving that a deed of voluntary gift, executed by an old and infirm woman, was executed with the full knowledge of its contents and that she did so willingly and without any pressure or solicitations which might amount to the exercise of undue influence, lies heavily on the donee. It should be proved that the donor thoroughly understood the contents of the document she executed, that all the material clauses were explained to her, that she appreciated the effect the execution of the deed would have on her with respect to her property and that the deed carried out her intentions at that time. If these facts are proved, it would then be for the other side to show that some substantial reason exists why the deed should be set aside.

Henry v. Armstrong, (1881) 18 Ch D. 668; 44 L. T. 918; 30 W. R. 472, relied upon.

Any person of full age and sound mind, who has executed a voluntary deed of gift by which he has denuded himself of his property, is bound by his act; and if he himself comes to have the deed set aside, especially if he comes a long time afterwards, he must prove some substantial reason why the deed should be set aside.

A voluntary deed of gift is not voidable by the donor merely because it does not contain a power of revocation.

The absence of the power of revocation in a deed of gift is one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration when the Court has to consider whether a deed of gift shall stand or be set aside.

Henery v. Armstrong, (1881) 18 Ch. D. 668; 44 L. T. 918; 30 W. R. 472, Toker v. Toker, (1862) 31 Beav. 629; 9 Jur. (N. S.) 370, Villers v. Beaumont, (1682) 1 Vern. 100, Phillips v. Mullings, (1872) L. R. 7 Ch 244; 41 L. J. Ch. 211; 20 W. R. 129, Hall v. Hall, (1873) L. R. 8 Ch. 430; 42 L. J. Ch. 444; 21 L. T. 383; 21 W. R. 373, followed.

The donor and the donee may agree that on the happening of a specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor, a gift shall be suspended or revoked; but a gift which the parties agree shall be revocable wholly or in part at the mere will of the donor, is void wholly or in part as the case may be.

An old, infirm and illiterate woman executed a deed of gift by which she conveyed all her property to one of her nephews. She executed the deed of gift voluntarily while in possession of all her senses and without the exercise of any fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence on her. When she executed the deed of gift, she fully understood its contents and the effect it would have of divesting her of her property. The gift was her "free determined act" and she intended the gift to be irrevocable. Subsequently, she herself sued to have the gift set aside:

Held, that the deed of gift was binding on her and could not be set aside. The mere fact that the donor's feelings towards the donee subsequently underwent a change was not sufficient to set aside the gift.

Messrs. Jinnah and Desai, for the Plaintiffs.

Messrs Talyarkhan and Kanga, for the Defendant No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—In August 1909, Malubai, an old woman belgoning to the Telagu community of Bombay, presented a petition to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis. After investigation, the Prothonotary, on the 28th of September 1909, granted leave to sue as pauper and her petition then became her plaint in this suit. Malubai used to be a Muccadum of a gang of working women and was, previous to May 1908, possessed of a small house at Kamatipura worth about two or three thousand rupees. She apparently had no nearer relatives than the four sons of her three predeceased brothers. On the 8th of May 1908, she executed a deed of gift whereby she unconditionally transferred and made over her house as a free gift to one of her four nephews, named, Khandu Balu. She filed this suit for the purpose of having that deed of gift cancelled and the title-deeds of her property returned to her.

In her petition, she stated that she had intended to leave her property to her four nephews after her death, that Khandu at first "taking advantage of her old age and ignorance" represented to her that she should execute some document by which her aforesaid intention would be carried out, and that he said "he would arrange for such a document being prepared." She adds that Khandu, taking advantage of the absence of her other nephew Rajaram, proposed to her that she should leave the said property after her death to him alone and she adds that, though she was unwilling to do so, Khandu finally prevailed upon her to give her consent to that arrangement. She then goes on to say that on the 8th of May 1908, she was taken to the office of a Solicitor in Fort, where she was asked to put her mark to a document which was represented to her as the document giving effect to the aforesaid arrangement. On the same day, she says, she admitted execution of the document before the Registrar, but subsequently discovered that the said document was a gift in favour of the defendant and, under the circumstances narrated in her petition, she claimed that she was entitled to have the deed of gift cancelled and her property restored to her.

It seems that, after executing the deed of gift on the 15th of June 1908, Malubai made a Will of which she appointed Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji Kalewar and another, executors. Before her suit came on for hearing, she died on the 25th of December 1909. Rao Saheb Manaji proved her Will and applied to the Prothonotary to have his name substituted as plaintiff in place of the deceased Malubai and to be allowed to continue the suit in forma pauperis, and by an order, dated the 17th of June 1910, made by the then Prothonotary, Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji became the plaintiff in this pauper suit.

The case came on for hearing before me on the 1st of April 1911, and the very first question raised by the learned Counsel for the defendant was, "whether the plaintiff can maintain or continue the suit in forma pauperis." That question was argued before me at an adjourned hearing, and on the 16th of June, I delivered my judgment and found on the preliminary issue that Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji, being a man of means, was not, for the reasons I gave in my judgment, entitled to maintain or continue the suit in forma pauperis: Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji Kalewar v. Khandoo Baloo (1). The plaintiff then asked for a short time to consider his position and, on the 19th of June 1911, his Counsel announced to the Court that he was not prepared to go on with the suit otherwise than in forma pauperis. On this occasion, two of the four nephews of Malubai, namely Rajaram and Shanker, applied to me to be made parties to the suit and to be permitted to go on with it.

After I heard arguments on the application, on the 23rd of June, I made an order whereby the two applicants were made plaintiffs, the fourth nephew, who did not join in the application, was made a co-defendant with Khandu and Rao Saheb Manaji was retained on the record and made the third defendant in suit. In this altered form, the suit came on for hearing before me on the 9th of November and has occupied me several days in trying the question whether the deed of gift of the 8th of May 1908 ought to be upheld or cancelled.

At the first hearing, the defendants' Counsel raised only one issue, namely, whether the deed of gift dated the 8th of May 1908 is not valid and binding on all parties. Mr. Jinnah for the plaintiffs raised two other issues, namely, whether the first defendant did not stand towards Malubai in the position of active confidence and whether Malubai was not a purdanashin woman. As the onus of the last two issues undoubtedly lay on the plaintiffs, I held that they should begin. Plaintiffs led no evidence, their Counsel merely put in correspondence and the evidence which Malubai had given in a Small Cause Court case, and closed the plaintiffs' case. On behalf of the defendant, Khandu Balu, Mr. Solomon Judah, a Solicitor of this Court, his managing clerk, Shanker Sayanna Persha, Mr. Almeida, the Sub-Registrar, Raju Babaji, a leading member of the Telagu community of Bombay, and the first defendant himself gave evidence. Plaintiffs then applied for leave to call rebutting evidence and the first plaintiff and Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji were examined on behalf of the plaintiffs.

The case of the plaintiffs, as originally framed by Malubai and as set out in the present plaintiffs' joint affidavit, affirmed on the 20th of June 1911, in support of their application to be made parties, is somewhat different from the case placed before the Court by the learned Counsel who conducted the plaintiffs' case. Malubai's grievance, as it is gathered from her plaint, is that it was represented to her that the document she executed was not a gift out and out to Khandu but that it was a document which carried out the arrangement that the property should be left to Khandu after her death. Her case was, to all intents and purposes, one of misrepresentation made to her and fraud practised on her. The present plaintiffs took up the same attitude. In paragraph No. 2 of their affidavit to which I have referred, they say:—

"On the 8th of May 1908, the defendant above-named by fraud and misrepresentation caused the said Malubai to execute a deed of gift of the said property in his own favour representing to her that it was her Will by which she was bequeating her property in equal shares to her four nephews."

It will be observed that Malubai herself does not put her case as high as the present plaintiffs have put in their affidavit. She admits in her plaint that she consented to execute a document whereby the property was to be left to Khandu alone.

Mr. Jinnah for the plaintiffs in the very beginning admitted that he was not in a position to adduce any evidence of misrepresention and fraud, but he contended that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, to the fact that Malubai was an old and infirm woman, that she had no independent Solicitor but that the same Solicitor who acted for the donor acted for the donee, having regard again to the fact that there was no power of revocation inserted in the deed and to the fact that she was not told that she could have such a power inserted, having regard also to the fact that she had no other property except this house, that this was a deed which could not be and ought not to be supported and must be cancelled. Mr. Desai, who took up the conduct of the plaintiffs' case in its later stages, contended that a voluntary gift, which leaves the donor destitute with no provision for his or her maintenance, would of itself be sufficient to entitle the donor to come to the Court and ask for its cancellation, and that a mere verbal promise by the donee that he or she will take care of the donor is not sufficient. The learned Counsel further contended that a deed evidencing a voluntary gift would be set aside, if there was no power of revocation in it, unless it is proved that the executant had independent advice, that he or she thoroughly understood the effect of omitting that power and that it was the intention of the donor that such a power should be excluded.

I may state at once, before I discuss the evidence more fully, that there is not in this case any evidence whatever to support the original allegation of Malubai and the present plaintiffs that this deed of gift was obtained by any misrepresentation or fraud whatsoever. In fact, that aspect of the case was practically abandoned before me at the hearing, and stress was laid on what is stated in several English cases on the point of voluntary gifts and settlements, and I was asked to hold that on the admitted facts of this case, it would be inequitable to allow this deed to stand. I think it is desirable, under the circumstances, first to ascertain how the law applicable to this case stands, before I proceed to discuss the evidence.

It has been argued before me with great insistence that the mere fact that Malubai was an old woman of sixty and in feeble health and that because there is no power of revocation in the deed of gift and that a common Solicitor acted for both, the entire burden of proving that the transaction was thoroughly understood and assented to by her and was a righteous one was on the donee. And on the authority of Coutts v. Acworth (2), it was further contended that the mere fact that there was no power of revocation was quite sufficient for the Court to hold that the deed must be set aside.

It is true that this being a voluntary gift, the onus of proving that Malubai executed the deed with the full knowledge of its contents and did so willingly and without any pressure or solicitations, which might amount to the exercise of undue influence, lies heavily on the defendant Khandu Balu. But I think it is as well to keep in mind the exact position of the parties in such a case, as laid down by Mr. Justice Kay in Henry v. Armstrong (3). The learned Judge there says (at page 669) :—

"No doubt there are to be found in reported cases dicta to the effect that the onus of supporting a voluntary deed rests upon those who set it up; but I do not think that these dicta go so far as to say that whenever a voluntary settlement is impeached on any ground whatever, the onus is at once thrown on those who would maintain it. As I understand it, the law is that anybody of full age and sound mind, who has executed a voluntary deed by which he has denuded himself of his own property, is bound by his own act, and if he himself comes to have the deed set aside, especially if he comes a long time afterwards, he must prove some substantial reason why the deed should be set aside."

In this case Malubai, though aged and physically weak, was, at the date of the execution of the deed and long before and after it, of perfectly sound mind; there are indications in the case that she was a woman of intelligence. The question, therefore, is whether she thoroughly understood the contents of the document she executed, whether all the material clauses were explained to her, whether she appreciated the effect the execution of the deed would have on her with respect to her property, and whether the deed carried out her intentions at that time. If the evidence establishes all these facts, and the onus of proving this is entirely on the defendant Khandu and when he has discharged that onus, it would be for the plaintiffs to show that some substantial reason exists why the deed should be set aside. I confess, on the question of the absence of the power of revocation, I was considerably startled at the language used by Vice-Chancellor Malins in Coutts v. Acworth (2). The learned Judge there says (at p. 567) :—

"If I had the power, I would lay it down as a rule, that wherever a voluntary gift of a material part of a person's property is made [unless, as in Toker v. Toker (4), it is prepared by an independent Solicitor, and the donor distinctly repudiates and refuses to have the power of revocation], it is the duty of the Solicitor to insist that there should be, and almost to go to the extent of refusing to execute such an instrument unless there be, a power of altering that which was done, so as to meet the various exigencies that may arise in future life."

A study of the case law on this subject, however, leads me to believe, that the Vice-Chancellor has given far greater importance to the absence of the power of revocation in deeds of voluntary gifts than the law justifies. In Villers v. Beaumont (5), which is a very ancient case, it was held that a voluntary settlement without a power of revocation shall bind the party and shall not be defeated by a subsequent Will.

In the case of Henry v. Armstrong (3), which I have cited above, after discussing the question of onus, Mr. Justice Kay held that a voluntary deed of settlement is not voidable by the settlor merely because it does not contain a power of revocation.

In Phillips v. Mullings (6), Lord Hatherley, L. C., referring to Coutts v. Acworth (2), says:—

"Some cases, however, have attempted to lay down what ought to be in such an instrument. It has, for instance, been almost laid down in Coutts v. Acworth (2) that where there is no power of revocation, the deed will be set aside.....But whether there should be a power of revocation or not must depend upon the circumstances; and it cannot be laid down as a general rule that such a deed would be voidable unless it contained a power of revocation."

In Toker v. Toker (4), the Master of the Rolls sums up the law on the subject of voluntary deeds in these words (at p. 644):—

"The law of this Court is very strict on the subject of voluntary deeds, it gives no assistance to the completion of them; it does not lay down as a rule that they are always void; and the mere alteration of intention is not sufficient to induce this Court to interfere and cancel an instrument which was fully understood and deliberately executed by the grantor. That I believe to be the case here, and being so, I cannot interfere, because the feelings of the plaintiff towards the defendant are now no longer what they were in November, 1853."

This case in appeal is reported in Toker v. Toker (7), where, in affirming the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, Lord Justice Turner says (at p. 491):—

"I think it is going too far to say that no voluntary settlement can be valid unless the settlor is advised that there should be a power of revocation inserted in it. What the Court has to be satisfied of in these cases, as I apprehend, is this, that the settlement whether containing or not containing a power of revocation, is the free determined act of the party making it; and the absence of advice as to the insertion of a power of a revocation is a circumstance, and a circumstance merely, to be weighed in connection with the other circumstances of the case."

And similar was the finding of the Court of appeal in Hall v. Hall (8), where it was held that the absence of the power of revocation and the fact that the attention of the settlor was not called to that absence did not make a voluntary settlement invalid. They were merely circumstances to be considered in deciding on the validity of a voluntary settlement.

Throughout this case it has been strenuously contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the fact that the deed of gift in question did not contain a power of revocation in favour of the donor was in itself sufficient to enable the Court to declare against its validity; and it was further urged that that fact coupled with the facts that the donor was an old woman and illiterate, that she disposed of the whole of her property, leaving herself nothing and that she had no independent Solicitor acting for her alone, made it incumbent on the Court to hold that the deed of gift was not valid and binding on her and ought to be set aside and cancelled.

The arguments urged in respect of the absence of the power of revocation ignored the fact that in India a deed of gift with an unconditional power of revocation in favour of the donor would make the gift a nuliity. Section 126 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that the donor and donee may agree that on the happening of a specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor, a gift shall be suspended or revoked, but a gift which the parties agree shall be revocable wholly or in part at the mere will of the donor, is void wholly or in part as the case may be.

When this was pointed out to the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs, he argued that in this instance the power of revocation may have been made conditional on the failure of the donee to maintain herself and her nephew Vithal. On the authorities, it seems to me clear that the absence of the power of revocation in a deed of gift is after all one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration, when the Court has to consider whether a deed of gift shall stand or be set aside.

Having regard, therefore, to the principles laid down in the cases I have referred to, I will now proceed to consider the evidence and apply those principles to the present case. Malubai is, unfortunately for the plaintiffs, dead and they have not the benefit of her evidence in this case. But before her death she gave evidence in respect of this very deed of gift in a Small Cause Court suit, which she had filed against Khandu's mother, to enforce payment of rent for the occupation of a portion of the property in question. That evidence I have permitted the plaintiffs' Counsel to put in. In the course of her cross-examination, Malubai stated:—

"Rajaram is disappointed on account of this gift to Khandu. The Solicitor had read out and explained to me the contents of the document. The Registrar had also asked me about the contents."

In her plaint she admits that she agreed to execute a document by which her property was to go to Khandu after her death. Four witnesses, whom I consider to be both independent and trustworthy, have been examined on behalf of the first defendant Khandu, and their evidence I have no hesitation whatever in accepting as wholly truthful.

Mr. Solomon Judah, a Solicitor of this Court, has given clear and explicit evidence that the contents of the deed of gift were explained to Malubai in Marathi, which was her mother tongue, by his Marathi speaking clerk, Shanker, in his presence, and that he was satisfied that she fully understood the conditions of the deed and assented to them. This evidence is corroborated by the evidence of his clerk Shanker, who is equally clear and emphatic in his statement that he explained the contents of the deed of gift to her and she expressed her assent. The third witness, Raju Babaji, has given evidence which establishes beyond all doubt that it was the firm resolution of Malubai to execute a document making a free gift of this house to Khandu. Mr. Judah's evidence is not attacked on any ground either of its veracity or honesty. The only argument urged against his evidence is that he does not know sufficient Marathi to be able to say definitely that every thing was explained to Malubai. Mr. Judah has told the Court that although he cannot speak Marathi very well, he understands it quite sufficiently to enable him to say that the contents of the deed were explained in his presence to Malubai. Mr. Judah has lived all his life in Bombay, and I feel sure that he is correct when he said that he understood Marathi sufficiently to know that the deed was correctly interpreted to Malubai. Mr. Judah's clerk, Shanker Sayana Persha, impressed me most favourably. He gave his evidence without the slightest bias and in a most straight-forward manner. He did not know the parties before and I have no reason whatever to believe that in this matter he has acted throughout with anything other than scrupulous good faith. I cannot recall to my mind any single argument of any substance as to why I should not accept Shanker's evidence as wholly truthful.

The third witness, Raju Babaji, again, is one whose evidence created a very favourable impression on my mind. He is a wealthy and leading member of his community and heads one of the factions. No doubt he and Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji are not on good terms with each other, but both these men are much too well placed in their community and would not, I think, go out of their way to give untruthful evidence on behalf of parties who occupy a very humble position in their community. No doubt Rao Saheb Manaji has befriended the plaintiffs and Raju Babaji has befriended the 1st defendant, but I see nothing in their conduct to discredit the evidence which they have given. Accepting as I do Raju Babaji's evidence, it seems quite clear that Malubai after a great deal of consideration came finally to the conclusion that she would give this house to her nephew during her life-time so as to avoid all possibility of fights, quarrels and litigation, after her death.

In addition to the evidence of these three witnesses, I have before me the evidence of Mr. Almeida, the Sub-Registrar of Bombay. It seems to be his practice, when old illiterate and not very intelligent parties appear before him to admit execution of documents, to satisfy himself that the executants have understood the contents of the documents which they have executed. I think this is a most excellent practice on his part. In this case, he says:—

"Seeing that Malubai was a very old lady, I asked her questions and I was satisfied that she understood what the document was."

Khandu, of course, is deeply interested in this litigation and, therefore, his evidence has to be considered with caution. I found nothing in his demeanour and nothing in his evidence, which would lead me to distrust what he stated. He is a man of small intelligence and of extremely weak manners. He was subjected to very rigorous cross-examination, from which he emerged wholly unharmed. As against this evidence, the first plaintiff himself entered the witness-box and called Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji on his behalf. Rao Saheb Manaji's evidence does not assist the plaintiffs in any material portion of their case nor does it destroy any part of the first defendant's case. The first plaintiff did not create an impression favourable to himself on my mind by his demeanour in the box. He seems to be gifted with far higher intelligence than Khandu. If one can judge by his behaviour in the witness box, one would be inclined to think that he is a man of aggressive temperament and is easily excited. Taking the evidence of the first plaintiff and the first defendant side by side, I have come to the conclusion that it would be infinitely safer to rely on the evidence of Khandu in preference to that of Rajaram.

The second defendant Vithal or Vithoba Sayana was not called by either of the parties to give evidence at the end of the first defendant's case. However, while inquiring whether he desired to give evidence on his own behalf or call witnesses, I had him sworn and asked him a few questions. He is a young boy of 18 or 19. He possesses intelligence beyond his years. It is true he exhibted a good deal of animus against Rajaram, but in spite of that I am inclined to believe that what he said, about Malubai's relations with Rajaram and Khandu, was on the whole correct.

After a full and careful consideration of all the evidence recorded in this case, my findings of facts are that about fifteen years before her death, Malubai, when she was seriously ill, expressed a desire to give her property to her four nephews after her death but she recovered and the intended Will was not executed. I find that many years thereafter, she lived by herself in her own house and attended to her own wants and managed her own property. The assertion of Rajaram that he used to manage her property till within a short time of the deed of gift is, I think, incorrect. He is not able to produce any single paper or voucher evidencing the fact that he managed her property, and beyond vague statements he has not proved one single act of his management of Malubai's property. I find that sometime previous to the execution of the deed of gift, she was ill, weak, and in bad health. She seems to have approached Rajaram asking him to take care of her but he treated her overtures unfavourably. On the other hand, as soon as it was found that she was ill and unable to cook her own food, Khandu's mother began attending to her. Malubai, when able to move out of the house, took her meals at Khandu's place, and when ill and unable to move out, Khandu's mother took her meals to her. This friendly intercourse evidently irritated Rajaram, and I believe the evidence which goes to show that he frequently abused and ill-treated Malubai. She seems to have given expression to her desire to give her property to Khandu, and that seems to have aroused greater ill-will in Rajaram, both against Malubai and Khandu. If one can read the mind of Malubai about this time, and, with the aid of the incidents deposed to in the course of the evidence before the Court, such reading is not very difficult, it clearly appears that Malubai was much distressed at the ill-treatment which Rajaram was subjecting her to and she felt that possibly all the quarrels would end, if she definitely carried out her intentions with respect to her property and set the matter at rest once for all. She apprehended that if she did not do that, there were certain to be quarrels, fights and litigation, amongst her nephews and her property would be lost. Under these circumstances, she makes up her mind, takes Khandu with her and goes to Raju Babaji and asks him to help her in carrying out her intentions to make a gift of her house to Khandu. When Raju Babaji is satisfied that she has definitely made up her mind, he sends for Shanker, who was known to him but was a stranger to Malubai and Khandu, and entrusts him with the work. Shanker ascertains her wishes, takes her to his master's office, gets his master to prepare a deed of gift in accordance with Malubai's instructions, and the deed is duly executed. Mr. Judah did consider the question whether the deed should have a power of revocation, and he says he thought it was unnecessry as the lady was old and she wished to give the house away to Khandu. When Mr. Judah discussed this question with his clerk and when he gave evidence in the box, it seems to me that the provisions of section 126 of the Transfer of Property Act were not present to his mind, otherwise he would have said that "in an Indian deed of gift, I could not put in an unconditional clause containing a power of revocation, for that would nullify the gift." When Malubai made up her mind to give the only property she owned to Khandu, she knew perfectly well that she would be thereby divesting herself of all means of maintenance during the rest of her life. She seems, however, to have been quite satisfied that Khandu and his mother would look after her and provide for her wants during the remaining portion of her life. She was ill, she was feeble, she was ailing, and she must have realized that she was not likely to survive the gift many years. Be that as it may, she made the gift with a full conviction in her mind that Khandu would provide for her and look after her during the rest of her life. She had one other wish. She wanted to make sure that Vithal should be provided for and maintained by some one, and she stipulated orally in the first instance that Khandu would do so. A second document was executed in Mr. Judah's office simultaneously with the deed of gift. That document was tendered but for want of registration was rejected on objection taken by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs. The result is the Court is not entitled to refer to the contents of that document

The conclusion to which I have come, after a careful consideration of the whole of the evidence, is that Malubai, in full possession of all her senses and without the exercise of any fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence on her, voluntarily conveyed her property to her nephew Khandu; that when she executed the deed of gift, she fully understood its contents and the effect it would have of divesting her of her property and that the gift to the nephew was her "free determined act"; that she intended the gift to be irrevocable; and that there is not in this case a single "substantial reason why the deed should be set aside." The evidence in the case, I think, fully establishes that Malubai before execution of the deed of gift, had unmistakably manifested her intention of making an unconditional and irrevocable gift of her house to Khandu and she carried out that intention of her own free will.

What happened subsequent to the deed of gift is not a matter of any importance. Whether it was through the influence of Rao Saheb Manaji Rajuji and his sister or whether it was through the working of Rajaram, it is quite clear that Malubai's feelings towards Khandu were changed within a month of the date of the deed of gift. That change of feeling was not due to any act of Khandu or his mother. As in Toker v. Toker (4), the feelings of Malubai towards the defendant were no longer what they were when she executed the deed. Rajaram seems to have been considerably embittered against Khandu because Malubai had given him her house and it is in evidence that he started a campaign of persecution against Khandu, and openly expressed his intention of doing all in his power, so that Khandu may not have the benefit of a single brick of that house. He resorted to a false charge to the Police and a prosecution before the Magistrate, both unsuccessfully. He then seems to have got Malubai to file this suit. He and his brother, the two plaintiffs, are admittedly men of no means or very small means which they have already exhausted in this litigation, and although the defendant may succeed in this suit, he stands a very poor chance of recovering his costs, and if he has to pay them himself, the house will be gone.

I find first issue in the affirmative and find that the deed of gift of the 8th May 1908 is valid and binding.

I find issues 2 and 3 in the negative, and I dismiss the plaintiff's suit. I direct the plaintiffs to pay to the first defendant his costs of this suit from and after the 19th of June 1911, on which date they applied to me to be made party-plaintiffs. The second defendant has incurred no costs nor has the 3rd defendant after he was made a defendant and I have dealt with the costs previous to the re-constitution of the suit.

Suit dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the plaintiffs to set aside a putni sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819 The Subordinate Judge allowed the plaintiffs' claim and this appeal is presented by Hariharnath Das, defendant No. 2, who was the auction-purchaser.

The facts are shortly as follows:—There was a zemindari which consisted of 7-annas share of Mouza Sirsha and chak Belahari. It belonged to one Sham Chand Mundle and one Saroda Sundari Dasi in equal shares. On 28th February 1886, the zemindars granted a putni lease to Dhiru Mundle, the predecessor-in-title of defendants Nos. 3 to 8. Sham Chand sold his moiety of the zemindari, i.e., $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas to Ramkalpo Nayek, father of the plaintiffs, on 1st May 1889. Previous to this, the $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas share of Sarado Sundari had been purchased by Raja Ram Ranjan Chukrabarty, defendant No. 1, at a Court sale in April 1888. On 26th March 1891, Chayen Mundle, defendant No. 3 and son of Dhiru Mundle, executed a kabuliat in favour of defendant No. 1 for the $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas share which had been purchased by the defendant No. 1. On 7th August 1904, two usufructuary mortgages were executed (1) Exhibit 6 by Sheikh Abdu, defendant No. 4, and Hitu Bibi, defendant No. 5 and (2) Exhibit A by Chayen Mundle, defendant No. 3, in favour of the plaintiff, Sailaja Kanta Nayek. Shaikh Abdu and Hitu Bibi mortgaged a 4-anna 15-gunda share of the 7-annas while Chayen Mundle mortgaged a 6 anna 10-gunda share of the 7-annas. The rent of the putni for 1312 B. S having fallen into arrears, the defendant No. 1 brought the putni to sale on 15th May 1906. The defendant No. 2 purchased the putni at that sale and was put into possession. On 2nd May 1907, Chayen and his co-sharers executed a kobala of the putni in favour of the present plaintiffs. That sale was in pursuance of an agreement which was entered into about a month before, on 11th April 1907. In January 1907, defendant No. 9 had become the purchaser of 5-annas 15-gundas out of the share of Chayen under a mortgage-decree. On 13th May 1907, the plaintiffs filed the present suit just within the year allowed by law.

A question was raised at the hearing whether the sale to the plaintiffs was for good consideration and bona fide. The finding of the Subordinate Judge on this issue was in the affirmative and the learned Pleader for the appellant does not now question this finding. He raises two points (1) that the plaintiffs have no right to maintain the suit inasmuch as by their kobala, they purchased a mere right to sue which by section 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be transferred; and (2) that the formalities required for the sale were duly carried out and that the sale was binding against the plaintiffs or their vendors.

(1) With regard to the first point, it has been held more than once by this Court that a putni sale is voidable only and not void by reason of any irregularities in the transaction and, moreover, that it can only be avoided by a suit under the provisions of section 14. [See Suresh Chandra Mukhopadhya v. Akkori Singh (1) and Ram Sona Chowdhurani v. Nabakumar Sinha Choudhuri (2).] It might, therefore, be a point of some difficulty as to what the plaintiffs had taken by their purchase, did that purchase stand entirely alone. We are, however, relieved from the difficulty of discussing and deciding that point as we find that one of the plaintiffs at least was interested in this property before the sale took place. Sailaja Kanta Nayek, by virtue of the two mortgages above referred to, was clearly entitled to bring a suit under section 14 (1) of Regulation VIII of 1819 to reverse the sale. It was argued that these mortgages were usufructuary and that no possession under them was given and, that, consequently, the Court must regard them as mere paper transactions not conferring any interest in the property. That we certainly are not prepared to do. There is no question whatever upon the evidence that monies were advanced under both these mortgages. The only reason why possession was not taken by the mortgagees was because Madhu Babu told the tenants not to pay rent to the mortgagees. The plaintiffs, therefore, are entitled to maintain this suit.

It was suggested at the hearing that any possible defect in the plaintiffs' title to sue might be remedied by transferring to the category of plaintiffs defendants Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 8 and an application was made to us on the 11th by those defendants to be so transferred. It is not certain that the defect could be remedied in that way. A number of cases were cited on both sides and the question is by no means free from difficulty. In the view that we take of the right of the present plaintiffs, it is unnecessary to decide it, and we accordingly refuse that application.

(2) We now proceed to consider the second question as to whether the requisite formalities of the sale were complied with. There is no doubt that the petition was duly stuck up in a conspicuous part of the Cutchery. A notice also appears to have been stuck up along with it in the Cutchery while a copy of the notice was stuck up at the zemindar's Sadar Cutchery and another copy published at Mouza Sirsha. The notice, however, which was stuck up at the Collector's Cutchery (Exhibit I), appears to us to be clearly defective. Section 8, clause (2) requires that there should be stuck up with the petition a notice that "if the amount claimed be not paid before the 1st of Jeyt following, the tenure of the defaulters will, on that day, be sold by public sale in liquidation." Section 10 provides that, at the time of the sale, the notice previously stuck up in the Cutchery shall be taken down and the lots be called up successively in the order in which they may be found in that "notice." It follows, therefore, that the notice must contain the various lots to be sold with the amounts claimed in respect of them. The notice in the present case relates to lot No. 21, which we find from the petition of the zemindar comprised three tenures: (1) Hadah Belta, (2) Hadah Srirampore and (3) 3-annas 10-gundas share of taluk Sirsha and Belahari. The notice, however, only specified Hadah Belta, etc., appertaining to lot 21 and, to make it the more misleading, the amount due was stated to be Rs. 328-3-6 which was the amount due in respect of Hadah Belta alone. It is obvious, therefore, that any one reading that notice would not be able to conclude from it that two other tenures were to be sold, the arrears of which were Rs. 786 11-3 and Rs. 322-15 3 respectively. It has been repeatedly held that the provisions of this Regulation, which allow of sales in a summary manner, must be strictly complied with, and we think that this defect in the publication of the notice was sufficient to justify the Court in setting aside the sale.

We do not think that the other informalities or defects to which the learned Subordinate Judge has referred are made out, that is to say, the alteration of the date on the notice from 14th May to 15th. The date may very well have been written by the peon as the 14th and corrected by him to the 15th when he wrote it, namely, on the 15th. His evidence, which is entirely uncontradicted, goes to show that he took down the notice on the 15th and not on the 14th as he at first stated. With regard to the fact that the notice was not published at chak Belahari, we think that the Subordinate Judge has taken a wrong view of the words in section 8 clause (2): "At the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter" cannot possibly mean at every village. As the notice was duly published at Sirsha, which was the principal village on the land of the defaulter in this case, we think that that publication was sufficient.

The defect, however, in the notice itself is much more than a formal defect. The notice is entirely misleading and would not convey to any person reading it the essential fact that this particular putni was to be sold on 1st Jeyt. This defect in the notice cannot, we think, be cured by saying that the reader might have referred to the petition. There is nothing upon the record from which we can ascertain the precise contents of the copies or extracts of the notice which were stuck up at the Sadar Cutchery of the zemindar or at Mouza Sirsha.

For the reasons above stated, we think that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs, hearing fee Rs. 150.

Appeal dismissed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE—
RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80—Notice—Suit against Government—Plaintiff taking steps before Revenue authorities against the order of a Government official.

A District Deputy Collector by an order directed that certain land belonged to Government and that the person in possession, one A, had trespassed upon the said land and should, therefore, be ordered to vacate and give possession of it. A. occupied himself in filing the necessary appeals against the orders of the different Government officials with reference to this original order of the District Deputy Collector.

Subsequently, A. sued the Secretary of State for a declaration of his ownership of the land:

Held, that A. was bound to give notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code before bringing the suit, and the fact that A. was taking other steps before the Revenue authorities, with reference to the Deputy Collector's order, did not affect the question of notice.

Per Chandavarkar, J.—In order to take the case out of section 80, there must be something in the conduct of the Secretary of State which had brought about a state of things preventing the plaintiff from complying with the provisions of the section in question; that is to say, the evidence must be such as to show that humanly speaking it was impossible for the plaintiff to give a notice and comply with the provisions of the law as laid down in section 80.

JUDGMENT.

RUSSELL, J.—An important question is raised in this suit. The plaintiff, on the 21st July 1911, filed the present suit against the Secretary of State for India, the substance of which is that he complained that by an order, dated so long ago as 1909, by the District Deputy Collector, an officer in the service of the defendant, it was directed that the land which is described in clause 1 of the plaint belongs to Government and that he (plaintiff) has trespassed upon the said land, and, therefore, he (plaintiff) be ordered to vacate and give possession of the land. It is worthy of note that in that paragraph 3 of the plaint, no mention is made of the year in which that order was passed.

That being so, it is not necessary to set out the further details of the plaint. But it appears that from 1909, down to about the middle of July 1911, the plaintiff was occupying himself in filing the necessary appeals against the orders of different Government officials with reference to this original order of the District Deputy Collector.

The point we have to decide is: Is notice necessary for this suit, having regard to the terms of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code? Now, the words of that section, so far as they are material to this case, are as follows:

"No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government, or the Collector of the District, in the case where the suit is filed against the Secretary of State for India.

Now, the words there are absolutely imperative. An appeal has been made to us for our sympathy with regard to the expensive superstructure which the plaintiff has put up upon this land. But we have nothing to do with sympathy. We cannot decide cases according to our sympathies for either party. The words of the section, as I have said, are perfectly distinct.

Now, it appears to us that it cannot be too widely known that any person who is desirous of filing a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council must give a previous notice of two months before that suit is filed. That is laid down by section 80.

It is suggested that the plaintiff was taking other steps before the Revenue authorities with reference to this order by which he says he has been damnified. But it appears to us that that does not affect the question at all. There are the words of the section which say that such a notice must be given, and there was nothing whatever in the present case to prevent the plaintiff giving the requisite notice as soon as he received the order in 1909, and simultaneously carrying on his various applications to the Revenue authorities, in which case, if he had done that, he would have complied with the section and this defence would not have been open to the defendant.

My learned colleague has dealt with his judgment, sitting with Heaton, J., in Secretary of State v. Gajanan Krishna (1), and it is unnecessary for me to do so.

For these reasons, we hold the decree must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

(1) 13 Bom. L. R. 273; 35 B. 362; 10 Ind. Cas. 639.

CHANDAVARKAR, J.—With reference to certain observations of mine in my judgment in Secretary of State v. Gajanan Krishna (1), it is sufficient to say that there are no facts in the present case to bring it within the line of the principle which I endeavoured to lay down there. What I said was that in order to take the case out of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, there must be something in the conduct of the Secretary of State which had brought about a state of things preventing the plaintiff from complying with the provisions of the section in question. That means that the evidence must be such as to show that humanly speaking, it was impossible for the plaintiff to give a notice and comply with the provisions of the law as laid down in section 80. That is in accordance with the legal maxim "that the law does not expect a man to do what is impossible." It cannot be said that the plaintiff here had to do anything that was practically impossible. Therefore, I agree to the decree proposed.

Decree confirmed.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarti, for the Appellants.

Babu Preo Sankar Majumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants in an action for rent. The case for the plaintiff was that the lands in respect of which rent is claimed were held by one Ishan Chandra Das as tenant, that in execution of a rent-decree obtained against him the holding was sold and purchased by one Khoyarunnessa and that the defendants as her heirs are liable for rent. The defence taken was that these lands did not belong to Ishan Chandra Das but were held by the defendants in their own right as tenants under the plaintiff. The point in controversy between the parties, therefore, was whether the holding belonged to Ishan Chandra Das as alleged by the plaintiff or to the defendants in their own right, as alleged by them. The Courts below have found in favour of the plaintiff on the basis of the recital in the writ of attachment in the proceedings in execution of the rent-decree. It has been contended before us, on the authority of the decision in Ramani Pershad Narain Singh v. Mahanth Adaiya Gossain (1), that the recital in the writ of attachment was not admissible in evidence in favour of the maker of the statement and as against the defendants. In our opinion, this contention is well founded and must prevail.

It is clear upon the terms of section 316 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, that the effect of an execution sale is to vest the title of the property in the purchaser only as between the parties to the suit and their representatives-in-interest. Here the defendants claim title independently of the lady, and not as her heirs. Even if it be admitted, therefore, that the recital in the writ of attachment would have been admissible as against the execution purchaser, we are of opinion that it was not admissible in evidence in favour of the person who made it, and as against the defendants who claim under an independent title. To hold that the recital is admissible as against them, because they are the heirs of the auction-purchaser, is to argue in a circle, because, if we do so, we assume in substance the answer to the very question which calls for consideration in this case, namely, whether these defendants have taken the disputed property as heirs of the auction-purchaser. The position, therefore, is that this document must be excluded from consideration. But if the document is excluded, it turns out that there is no evidence left upon the record to support the theory that the land belonged to Ishan Chandra Das.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Right to sue—Cause of action—Execution of decree—Obstruction by third person—Damages.

Where a judgment-creditor is obstructed by a third person in executing his decree by attachment of his judgment-debtor's property, he has a right of action to recover damages from the third person arising from the latter's act.

McCartney v. Londonderry and Lough Swilley Railway Co. Ld., (1904) A. C. 301 at p. 313, 73 L. J. P. C. 73, 91 L. T. 105, 53 W. R. 385, relied upon.

Reference by the Subordinate Judge of Kumta.

The question referred for decision of the High Court in the case was, whether an obstruction by a third person to the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor gives the judgment-creditor cause of action for a suit for damages.

Mr. V. V. Bhadkamkar, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion, we must answer the question referred to us by saying that the suit will lie. We have no doubt whatever that the legal maxim, namely, where there is a right there is a remedy, applies. The judgment-creditor had a legal right to get the decree executed through the means of the Court. The defendant obstructed him in the exercise of that right and the carrying out of that decree. Therefore, he must be held liable upon the principle which we have mentioned. We would refer to the case of McCartney v. Londonderry and Lough Sewilly Railway Co. Ld. (1), where, citing the note to Mellor v. Spateman (2), it is said: "Wherever any act injures another's right,and would be evidence in future in favour of the wrong doer, an action may be maintained for an invasion of the right without proof of any specific injury." This principle has been repeatedly recognised and acted upon. It is clearly applicable to the present case. With this answer, the papers must be returned to the referring Court.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 82—Letters of Administration—Suit by legatee for declaration of title—Decree in suit—Subsequent suit by legatee against tenant for rent for period subsequent to death of testator—Right of suit—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 15, 16—Deposit of landlord's fee subsequent to institution of suit, whether sufficient.

Letters of Administration to the estate of a deceased person were granted to his widow. The present plaintiff in a previous suit obtained a declaration that he was entitled as a legatee to 4-annas share of the property left by the deceased. He now sued to recover a 4-annas share of the rent from a tenant of the deceased:

Held, that the suit was maintainable.

It is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of sections 15 and 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if the landlord's fees, etc., be deposited with the Collector after the institution of rent suit.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Barisal, dated January 24th, 1910, confirming that of the Sub-Judge of Barisal, dated June, 28th 1909.

FACTS.—This was a suit for arrears of rent. The tenure in arrears was a mirash ijara given in 1300 B. S. by the late Gopi Nath Roy to the late Tarini Kanta Sarkar the father of the defendants Nos. 1—5. The plaintiff was the guruputra (son of the spiritual guide) of Gopi Nath. According to the plaintiff, Gopi Nath left a Will by which he bequeathed a 4-annas share of all his properties to the plaintiff, a 6-annas share to his widow Ram Durga, a 2-annas share to his sister's son, Bipin Bihari Shaha, and the remaining 4-annas share to certain Brojobashis. All these other legatees have been made pro forma defendants in the plaint as they did not join the suit as co-plaintiffs. The claim in the suit was for the entire arrears that fell due from the year 1311.

Ram Durga, the widow of Gopi Nath, obtained Letters of Administration to the estate of her husband.

As the sons of Tarini Kanta Sarkar, the original tenant under Gopi Nath, refused to pay any rent to any of the legatees of Gopi Nath's Will, the present plaintiff instituted a suit against these defendants for declaration of his title to a 4-annas share of the properties left by Gopi Nath. All the other legatees of Gopi Nath's Will were made pro forma defendants in that suit also. That suit was decreed. Then the plaintiff got his name registered in a 4-annas share of the estate of Gopi Nath.

The main defence of the defendants was two-fold. They contended, firstly, that none but Ram Durga could maintain a suit for arrears of rent as she alone had obtained Letters of Administration, section 82 of the Probate Act; and secondly, that the plaintiff had no right to maintain the suit, as neither he nor any other legatee of Gopi Nath's Will had paid the necessary landlord's fee for their succession to the property, sections 15 and 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The lower Appellate Court, agreeing with the first Court, held that the suit was maintainable. It said on the first point:—

"The arrears fell due after Gopi Nath's death and on this ground alone, I do not think the objection would stand. In addition to this, the plaintiff got his right to a 4-annas share in the estate declared in suit No. 586 in which the defendants were parties. In the circumstances, I agree with the Subordinate Judge in disallowing this objection."

With regard to the second point, the learned District Judge observed:—

"Since the institution of the suit, the fees have been deposited with the Collector, though all the landlords have not been correctly named. * * The Subordinate Judge held that a mistake of this sort would not debar plaintiff from bringing his present suit. I agree with him. The objection seems to be a purely technical one."

JUDGMENT.—The learned Pleader, who appears in support of this appeal, has very candidly admitted that his clients appear in the lower Court to have taken every possible point against the plaintiff's claim, that many of these points were unimportant, and that all of them have been decided against them. The only points to which he invites our attention in the present appeal are, first the question dealt with in Issue No. 2. The Letters of Administration of the estate, under which the present plaintiff claims as legatee, are granted to the widow, and it is suggested that she alone could bring the suit to recover the 4-annas share of the rent claimed by the present plaintiff. This point, has, however, been dealt with by the lower Court. It is clear that the present plaintiff has in another suit obtained a declaration that he is entitled to a 4-annas share of the land, and in these circumstances, we think that the lower Courts were right in holding that the suit brought by him for his share of the rent could be maintained.

The only other point taken was that the plaintiff had failed to get himself registered as tenant of all the landlords and it is suggested that the lower Courts erred in holding that there had been a proper service of notice to some of the landlords after payment of the necessary landlord's fees. We think, however, that the view taken by the Court of first instance, which has been accepted by the lower Appellate Court, is correct, and that the provisions of the law were substantially complied with by the plaintiff after the institution of the suit, and that the objection on that account cannot be maintained in the present appeal.

We, therefore, hold that the points raised in support of the appeal fail and the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where an owner of land, without wilfulness or negligence, uses his land in the ordinary manner, though mischief thereby accrues to his neighbour, he is not liable for damages; but if, with a view to use the land in an unusual manner, he brings upon his land water which would not naturally have come upon it, he will be liable for damages for the escape of the water into the land of his neighbour.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of two of the defendants in a suit for an injunction to restrain them from passing water from their land to the land of the plaintiffs, as also for recovery of damages. The plaintiffs are the owners of two parcels of land which adjoin a third parcel owned by the defendants. Towards the south of this property, there is a tank not owned by either of the parties to the suit. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendants have lowered the level of their own land with the result that the water from this tank passes to the land of the defendants and subsequently overflows into the lands of the plaintiffs. The question, therefore, arises whether upon these facts the plaintiffs are entitled to a mandatory injunction against the defendants to compel them to raise an embankment for the benefit of the plaintiffs and also to recover damages already caused. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs-respondents has contended, upon the authority of Rylands v. Fletcher(1), that the defendants have no right to bring water upon their land which may subsequently flow out and cause damage to the land of the plaintiffs. The principle deducible from that decision is that the occupier of land who brings or keeps upon it anything likely to do damage, if it escapes, is bound at his peril to prevent its escape and is liable for all the natural and probable consequences of its escape even if he has been guilty of no negligence. In our opinion, this principle cannot be applied to the circumstances of the present case. It is not disputed and it cannot be seriously disputed that the defendants have not used their land in any artificial or unusual manner. They lowered the level of their own land so as to make it culturable, and they were amply within their rights in what they did [Smith v. Kenrick (2)]. It cannot be suggested that they had recourse to any artificial structures for the purpose of storing water in their land [Hurdman v. North Eastern Railway Company (3); Broder v. Saillard (4)], nor can it be suggested that they have freed water from their land into the land of the plaintiffs, Whalley v. Lancashire Railway Company (5). Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs are not entitled to an injunction as against the defendants to compel the latter to raise a barrier for their protection. In support of this view, reference may be made to the case of Nield v. London and North-Western Railway Company (6), where it was ruled that an occupier is not bound to prevent damage to his neighbour by the natural escape of flood water from higher to lower levels. As Bramwell, B., observed—the neighbour is not entitled to say 'you have caused me an injury in law.' The law allows what may be termed a kind of reasonable selfishness in such matters. It says "let every one look out for himself and protect his own interest." If this view were not adopted, the result would be that a man could not reasonably use his property lest some neighbour of his might complain that he had caused him an injury. The true principle is that where the owner of land, without wilfulness or negligence, uses his land in the ordinary manner, though mischief thereby accrues to his neighbour, he is not liable for damages, but if with a view to use the land in an unusual manner, he brings upon his land water which would not naturally have come upon it, he will be liable for damages for the escape of the water into the land of his neighbour. This doctrine was recognised in the case of Hodgson v. York Corporation (7); see also Chasemore v. Richards (8). We are of opinion, therefore, that although the plaintiffs may have suffered damage, no legal right of theirs has been infringed and they have no cause of action against the defendants.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Sub-Judge discharged and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of appeal below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for redemption of a mortgage, dated the 19th of October 1870, by one Lachhman in favour of the defendant-appellant, Dhanuk Singh. The plaintiffs are transferees of the heirs of Lachhman. The deed in suit purports to be a mortgage of a 5-biswansi share and mutation was applied for by Lachhman and Dhanuk Singh of this share only and orders were issued accordingly by the Revenue Court which heard the application. I must take it, however, as settled by the finding of the lower Appellate Court, that, in consequence of a mere error or oversight by the subordinate officials entrusted with the carrying out of the orders of the mutation Court, the name of Dhanuk Singh was recorded in respect of a 15-biswansi share instead of a 5-biswansi share. The denomination of these shares, i. e., their description in the village papers has since been altered in consequence of a partition of the mahal but for convenience sake, I propose to continue to speak of the share mortgaged as a share of 5 biswansis and the share in respect of which Dhanuk Singh's name was recorded by mistake as a share of 10 biswansis. The plaintiffs now come to Court on the allegation that Dhanuk Singh has possession as mortgagee only over a share of 5 biswansis but the extent of his mortgagee's rights continues to be wrongly recorded in the village papers as if a share of 15 biswansis was actually mortgaged to him. It is clear from the documentary evidence which I have had to examine in the course of the argument that Dhanuk Singh's actual possession consists substantially in the receipt of profits from the lambardar of the mahal. According to the rule of law now affirmed by this Court, Dhanuk Singh would be entitled year by year to sue the lambardar of the mahal for profits calculated on the basis of his mortgage possession over a share of 15 biswansis and so long as the entries in the Revenue papers stand uncorrected, there would be an unrebuttable presumption that Dhanuk Singh actually possesses the right claimed by him and profits would have to be decreed on the basis of this presumption. Of course, if the plaintiffs had been prepared to admit that Dhanuk Singh was actually in possession as mortgagee over a share of 15 biswansis, their course would have been simple. They would have sued to redeem on the basis of the mortgage-deed of 1870 pleading at the same time that there was no other valid mortgage-debt on the share in Dhanuk Singh's possession and claiming to be entitled to redeem the whole on payment of the debt secured by the aforesaid deed of the 29th of October 1870. The plaintiffs, however, were not prepared to admit Dhanuk Singh's possession over this share of 10 biswansis and, inasmuch as it has been found in their favour by the lower Appellate Court that Dhanuk Singh is not in fact in possession of this share, I must take it that they were right in this attitude. They have accordingly asked the Court to decree redemption of the mortgaged share and at the same time to give them a declaration that Dhanuk Singh is not in possession as mortgagee of any other share in the mahal. I have referred to the written statement filed by the defendant in order to satisfy myself as to the precise grounds upon which he resisted the claim. In the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, it is noted that Dhaunk Singh endeavoured in the course of the trial to put forward the case that there had been an oral mortgage of a share of 10 biswansis for a sum of Rs. 200 over and above the registered mortgage of the 29th of October 1870. My attention has also been drawn to a document on the file which shows that some contention like this was put forward by Dhanuk Singh in the year 1898. The Court below has swept this contention aside as wholly unsupported by evidence and so far as the record goes, it is obvious that it rests only on Dhanuk Singh's own word and that it is contradicted by the mutation proceedings of 1872, the record of which certainly goes to support the learned Subordinate Judge in his finding that it was a pure mistake and nothing else which led to Dhanuk Singh's being recorded as mortgagee of 15 biswansis instead of 5 biswansis. I felt much inclined at one stage to remit an issue on this point in order to allow the defendant-appellant an opportunity of producing further evidence if available. I am satisfied, however, that this course is unnecessary, because the plea in question was not taken in the written statement. Dhanuk Singh there resisted the plaintiff's claim on the ground that he had acquired by adverse possession a prescriptive right as proprietor or mortgagee in respect of a share of 10 biswansis and he also pleaded certain foreclosure proceedings, with which I have now no concern, as they are found to have been abortive. I suppose the written statement may also be understood as raising the further question of limitation to which I shall come presently but it certainly contains no plea to the effect that Dhanuk Singh's possession over this share of 10 biswansis is based upon good and valid title derived from a mortgage transaction other than that embodied in the deed of 1876. This point, therefore, goes against the defendant on the pleadings, and there is no need to remit any issue concerning it.

The Court of first instance framed very proper issues in the case and took all the evidence tendered by either party. It decreed the plaintiff's suit for redemption but refused to allow him any further relief on the ground that a suit for a mere declaration was barred by limitation under Article 120 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908). The finding on this question of law was reversed by the lower Appellate Court which thereupon proceeded to determine all the questions of fact involved in the issues framed by the first Court. On the question of possession, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is entirely against the defendant and is binding on me in second appeal. The effect of that finding is that the defendant is not shown to have acquired any prescriptive title as mortgagee or otherwise in respect of the share of 10 biswansis by 12 years' adverse possession and further that the plaintiffs and not the defendant Dhanuk Singh were in actual possession of this share at the time of the institution of the suit. The lower Appellate Court has accordingly granted the plaintiffs their claim for redemption and has added to its decree a declaration making it clear that the defendant is not in actual possession as mortgagee of any share in this mahal over and above the share ordered to be redeemed

Now, the question raised before me in second appeal is only whether that portion of the decree of the lower Appellate Court, which grants the plaintiffs this declaration ought not to be set aside, on the ground that any suit for a declaration in respect of this share of 10 biswansis was, under the circumstances, barred by limitation. The law on this subject was laid down by this Court in Francis Legge v. Rambaran Singh (1) and in Akbar Khan v. Turaban (2). I am bound by these rulings and I have only to see whether they precisely cover the facts of the present case. If this were a mere suit for a declaration, the plaintiffs would have to show on what date the right to obtain the declaration sought for accrued to them and would have to satisfy the Court that the said right did not accrue to them more than six years before the suit. As a matter of fact, there was nothing said on the point in the plaint and the plaintiffs' case is not that they are coming to Court for a mere declaration so as to be bound by the provisions of Article 120 aforesaid but that the relief sought by them in the way of declaration is ancillary to their claim for redemption and is of such a nature that the Court is bound to entertain it so long as the suit for redemption itself is within time. I have pointed out that the circumstances of this case are peculiar and there is no doubt that the nature of the presumption laid down in section 201 of the Agra Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901) will operate very seriously against the plaintiffs if they are not allowed relief in this suit. If it were not for that presumption, it might be contended that the declaration sought for by the plaintiffs was superfluous and that it could be refused on the mere ground that no adequate necessity for granting it was shown. As the case stands, unless the plaintiffs can obtain from the Civil Court some form of decree on the strength of which the Revenue Courts will be prepared to correct the mistaken entry in the papers, they stand to lose the benefit of the finding in their favour on the question of possession arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. I incline to think that where a claim for a declaration is merely ancillary to the claim for some other relief put forward in the same suit and where the granting of such declaration appears to the Court clearly necessary in order to give the plaintiffs suitable and adequate relief upon his main claim, the suit will be governed as regards limitation merely by the Article of the first Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act applicable in respect of the main relief claimed. To put the matter from a different point of view, I am of opinion that a Civil Court has an inherent right so to frame its decree as to embody in that decree any finding upon a question of fact, which it has arrived at in the course of the suit in the determination of an issue fairly arising out of the pleadings and the determination of which was necessary in order to grant the plaintiffs appropriate relief in respect of their main claim.

Now, in the present case, I think that the plaintiffs were entitled in their suit for redemption as such to ask the Court to give them some adjudication regarding the extent of the share actually mortgaged to the defendant Dhanuk Singh or the extent of the share actually in his possession as mortgagee. The incorrect entry in the village papers threw a doubt upon the extent of that share and left the plaintiffs in such a position that a decree simply ordering redemption of the mortgage of the 29th of October 1870 as such would fail to give the plaintiffs the full relief to which they were entitled. It has occurred to me that the plaint might have been framed so as to ask the Court to decree in favour of the plaintiffs possession by redemption upon payment of the mortgage-debt provided in the deed of the 29th of October 1870 either of the share of 5 biswansis or of such share in the mahal in suit as might be found to be actually in possession of Dhanuk Singh mortgagee A suit thus framed might have evaded the difficulty which has been raised regarding the operation of Article 120 of the first Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act but it would have been a mere evasion. On the findings which have been actually arrived at, the lower Appellate Court would have given the plaintiffs upon a suit framed as I have suggested in substance the very decree which it has passed, that is to say, a decree for redemption of the 5-biswansi share coupled with a formal expression in the decree of the Court's finding that nothing over and above this 5-biswansi share was in the possession of the mortgagee. I think, therefore, that no sufficient case has been made out in second appeal for interference with the decree which has been passed in this case. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Erroneous decision on question of limitation by the Court below.

An erroneous decision by a lower Court on a question of limitation, would not justify interference in revision by a High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Amritrav Krisna Deshpande v. Balkrishna Ganesh Amrapurkar, 11 B. 488 at p. 492, Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar, 20 A. 78 and Amir Hassan v. Sheo Baksh, 11 I. A. 237, 11 C. 6 (P. C.), referred to.

Rule obtained by the defendant against the decree of the Second Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court, dated September 19th, 1911, by which the claim of the plaintiff was decreed.

Mr S. C. Mukerjee, instructed by Mr. K. N. Dey, Solictor, in support of the Rule.

Mr. Sircar, instructed by Mr. G. C. Dey, Solicitor, showed cause.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the defendant to set aside the order passed by the Small Cause Court of Calcutta. The plaintiff sues in respect of certain items which on the plaint appeared to have been barred by limitation. But the plaintiff sets out in the plaint that his claim was not barred by limitation, as his cause of action had arisen in September 1909, and also because of the acknowledgment made by the defendant in his written statement in Suit No. 6581 of 1909. It has been admitted for the purpose of this argument by Mr. Sircar, who shows cause on behalf of the plaintiff, that the decision on the question of limitation was wrong. I think, so far as one can gather from the records and papers, the Court did make a mistake; apparently, the case was barred by limitation. That is not the point here. The point is, has the Court jurisdiction to interfere, under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, on the ground that the Small Cause Court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity? The point made by Mr. Mukerjee is that section 3 of the Limitation Act casts upon the Court the duty of dismissing all suits barred by limitation. Therefore, the Small Cause Court, having gone wrong on the question of limitation, acted with material irregularity or illegality in not dismissing the suit. In my opinion, that is not so.

Mr. Sircar referred me to three cases. One is Amritrav Krishna Deshpande v. Balkrishna Ganesh Amrapurkar (1). The failure to decide on a question of limitation does not justify a superior Court in interfering any more than if the whole case is wrongly decided. Then he refers to Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar (2), where the case of Amritrav Krishna Deshpande v. Balkrishna Ganesh Amrapurkar (1) is followed, and a similar view is taken by the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (3). This being so, I cannot interfere in this matter under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Rule, therefore, is discharged with costs.

Municipality—Assessment—Lands forming part of revenue paying estate—Whether exempted from assessment—'Holding', basis of—Occupation—Bengal Municipal Act (III B.C. of 1884), ss. 6 cl. (3), 101, 103, 110 —Jurisdiction—Civil Court—Declaration that assessment illegal.

The mere circumstance that the lands assessed by a Municipality form part of a revenue-paying estate is no ground for exemption from an assessment of rates.

The basis of a 'holding' is occupation, and the term 'holding' is used with reference to land held by an occupier under one title and surrounded by one set of boundaries.

When a Municipal Corporation has acted in contravention of the provisions of the statute, it is open to a Civil Court to declare that the assessment is illegal.

Chairman of Giridh Municipality v. Suresh Chandra Mozumdar, 35 C. 859, 12 C. W. N. 709, 7 C. L. J. 631 and Chairman, Municipal Board, Chapra v. Basudeo Narain Singh, 5 Ind. Cas. 321; 14 C. W. N. 437; 37 C 374; 11 C. L. J. 400, relied upon.

Where there is some indication that the assessment has possibly been illegal, but the plaintiff has not been able to establish, with regard to any particular holding, that the assessment has been, on the facts, made in contravention of the statue and is liable to be declared ultra vires by a Civil Court, the suit should be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that an assessment of rates made by the Municipality of Patna under the Bengal Municipal Act of 1884 is ultra vires. In the Court of first instance, the claim of the plaintiff was allowed; but that decision has been reversed on appeal by the District Judge. In the present appeal, the assessment has been questioned on four distinct grounds, namely, first, that, as the plaintiff is the owner of a revenue-paying estate, he is not liable to be assessed under the Bengal

Municipal Act; secondly, that the holdings. in respect of which he has been assessed, have been arbitrarily created by the Municipal authorities in contravention of the provisions of the statute; thirdly, that as there are intermediate holders between the plaintiff and the actual occupiers of the land, the plaintiff is not liable to be assessed; and fourthly, that inasmuch as the occupiers of some of these holdings have been assessed in respect of houses and gardens standing thereon, the plaintiff ought to be exempted from assessment.

Before we deal with these grounds, it is necessary to mention that the plaintiff is the proprietor of a large tract of land situated within the Patna Municipality. Many years ago, these lands were divided into two holdings and assessed under the Bengal Municipal Act. In 1904, the Municipal authorities added four new holdings, to the two which had existed from before. The plaintiff brought an action to test the legality of the course adopted by the Municipality and it was held that as the lands comprised in the new holdings were included in the two pre-existing holdings the creation of fresh holdings was ultra vires. Thereupon, in 1907, the Municipality treated all the lands as comprised in one holding. The plaintiff was dissatisfied and preferred an objection under the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act. The result was that the lands were constituted into five separate holdings. The plaintiff has commenced this suit for declaration that the action of the Municipality was without jurisdiction.

The first of the grounds upon which the assessment is assailed, is obviously without substance. Under section 103 of the Bengal Municipal Act, the rate upon a holding is payable in quarterly instalments by the owner of the holding. Section 85 defines the circumstances under which a rate may be imposed on the annual value of a holding situated within the Municipality. There is no exemption, either express or implied, in favour of the holders of revenue-paying estates within a Municipality. The mere circumstance, therefore, that the lands assessed form part of a revenue-paying estate is no ground for exemption. The first ground, consequently, fails.

To determine the validity of the second, third and fourth grounds, it is essential to examine the meaning of the term 'holding' as used in the Bengal Municipal Act. Section 6, clause (3), of the Act provides that the term 'holding' means land held under one title or agreement and surrounded by one set of boundaries. On behalf of the plaintiff, it has been contended that the term 'holding' refers to land held by an occupier under one title or agreement and surrounded by one set of boundaries. On behalf of the respondent, it has been argued, on the other hand, that the term 'holding' means land held by an owner under one title or agreement and surrounded by one set of boundaries. The question, therefore, arises whether the term 'holding' is used with reference to the occupier or the owner. In our opinion, there is no room for reasonable controversy that the basis of a 'holding' is occupation, and the term 'holding' is used with reference to land held by an occupier under one title and surrounded by one set of boundaries. To take a concrete instance, an owner may have ten bighas of land which he holds under one title and which is surrounded by one set of boundaries. He lets out different parcels to ten different occupiers. The question arises, whether the land constitutes one holding or ten holdings for the purposes of the Bengal Municipal Act. The learned Vakil for the Municipality has contended that we must confine our attention to the title of the owner and cannot have regard to the occupation of different parcels by different occupiers. But if this contention is accepted, extremely anomalous results obviously follow. For instance, if we look to section 105, we find that the tax due from a non-resident owner may be recovered from the occupier and may be deducted by the latter from his rent. If, therefore, there are ten distinct occupiers of what is called one holding by the respondent, and if the owner makes default in payment of the rate primarily payable by him under section 103, it is open to the Municipal authorities to proceed at their choice against any one of those occupiers and make him responsible for the payment of the entire amount. This could hardly have been intended. If again we turn to section 110, we find that there is a provision for remission or refund on account of vacant holdings. If in the case before us, there is one occupier, who ceases to occupy his parcel, there is no room for the application of section 110, because the remainder of the holding, as interpreted by the respondent, is occupied by other persons. The provisions of the Municipal Act, in our opinion, make it reasonably plain that the basis of the assessment of rates is occupation. We are concerned primarily with land as occupied by a person; the land in the occupation of such a person, if held under one title and comprised within one set of boundaries, constitutes a holding for the purposes of the Bengal Municipal Act. The rate is determined upon the annual value which is defined, in section 101, as the gross annual rent at which that holding may be reasonably expected to let. Section 103 then provides that the rate so determined is to be paid in quarterly instalments by the owner of the holding. Consequently, when the owner himself is in occupation, he is himself liable for the rate. When there is an occupier under the owner who is in actual occupation of the holding, although the rate is assessed upon the annual rent, yet it is the owner who is held primarily liable for the payment thereof. If the view suggested by the respondent were adopted, the consequence would be that every person interested in a particular parcel of land, whatever the grade of his interest might be, would be liable to be assessed with the rates. For instance, in respect of a parcel of land, there might be, under the Government, a zemindar; under the latter, there might be successively a patnidar, or dar-patnidar, and, ultimately, the last in the series, the actual occupier. According to the contention of the respondent, the zemindar would be liable to be assessed in respect of the 'holding' because he held the land under one title and surrounded by one set of boundaries. The patnidar under the zemindar would be equally liable to be assessed, because his interest falls within the definition of the term 'holding' as given in section 6 clause (3); and similar remarks would apply to the dar-patnidar. It must further be observed in this connection that each of these persons would be liable to be assessed, not in respect of his net profits from the land, but upon the gross annual rent at which the holding may be reasonably expected to let. But it can hardly be maintained that the Legistature intended that the same parcel of land should be liable to be assessed twice or thrice over. We are, therefore, of opinion that the term 'holding' as used in the Bengal Municipal Act means land held by an occupier under one title or agreement and surrounded by one set of boundaries. If this interpretation be adopted, it is fairly clear that the second and the third objections must be deemed substantial. Under the statute as interpreted by us, it is the duty of the Municipality to ascertain whether a particular parcel of land is held by an occupier under one title, and whether it is comprised within one set of boundaries. If it is land of this description, the rate is assessed upon it in accordance with the principle laid down in section 101. That rate becomes payable by the owner, that is to say, the person above the occupier, if the occupier himself is not the owner under section 103.

But, although we are of opinion that the second and third grounds urged by the appellant are substantial, we are unable, to give effect to them, by reason of the manner in which the suit has been framed and conducted in the Courts below. It may be conceded that when a Municipal Corporation has acted in contravention of the provisions of the statute, it is open to a Civil Court to declare that the assessment is illegal. In support of this proposition, reference may be made to the cases of The Chairman of Giridh Municipality v. Suresh Chandra Mozumdar (1) and The Chairman, Municipal Board, Chapra v. Basudeo Narain Singh (2). In the case before us, however, although there is ample indication that the assessment made by the Municipality has been based upon an erroneous interpretation of the term 'holding' as used in the Bengal Municipal Act, yet it is plain that the two specific objections now urged before us, were not taken either before the Municipal authorities or before the Courts below. It is clear from an examination of the record that although the plaintiff urged that the sub-division of his land into five holdings was beyond the competence of the Municipal authorities, he never invited the Municipality to assess his land after constituting it into holdings according to the occupation of the land by different tenants. In fact, it is clear that after the Municipality had treated the entire land as constituting one holding, the plaintiff objected, and upon his objection the land was divided into five holdings. The plaintiff ought to have urged at that stage that the holdings were improperly constituted and that it was obligatory upon the Municipality to determine the land in the occupation of each separate tenant. But not only did the plaintiff not take any such objection before the Municipal authorities, he did not urge any such objection in the Court of first instance, nor was it presented before the Court of appeal below. The result is, that although the documents upon which the assessment of the Municipality is based, indicate that in 1884 there were numerous tenants in occupation of different parcels of land, it is impossible for us to hold in respect of any of the holdings now assailed by the plaintiff, that it is not in the occupation of one tenant. Before the plaintiff can succeed in respect of the assessment for any one of these five holdings, he must satisfy the Court that the particular holding has been constituted in contravention of the provisions of the statute. He is unable to do so, because there are no materials on the record to show how many tenants are in occupation of the different holdings. Similar observations apply to the third ground urged by the appellant. No doubt the documents, upon which the assessment has been made, indicate that there were intermediate holders between the plaintiff and the occupiers in 1884; there is no evidence, however, to show whether these intermediate holders now exist; if they do, according to the view we take, the plaintiff is not liable to be assessed. But the plaintiff has not established by evidence that in respect of the land comprised in any one of these five holdings, he is not the immediate landlord of the tenants in occupation. Consequently, although the second and the third grounds are substantial and might possibly have succeeded in part or in their entirety, if they had been urged in a properly framed suit and had been sought to be supported by evidence, we are not in a position to give effect to them. Nor do we think that this is a case in which a remand should be made at this stage to the Court of first instance to enable the plaintiff to establish these objections. The effect of a remand would be that the plaintiff would escape payment of rates, while he is indubitably liable for a considerable amount of rates, even though it is conceded, upon the view of law we take, that some of the parcels of land assessed may be entitled to exemption from assessment under section 85, on the ground that the annual value is less than six rupees.

In so far as the fourth ground is concerned, it is clear that the separate assessment of the houses and gardens of the tenants has been based upon an erroneous view of the meaning of the term 'holding'. But the District Judge has correctly pointed out that this is a matter which does not concern the plaintiff. It is possible that the tenants have been improperly assessed; and they may have their remedy against the Municipal authorities.

The conclusion follows that, although we are of opinion that the statute has been misinterpreted, and there is some indication that the assessment has possibly been illegal, the plaintiff has not been able to establish with regard to any particular holding that the assessment has been, on the facts, made in contravention of the statute and is liable to be declared ultra vires by a Civil Court. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal but direct that each party do bear his own costs throughout the litigation.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 164—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 6—Limitation—Ex parte decree, application to set aside.

If the right of a defendant to make an application to set aside an ex parte decree, on the ground of non-service of summons on him, was lost under the provisions of Article 164, Schedule II of the Limitation Act of 1877, long before the passing of Act IX of 1908, the provisions of Article 164 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act of 1908 cannot revive the right, for section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, distinctly provides that the repeal of an Act would not have the effect of reviving any right not in force or existing at the time the repeal was made.

Rule against the order of the Additional Sub-Judge of Khulna, dated September 7th, 1911, setting aside an ex parte decree obtained by the plaintiff, on an application of the defendant on the ground of non-service of summons on the defendant, and another order, dated September 19th, 1911, rejecting an application for review of the previous order, made by the plaintiffs.

Babu Charu Chandra Biswas, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This rule was issued to show cause why an order passed by the Subordinate Judge setting aside an ex parte decree should not be reversed on the ground that the application on which it was made was barred by limitation. The present applicant brought a suit to recover the amount due on an instalment-bond, and obtained an ex parte decree on the 28th March 1906. Execution was applied for on the 19th February 1907, and the property of the judgment-debtor was sold and purchased by the decree-holder on the 27th May 1907. The present application by the opposite party to set aside the ex parte decree was made on 27th June 1911, that is to say, more than four years after the conclusion of the previous proceedings. Before the lower Court, it was contended, on behalf of the present applicant, that the application was barred on the ground that the application to set aside the ex parte decree obtained by the applicant could only have been made when the provisions of the Limitation Act of 1877 were in force, and that, as under Article 164 of the second Schedule of that Act, the application ought to have been made within thirty days from the date of executing the process for enforcing the judgment, the application was barred by limitation long before it was made on the 27th June 1911, and the right of the opposite party to make the application was lost long before the passing of Act IX of 1908, the present Limitation Act. The learned Subordinate Judge was, however, of opinion that the limitation provided in Article 164 of the First Schedule of Act IX of 1908 was applicable, and that the application was in time, as it was within thirty days of the time when the applicant had knowledge of the decree. The rule was issued to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, and no one has appeared to contest it. In our opinion, the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be accepted. The right of the opposite party to make the application was lost under the provisions of Article 164, Schedule II of the Limitation Act of 1877, long before Act IX of 1908 was passed, and section 6 of the General Clauses Act distinctly provides that the repeal of the old Act would not have the effect of reviving any right not in force or existing at the time the repeal was made. We think, therefore, that on this ground the Rule must be made absolute, and the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside. The applicant is entitled to his costs of this hearing.

Rule made absolute.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaration, suit for—Consequential relief—Suit for declaration that defendant not mutwalli or not legally appointed mutwalli—No prayer for possession or appointment of another mutwalli—Whether suit maintainable.

The plaintiff asked (1) for a declaration that a certain wakfnamah was invalid and that the defendant had not acquired any valid title as mutwalli under that document, or (2) that if the wakfnamah be valid, then the defendant had not been legally appointed mutwalli. But the plaintiff did not ask for recovery of possession or for the removal of the defendant and the appointment of a trustee duly appointed:

Held, that under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, the suit was incompetent as the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief, had not done so.

Shyamanand v. Raj Narain, 4 C. L. J. 568, Lokenath v. Keshab Ram, 13 C. 147, Chokalinga Peshana v. Achiyar 1 M. 40 and Ganpatgir Guru Bholagir v. Ganpatgir, 3 B. 230, referred to.

The further relief referred to in the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is further relief in relation to the legal character or right to any property to which the plaintiff is entitled and whose title to such character or right the defendant denies or is interested in denying, and it must be relief appropriate to and consequent on the right or title asserted.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Nadia, dated January 17, 1910, reversing that of the Sub Judge of that District, dated June 30, 1909.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The substantial question of law raised in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by reason of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which lays down that no Court shall make any declaration in a declaratory suit where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so. The plaintiffs commenced this suit for declaration that the first defendant had not been properly appointed mutwalli of the properties in suit. Their case was that in 1888 a deed of wakfnamah had been executed by the owners of the property and that pursuant thereto in 1906 a deed was executed by which the first defendant was appointed mutwalli. The plaintiff set out facts which, if true, go to show that the defendant has taken possession of the property and has dealt with it on the footing that he has been properly appointed its mutwalli. The plaintiffs put their case in the alternative. In the first place, they ask for a declaration that the wakfnamah of 1888 is collusive and inoperative, and that, consequently, the first defendant has not acquired any valid title as mutwalli. In the second place, they ask for a declaration that if the wakfnamah be treated as valid, the defendant has not been legally appointed mutwalli because the entire body of persons competent to appoint a mutwalli did not join in making his appointment. The defendant resisted the claim on the ground amongst others that the suit was improperly constituted and was bound by reason of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. This objection has been overruled and a decree has been made by the District Judge in favour of the plaintiffs.

In support of the appeal, it has been argued that there is no answer to the objection in respect of the competency of the suit as framed and that the decision of this Court in the case of Fakir Chand Audhikari v. Anunda Chunder Bhuttacharji (1), upon which the learned District Judge placed reliance in support of his view, is clearly distinguishable. In our opinion, the appeal must succeed.

The proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act makes it clear that no Court shall make a declaration in a declaratory suit where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so. No doubt, as pointed out by this Court in the case of Fakir Chand Audhikari v. Anunda Chunder Bhuttacharjee (1), the further relief referred to in this proviso is further relief in relation to the legal character or right as to any property which the plaintiff is entitled to and whose title to such character or right the defendant denies or is interested in denying, and it must be relief appropriate to and consequent on the right or title asserted. Kannan v. Krishnan (2). The learned Judges went on to hold that a claim for arrears of rent was not further relief within the meaning of the proviso. It is not necessary for us to consider whether this was intended to be a broad statement of an unqualified proposition of law, because it is clear from the facts of that particular case that the plaintiff could not have joined with the prayer for a declaration, a claim for recovery of arrears of rent. In the case before us, it is indisputable that the plaintiffs are competent to ask for a further relief. If the first alternative case set up by them is established to be true, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover possession as owners. If the second alternative case is established to be true, the plaintiffs are entitled to seek for the removal of the defendant and for the appointment of a trustee duly appointed by persons competent in that behalf. It is plain, therefore, that, in either view of the case, it was competent to the plaintiffs to ask for further relief. As was pointed out by Mr. Justice Muthusami Ayyar and Mr. Justice Wilkinson in the case of Kombi v. Aundi (3), the object of this provision is to avoid a multiplicity of suits and to prevent a person getting a declaration of right in one suit and immediately after, the remedy already available, in another. In other words, the Legislature intends that if the plaintiff, at the date of his suit, is entitled to claim as against the defendant to the cause some relief other than and consequential upon a bare declaration of right, he must not vex the defendant twice, but he is bound to have the matter settled once for all in one suit. The object of the plaintiffs here is to get a declaration of their title upon payment of a Court-fee of Rs 10 and in the event of their success, to institute a suit against the defendant for his removal. In our opinion, the proviso to section 42 is a bar to the maintenance of a suit of this description, for this is not one of the class of cases where it is needless or impracticable for the plaintiff to seek any relief other than declaration as in Shyamanund v. Raj Narain (4); Lokenath v. Keshab Ram (5). Here the plaintiffs are able and bound to ask for consequential relief, as in Chokalinga Peshana v. Achiyar (6); Ganpatgir Guru Bholagir v. Ganpatgir (7).

(1) 14 C. 586.
(2) 13 M. 324.
(3) 13 M. 75.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. XLVII, r. 1—Ex parte decree—Application to set aside—Prevented by sufficient cause from appearing—Review.

A defendant, against whom an ex parte decree has been made, may, instead of applying to set aside the decree, under Order IX, rule 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, apply for a review of judgment under Order XLVII, rule 1 on the ground that he was prevented from appearing on the day, fixed for the hearing of the case, by sufficient cause.

Babu Nagenda Nath Ghose and Mr S. K. Sahay, for the Petitioner.

Mr. I. B. Sen and Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazrah, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT—The case out of which the Rule arises was instituted so far back as the 25th June 1903. It was at one time dismissed for default; but was again revived, and after innumerable applications for adjournments, it was finally decreed ex parte on the defendant's failing to appear on the 18th May 1910. Early in July, the defendants applied under Order XLVII, rule 1 to have the case revived on the ground that their Pleader had been prevented from appearing on the day of hearing. This application dragged on until the present year and was finally granted by the Subordinate Judge without giving any reasons for his decision.

The case then went on appeal before the Judicial Commissioner and he held that the Subordinate Judge could not have dealt with the matter under Order XLVII, rule 1, inasmuch as it came properly within the scope of Order IX, rule 13, and was accordingly barred by limitation. It appears to have been argued before him that the appellants in this Court were not entitled to take this plea inasmuch as they had consented to the revival of the case; but this contention was not accepted by the learned Judicial Commissioner and he accordingly held that the order of the Subordinate Judge was wrong, set it aside and directed that the case should be dismissed.

The defendants obtained a Rule from this Court to show cause why that order should not be set aside or why such other order should not be passed as to this Court might seem fit. The view of the learned Judicial Commissioner that the Subordinate Judge could not deal with this matter under Order XLVII, rule 1 does not appear to be in accordance with the decision in the case of Raj Narain Purkait v. Ananga Mohan Bhandari (1), and cannot be sustained. The point which really arises for decision in this case is whether the defendants were or were not prevented from appearing on the day fixed for the hearing of the case. This point has not been considered or decided by either of the Courts below. We have not thought it necessary to send back the case inasmuch as there is but little evidence on the point and we have been able to consider it. On reading that evidence, we think that the Subordinate Judge acted with undue haste in finally disposing of the case, and, therefore, the case ought on certain conditions to be re-heard. We would, however, invite the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge to the extreme delay that has occurred in disposing of this case and express our hope that the trial may be conducted more expeditiously in future. In particular, when the Subordinate Judge directs the payment of costs as a condition precedent to proceeding with the suit, it is not sufficient for him to order the payment, but he should see that the money is paid before he proceeds further. For instance, in the present case he directed payment of Rs. 40 to the plaintiff, apparently as a condition precedent to reviving the case, but in the end, he appears to have revived the case without ever attempting to see whether that order had been complied with. We think, therefore, that the proper order to pass will be that, on the present petitioner's depositing in Court the sum of Rs. 40, which they were ordered to pay by the Subordinate Judge, within one week from the arrival of the records in the Court of first instance, the case shall be re-heard.

If the money is not paid within this period, this Rule will stand discharged with costs. If the money is paid in time, the costs in this Court, which we assess at two gold mohurs, will abide the result.

Rule made absolute.

KIRPA RAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Custom—Adoption—Right of collateral six degrees removed to contest adoption—Laddu Rajputs of Una Tahsil, District Hoshiarpur.

Among Laddu Rajputs of the Una Tahsil, a collateral, six degrees removed from the adopter, has locus standi to contest an adoption.

Khazan Singh v. Relu, , 35 P. R. 1906, referred to.

Petition, under section 70 (b) of Act XVIII of 1884, as amended by Act XXV of 1899, for revision of the order of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur Division, dated 20th March 1909, confirming that of the Munsif, 1st class, Hoshiarpur, dated 18th December 1908 decreeing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sundar Das, and Pundit Rambhaj Datta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision admitted under clause (b) of section 70 (1) of the Punjab Courts Act, solely on the question whether the plaintiffs, who are remote collaterals, have any locus standi to bring a declaratary suit in respect of the adoption in dispute. The learned Judge who directed notice to issue considered that the only other ground upon which the defendant sought revision had been disposed of correctly under the ruling of Bishen Singh v. Amir Chand (1). I have examined that ruling which is the only one at all in point now referred to on the several questions of adoption amoing Laddu Rajputs of Una Tahsil and though it appears to me to go somewhat far, I do not regard the point involved as being one which I am at liberty to now go into in the revision. The case has, therefore, to be determined solely on the first ground referred to above.

The plaintiffs are collaterals, six degrees removed, of one Praga, who, on the 21st September 1901, adopted the defendant Tulsi by a registered deed stating that the actual adoption had taken place seven years before. Tulsi is also a remote collateral one degree further removed than the plaintiffs

i.e., he traces his descent from one Santa, while the plaintiffs and Praga were the descendants of Santa's son Parsa Ram. This declaratary suit has been instituted on the 30th August 1907, only just before the expiration of six years' limitation. Praga died soon after the institution of the suit leaving about 92 kanals which have since been entered in the name of his widow notwithstanding the adoption deed in favour of Tulsi.

The lower Courts have both given a decree to the plaintiffs declaring that the adoption will not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the widow. The greater part of Counsel's arguments on behalf of the defendant Tulsi was directed to showing that the ruling of Bishen Singh v. Amir Chand (1) goes much too far in laying down a general principle for Laddu Rajputs of Una Tahsil seeing that

(1) the case then involved covered an adoption of a daughter's son, and

(2) the previous case dealt with Taluqa Amb of the Una Tahsil for which the Riwaj-i-am denied rights of adoption of any sort, while the present case deals with Taluqa Una for which the Riwaj-i-am recognizes the rights of males but not of females to adopt with the customary ceremonies.

There is some force in both these arguments but, as noted above, I do not consider that I am entitled to go into the point under the terms of the admitting order. I am, moreover, as a Single Judge bound by the terms of a Division Bench ruling of Bishen Singh v. Amir Chand (1), and, although it is permissible to doubt whether that ruling is not too widely expressed, the case is not a suitable one for reference to a Full Bench as the point involved is not directly before me.

Turning then to the first ground of revision, which alone I have to decide, the main argument of Counsel is that ordinarily a reversioner of so remote a degree as the plaintiffs cannot contest an alienation of any sort whether by adoption or otherwise. It is admitted that there is no precise rule on the point and there is at least one definite ruling to the contrary in Khazan Singh v. Relu (2), where the collaterals concerned were ten degrees removed, and it was held that they could contest an alienation. Counsel's further argument is that the plaintiffs should not be allowed to contest the adoption inasmuch as services were rendered by the adopted Tulsi. There is not much force in this latter argument. Tulsi who was present before me stated his age at 26 or 27 and by appearance he is not more than that. He was stated in the adoption deed of 1901 to be then 13 which gives about the same result. He cannot have rendered any service at all to Praga by 1901 or any service worth mentioning up to the time of Praga's death in 1907. This alone disposes of the argument about services rendered, which was one of the points taken up in Khazan Singh v. Relu (2). My conclusion is that sufficient ground has not been shown for disagreeing with the lower Courts and for interfering on revision. The defendant's petition is, therefore, dismissed but as the case is of a very doubtful nature and plaintiffs have made great delay in suing for a declaration, the parties will pay their own cost in this Court.

Musammat HUSSAIN BIBI—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Alienation—Muhammadan Law—Will—Kashmiris of Jhelum town—Succession—Pleadings—Suit by widow—Presumption.

In matters of succession, Muhammadan Kashmiris of the Jhelum town in general and the family of the parties in particular do not follow Muhammadan Law.

A bequest by a male proprietor of the whole of his self-acquired property in favour of his daughter or her issue, to the exclusion of his widow and brother, is valid by custom.

By custom among these Kashmiris, widows do ordinarily succeed to a life-interest, daughters are excluded by sons, sisters by brothers and a right of representation is allowed.

MEHTAB BIBI v. HUSAIN BIBI.

Where among a Muhammadan tribe, large inroads are made into the provisions of Muhammadan Law relating to inheritance, there is a very strong presumption that Muhammadan Law is not followed by them.

Where a widow sues for possession of the entire property left by her husband on the allegation that the parties are governed by custom and it is proved that the property was the self-acquired property of her husband and was left by him by Will to his daughter, the widow is not entitled to a share of her husband's property according to Muhammadan Law.

Second appeal from the order of the Additional Divisional Judge, Jhelum, at Rawalpindi, dated 12th December 1910, confirming that of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated 16th March 1910, decreeing the claim.

Lala Hukam Chand, for the Appellants.

Khawaja Kamal ud-din, for Amir Bux, Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and Civil Revision No. 748 of 1911 are connected and both can be conveniently disposed of by one judgment.

The pedigree-table set out in the judgment of the Divisional Judge explains the relationship of the parties. On the 11th February 1908, Jan Muhammad, who owned the property in dispute, made a Will by which he bequeathed the whole of his property to his daughter, Musammat Mehtab Bibi, and her issue. He died early in 1909. Towards the end of that year, two suits were instituted, (1) by his widow, Musammat Hussain Bibi, for possession of the entire property left by him, said to consist of a house and some 6 kanals 8 marlas of land and of moveables and cash, on the allegation that the succession to the property of the deceased was governed by custom and that, as his widow, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the whole of it on the usual life-estate; and (2) by the deceased's brother, Amir Bux, for possession of 3/8ths of the property left by him, on the ground that in matters of inheritance the parties were governed by Muhammadan Law, and that under that law he was entitled to a 3/8ths share in the property left by the deceased. The defendants in both the suits were Musammat Mehtab Bibi and her son, Mumtaz Ahmad; and by consent of parties, both the suits were tried together, the whole of the evidence produced on both sides being recorded in the suit brought by Musammat Hussain Bibi.

Upon the pleadings of the parties, several issues were drawn by the District Judge, the most important issue being whether the parties were governed by custom or by Muhammadan Law. It may be noted here that though at first there was some dispute as to whether or not part of the property left by Jan Muhammad was ancestral, it is now conceded that the whole of it was his self acquired property, and it follows that if Jan Muhammad was not governed by strict Muhammadan Law, he had power to dispose of it by Will in favour of his daughter and her issue.

Jan Muhammad was a Kashmiri and resided and carried on the business of comb-making in the city of Jhelum. The District Judge was of opinion that although the provisions of the Muhammadan Law as regards succession had not been consistently followed by members of his tribe in Jhelum, Jan Muhammad was governed by Muhammadan Law as regards his testamentary powers and that, therefore, the Will made by him in favour of his daughter and her issues was invalid. The District Judge accordingly passed decrees in the two suits dividing the property in dispute according to the rule of succession prescribed by Muhammadan Law; in other words, he decreed the claim of Amir Bux in toto and gave $\frac{1}{8}$th of the property to Musammat Hussain Bibi, leaving the remaining one-half of it in the possession of Musammat Mehtab Bibi.

Two appeals were filed by Musammat Mehtab Bibi and her son in the Divisional Court, one in each suit, and the Divisional Judge dismissed both the appeals, except that he varied decrees of the District Judge as to costs.

From the decree of the Divisional Court in the suit brought by Musammat Hussain Bibi, a further appeal has been preferred to this Court: and as the value of the other suit brought by Amir Bux is less than Rs. 1,000, a petition for revision of the decree of the Divisional Court in that suit was filed here at the same time, and it has been admitted with reference to the question whether the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law or by custom. After hearing arguments, we think that both the appeal and the revision petition must succeed and that both the suits brought by Musammat Hussain Bibi and by Amir Bux must be dismissed.

A good deal of oral evidence has been produced on both sides and there are also on the record copies of certain mutation proceedings which have been relied upon by the defendants, as showing that in matters of succession, Muhammadan Law has not been followed among the Kashmiris of Jhelum. It is unnecessary to discuss in detail the instances given by the witnesses produced by the parties, as we think that the Divisional Judge has summarized the result accurately when he says:—"It appears to be the case that there is a custom by which widows do ordinarily succeed to a life-interest, daughters are excluded by sons, and a right of representation is allowed." In an earlier part of the judgment, the learned Judge says:—"Now the evidence in the present case shows that widows do usually take their husband's inheritance for life. There is no apparent instance on record of the exclusion of the widow, and over half a dozen of the widows excluding their husbands' brothers. There are quite eight instances of sons excluding daughters, and of brothers excluding sisters. There is an instance of the right of representation being allowed. On the death of Jan Muhammad's own brother, Imam Bux, (an obvious mistake for Umar Bux), the nephew, Wazir Bux, was not excluded." This is a fair summary of the evidence on the record; and the conclusion is irresistible that the rules of succession laid down by Muhammadan Law are not strictly observed by the kashmiris of Jhelum. Despite the finding recorded by the Divisional Judge that in matters of succession, strict Muhammadan Law is not followed in this tribe, he has concurred in the view taken by the District Judge in decreeing the claim of Amir Bux and that of Musammat Hussain Bibi in accordance with Muhammadan Law, solely on the ground that no definite custom empowering a Muhammadan Kashmiri to make a Will in regard to his property contrary to the rules of his personal law has been established by the defendants and that, therefore, the provisions of that law must apply to the case. In our opinion, the view is erroneous.

Both the Courts below have overlooked the fact, which is very important in this case, that Musammat Hussain Bibi based her claim upon the allegation that the parties were governed by custom and that by custom she was entitled, as the widow of the deceased, to a life-estate in the whole of the property left by him. That was her sole ground of claim, and throughout the litigation, she has consistently urged that as the widow of the deceased, she had a right to hold possession of the property in dispute for her life. In the face of her own claim, it is incomprehensible how the Courts below could have decreed in her favour $\frac{1}{8}$th share of the property in dispute absolutely and not for her life. Furthermore, when it was held by the Divisional Judge that the property in dispute was self-acquired of Jan Muhammad, he ought to have held that under Customary law, by which, according to Musammat Hussain Bibi's statement of claim, the parties were governed, Jan Muhammad had every power to dispose of that property by Will; and on that ground alone, Musammat Hussain Bibi's suit ought to have been dismissed. If pleadings have any value, this result was inevitable in Musammat Hussain Bibi's case; and there is no reason why, because Amir Bux in his suit based his own claim upon Muhammadan Law, the claim of Musammat Hussain Bibi should also have been adjudicated upon with reference to the provisions of the same law. We think that the evidence in the case points to the conclusion that Musammat Hussain Bibi had a life-interest in the estate of her husband; but, unfortunately for her, her husband made a Will bequeathing that estate in favour of his daughter and her issue, and it is clear that, even supposing that Jan Muhammad had no power to make the Will (which he clearly had as the property was self-acquired by him), Musammat Hussain Bibi as his widow had no right to dispute his act of alienation. We accordingly accept this appeal and dismiss Musammat Hussain Bibi's suit with costs.

As regards Amir Bux's claim, we hold, in agreement with the Divisional Judge, that in matters of inheritance, the parties are not governed by Muhammadan Law, and that while Musammat Mehtab Bibi would have been excluded by a son of Jan Muhammad, she excludes her uncle, Amir Bux, from succession to her father's property. According to the evidence, such large inroads are made into the provisions of Muhammadan Law in matters of inheritance in the parties' tribe that it is impossible to hold that Amir Bux and Mussammat Mehtab Bibi had a right to succeed upon Jan Muhammad's death to their respective share in his property in accordance with their personal law; and the net result of the evidence seems to be that Musammat Hussain Bibi had a right to succeed to a life-estate as a widow and that after her death or re-marriage, Musammat Mehtab Bibi had a right to come in to the exclusion of Amir Bux, or very possibliy Amir Bux had a right to exculde her from succession altogether. Whichever way we may look at the case, it is clear that Amir Bux and Musammat Mehtab Bibi were not co-heirs according to Muhammadan Law, and that being so, it is clear to our minds that the provisions of the Muhammadan Law as regards the invalidity of a Will in favour of one heir to the exclusion of other heirs are not applicable to this case. If Amir Bux was the sole heir after Musammat Hussain Bibi's death or re-marriage, he has been deprived of his rights by the Will of Jan Muhammad, the property in dispute being self-acquired by him, and if Musammat Mehtab Bibi was entitled to succeed in preference to Amir Bux, then she can resist Amir Bux's suit apart from the Will and with the Will in her favour, Amir Bux is clearly out of Court. In short, Amir Bux could succeed only in the event of his proving that the succession to Jan Muhammad's property was governed by strict Muhammadan Law, and not only has not this been proved, but on the contrary it has been shown that custom at variance with Muhammadan Law governs the inheritance in this family, according to which both Amir Bux and Musammat Mehtab Bibi cannot succeed as co-heirs to the property in dispute.

For these reasons, we accept this revision and dismiss Amir Bux's suit with costs throughout.

Both appeal and revision accepted.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 39(h)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 114—Guardian appointed residing outside jurisdiction—Removal—Review.

Where a person, who, at the time, was residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court, is appointed the guardian of a minor, he cannot be removed from such guardianship subsequently, under section 39 (h) of the Guardians and Wards Act, on the ground that he does not live within the jurisdiction of the Court.

The provisions of section 114, Civil Procedure Code, do not apply to orders passed under the Guardians and Wards Act.

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated 28th October 1911, removing the appellant from the guardianship of the minors.

Lala Moti Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Roshan Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge's order removing the appellant from the guardianship of the minor purports to be under section 39 (h) of the Gurdians and Wards Act, VIII of 1890, and the reason recorded is that the appellant "lives outside the jurisdiction of the Court" and is for that reason less eligible and "removeable." This is obviously a misinterpretation of the sub-section (i). Section 39 (h) provides for removal when the guardian ceases to reside within the Court's jurisdiction but the appellant was admittedly residing outside the jurisdiction when appointed.

The District Judge's action was in effect a review of his judgment appointing, and of Mr. Rahim Bux's order refusing to remove, the appellant, and Farid v. Mitho (1) is authority for holding that section 114 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing power to review, does not apply to this Act and the inapplicable section 39 (h) was apparently cited in default of an applicable provision of the Act.

I allow the appeal, and set aside the order appointing Musammat Manglan guardian and the order removing the appellant from guardianship with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Restitution of conjugal rights—Marriage of a Muhammadan minor girl by doubtful guardian—Husband taking second wife when the girl was about to attain her puberty—Effect of her repudiating marriage—Court not to help such a husband to take custody of his wife—Costs.

A., a minor Muhammadan girl, was married at the tender age of 6 to B. She was given in marriage by a person about whom there were doubts as to his competency to give her in marriage.

When A. was about to attain puberty, B took a second wife. Thereupon A. eloped with another person, took up her abode with him and finally married him. B. then sued for restitution of conjugal rights with A:

Held, (1) that this was a case in which the discretionary power of the Court should be exercised and B. should not be granted the custody of A.;

(2) that A. should not be allowed her costs against B. but the parties should be left to bear their own costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the Court of the Divisional Judge, Shahpur, dated the 21st day of August 1909, reversing the order of the Munsif 1st Class, Bhakkar, District Mianwali, dated 24th May 1909, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Mr. Fazal-i-Husain, for the Appellants.

Lala Kishan Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(28th February, 1911).—The plaintiff sues for custody of Musammat Sahib Jan. The first Court dismissed the suit, thinking the evidence as to the Nika unsatisfactory, but the learned Divisional Judge has decided the case in plaintiff's favour holding that Sahib Jan's father Kattu married her to plaintiff.

That a marriage was performed in 1897 between the girl and plaintiff is scarcely denied before me. The main point urged is that it was no valid marriage as Kattu was not the girl's father; Kattu posed as her father and took Rs. 60 from plaintiff's uncle. The girl was then a child of 6, Kattu handed her over to plaintiff's uncle. If Kattu was her father, he had the power to marry her.

If, on the other hand, he was merely her step father, such a marriage would not be legal.

When the girl was about 15, she eloped with Hasna whom she married. A conviction under section 494 was upset by the Sessions Judge, on appeal, on the ground that Kattu was not the girl's father. The evidence in the present case is rather brief. I am rather inclined to think, and in spite of the unusual fact of Kattu handing over the girl at the tender age of 6, that he was her father. But the fact remains that just about the time she attained puberty, her husband married a widow and she eloped and took up her abode with Hasna whom she married. Of course, a man can marry as many as four wives according to Muhammadan Law, but in the absence of any good explanation, I fail to see why a man who has already a young wife, who has just attained, or is just about to attain, the age of puberty, should take a second wife. It is hard enough for a minor girl to be married without her own inclination being consulted; for her to find just about the time of her attaining the age of puberty, that her husband takes a second wife, seems to me to be adding insult to injury. I am not at all surprised at her eloping. She has twice lived with Hasna and borne him a child.

In these circumstances, I think it is a case in which the discretionary power of the Court should be exercised, especially in view of the fact that it is not altogether beyond doubt whether Kattu was her father. I, therefore, accept the appeal and reversing the decree of the learned Divisional Judge, I dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

Appeal accepted.

An application for review made on the grounds noted below was also rejected except as to question of costs.

(1) This Hon'ble Court, having held that Kattu was the girl's father and the rule of Muhammadan Law making the marriage with plaintiff irrevocable and perfectly valid, has obviously erred in reversing the decree of the Divisional Judge and in dismissing the plaintiff's claim.

(2) In any case, the plaintiff's marriage being valid and Musammat Sahib Jan's connection with Hasna being illegal, this Hon'ble Court has erred in burdening the petitioner with costs in all Courts.

Petition under section 114, Order XLVII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, for revision of the judgment passed by the Judge of the Chief Court of the Punjab, dated the 28th February 1911, in the appeal case noted above.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are given in my order of 28th February 1911. This is an application for review of that order. I have issued notice only as regards costs, for I still adhere to my opinion that the plaintiff's conduct has been such that he does not deserve to have custody of his wife. But still she is (at least I think she is) his wife, and she is living with another man, and I think it would be a step of very doubtful policy to allow her costs against her husband. I did not consider this matter fully when passing my previous order.

I so far accept this application for review as to leave the parties to bear their own costs in all Courts, in other respects my order of 28th February 1911, will still stand good.

Application rejected except as regards costs.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A holding was sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent on the 13th September 1911 and purchased for Rs. 2,500 by the present petitioner. Two days later, an application was made for reversal of the sale under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That application on the face of it purported to be made on behalf of two of the judgment-debtors by one Jogendra Nath Roy, who alleged that he held a power-of-attorney from them, executed in his favour on the 31st January 1908. The auction-purchaser resisted the application. He impugned the authority of Jogendra Nath Roy to act on behalf of the judgment-debtors in this matter, and suggested that the application was not made on behalf of the judgment-debtors but for the benefit of a person who claimed to have acquired an interest in the holding by purchase and was, consequently, not competent to apply under section 174. The Court did not investigate the question whether Jogendra Nath Roy did really hold a power-of-attorney from two of the judgment-debtors nor did it determine whether under such power-of-attorney, he was competent to act on behalf of the judgment-debtors in this matter. The Court proceeded, on the other hand, upon the assumption that as the application was made in the name of the judgment-debtor by an unregistered transferee of the holding, the application could be entertained and the sale reversed. In support of this view, the Court relied upon the decision of this Court in the case of Behary Lal Mukerjee v. Basarat Mandal (1). In our opinion, the case mentioned is clearly distinguishable. It was there ruled that an application under section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for deposit of rent could be made by any person on behalf of the tenant inasmuch as neither section 145 nor section 188 applies to a case of that description nor was any provision made as to how applications other than those in suits were to be made by or on behalf of the parties in a case under section 61. In the case before us, the application for reversal of the sale is made in the course of execution proceedings, which are but a continuation of the suit. Now, it is clear from section 143, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that in a case of this description, the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable, and consequently, if a person professes to act on behalf of the parties to the proceeding, his authority to do so, if challenged, must be duly established. If any other view were maintained, the policy of the Legislature by which applications under section 174 are restricted to judgment-debtors would be completely defeated. It is well known that shortly after the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force, it was ruled in the case of Rajendro Narain Roy v. Phudy Mondul (2) that section 174 must be strictly construed. When section 310A was inserted in the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, it was held applicable to sales in execution of decrees for rent though it had a much wider scope than section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act [Janardhan Ganguli v. Kali Kristo Thakur (3)]. The result, therefore, was that provisions of section 174 were practically superseded. But in 1907, section 170, sub-section (1), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, was so amended as to make section 310A of the Code of 1882 and, therefore, also rule 89 of Order XXI of the Code of 1908, inapplicable to sales in execution of decrees for rent. Consequently, the view taken in Rajendro Narain Roy v. Phudy Mondul (2) that an application under section 174 can be made by the judgment-debtor alone and by no other person is now good law. The provisions of section 174 cannot, consequently, be allowed to be frittered away, as it has been, by the Court below in the present case.

The result is that this Rule must be made absolute, the order of the Court below set aside, and the case remitted to that Court in order that the question raised may be decided on evidence to be adduced, namely, whether Jogendra Nath Roy was competent to make the application on behalf of the judgment-debtors. The costs of this Rule will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Appeal—Practice—Time-barred appeal admitted in exercise of discretion before issue of process—Discharge of order of admission on respondent's objection—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5.

An order admitting a time-barred appeal by exercise of the discretion given by section 5 of the Limitation Act, if made before issue of process to the respondent, is not conclusive on the respondent.

But such an order should not be discharged on objection by the respondent, unless upon grounds which have not already been considered before the order was made; especially when the respondent's objection to the order of admission comes before a Judge other than the Judge who, in the exercise of his discretion, made the order of admission.

Bishendut v. Nandan Pershad, 12 C. W. N. 25, followed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 22nd December 1910, confirming that of the Second Munsif, Yeotmal, dated the 2nd May 1910.

Mr. M. Chuckerbutty, for the Appellant.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, an appeal was filed on 9th July 1910 in the District Court of East Berar. The endorsement by the Clerk of Court does not contain the year of institution—a pernicious habit in judicial proceedings which the District Judge should firmly repress. The appeal was then two days beyond time. The District Judge, Mr. Prideaux, heard appellant's Pleader on the 17th July 1910, and, having, presumably, acquainted himself with the appellant's version of the facts causing the delay, extended time under section 5 of the Limitation Act, and admitted the appeal. The hearing was set down for the 30th November 1910, the order of admission having been made ex parte the respondent. The appeal came for hearing before Mr. Prideaux's successor, the present District Judge, and, on objection taken by the respondent, he dismissed the appeal as time-barred. The respondent alleged no new matter—nothing that Mr. Prideaux had not already considered: and the appeal has been dismissed on the ground that the appellant's explanation of the delay does not constitute sufficient cause for extending time. This amounts to a review of Mr. Prideaux's order upon grounds already considered by Mr. Prideaux, and when Mr. Prideaux returns from leave, he may again re-open the case upon the same grounds. I have no doubt that an order admitting a time-barred appeal by exercise of the discretion given by section 5 of the Limitation Act, if made before issue of process to the respondent, is not conclusive on the respondent. But I concur with the dictum in Bishendut Tewari v. Nandan Pershad (1) that such an order should not be discharged on objection by the respondent, unless upon grounds which have not already been considered before the order was made; especially when the respondent's objection comes before a Judge other than the Judge who, in the exercise of his discretion, made the order of admission.

I allow this appeal, and, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, I remand the case for decision on the merits. The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal. I allow Rs. 15 as Pleader's fees herein.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2)—Preliminary decree—Decision on the question of res judicata.

The decision of a Court on a preliminary issue framed on a plea of res judicata is not a preliminary decree and is, therefore, not appealable.

The expression "preliminary decree" explained.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Shahpur, dated 14th April 1910, setting aside the decree of 15th March 1907, for the purpose of deciding the case on its merits.

Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are briefly these. On the 13th November 1906, the present plaintiff-respondent, who was then a minor, brought a suit through his next friend, Muhammad (who was brother-in-law of his uncle Mokhu), against the present defendants-appellants for a declaration of his proprietary rights in 1/6th share of a large area of land left by Saadat, common ancestor of himself and of defendants. The suit was compromised between Muhammad and the defendants, and in accordance with the compromise, which was sanctioned by the Court in which the suit was instituted, a decree for 18 bighas of land was passed in favour of the plaintiff on the 15th March 1907, the rest of the claim being dismissed. The plaintiff attained the age of majority in 1909, and on the 5th January 1910, he brought the present suit against the defendants for a declaration to the effect that he was owner of 1,359 kanals 15 marlas, out of 5,501 kanals of land left by Saadat which was in possession of the defendants, and that he was bound neither by the compromise effected by his next friend, Muhammad, in the former suit, nor by the decree for 18 bighas of land which was passed in plaintiff's favour on the strength of that compromise. On the 27th January, the defendants filed their written statement in answer to the plaintiff's claim; and one of the pleas raised was that in the suit of 1906 the plaintiff's next friend having effected a compromise in good faith for the benefit of the plaintiff and the Court having sanctioned the compromise, the decree passed in that case in accordance with the compromise on the 15th March 1907 was binding upon him, and that the present suit was barred by section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. Upon the question of law thus raised, the District Judge framed a preliminary issue in the following terms:—

"Whether in view of the previous suit between the parties, decided on the 15th March 1907 by Mian Abdul Hamid, the present suit is maintainable; and whether section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not operate as a bar?"

GEHNA v. KHUDA BAKHSH.

Upon this issue, the District Judge has held, in his order, dated the 14th April 1910, that since Muhammad, who was the next friend of the plaintiff in the former suit, was neither a guardian of his property under the Muhammadan Law, nor a near relation of his, and since he had compromised the case by accepting 72 kanals of land instead of 1,359 kanals now claimed by the plaintiff, the decision in the former suit in terms of the compromise was not binding on the plaintiff and the present suit was maintainable. The order of the District Judge concludes with the remark that other issues shall, therefore, be framed.

From the District Judge's order, an appeal has been preferred to this Court by the defendants; and the first point for decision in this appeal is whether the order of the 14th April 1910 amounts to a "preliminary decree" within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, for if it is not a preliminary decree, there can be no appeal, therefore, to this Court. After hearing the appellant's Counsel, we think that this question must be answered in the negative. The definition of the 'decree' as given in sub-section (2) of section 2 of the new Civil Procedure Code has formed the subject of consideration in some recent decisions of this Court—Kashi Nath v. Nathu Ram (1); Umar Ali v. Nasib-un-nissa (2) and Gur Das v. Bhag (3)—and we entirely concur in the view expressed in those decisions as to the meaning of the word 'decree' in the present Code. As observed by Rattigan, J., in Kashi Nath v. Nathu Ram (1), "a preliminary decree properly understood is passed only in those cases in which the Court has first to adjudicate upon the rights of the parties and has then to stay its hand for the time being until it is in a position to pass a final decree in the suit. This happens in suits for administration, for partition of property, for dissolution of partnership, for foreclosure, for sale of mortgaged property and by a principal for accounts from his agents." This view is supported by the explanation to sub-section (2) of section 2, which says:—"A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of." It must be admitted that the phraseology of the sub section in question is far from clear and precise, for the words "conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit", as used in the sub-section, appear at first sight to cover a decision embodied in an interlocutory order of almost every description upon any question of law or fact which may be the subject of dispute between the parties in a suit. But we think that the better view to hold is, as held in Umar Ali v. Nasib-un-nissa (2), that (generally speaking) the words "rights of the parties" in the definition of 'decree' must be taken to be the rights of the parties inter se in regard to the subject-matter of the suit. Applying that test to the present case, it cannot be said that the order of the District Judge, dated the 14th April 1910, determines the rights of the parties with regard to any part of the subject-matter of the suit. If the argument of the appellant's Counsel as to the meaning and scope of the word 'decree' were accepted, then each separate order passed by a Court in the course of the same suit upon each of several questions of law raised by the parties, e.g., the question of limitation, the plea of res judicata, the plea of bar by reason of Order XI, rule 2 of the present Code, the question of the locus standi of the plaintiff to sue, and other similar questions, must necessarily be deemed to be a "preliminary decree" from which an appeal would lie to a higher Court. The result would be that in some cases there may conceivably be no less than half a dozen preliminary decrees, from each of which a separate appeal would be competent; and after the complete disposal of the suit on the merits, there would be a final decree from which yet another appeal would lie, after the Appellate Court had dealt with and disposed of the various points raised in the appeals from the preliminary decrees. Such an anomalous result could never have been contemplated by the Legislature, and we, therefore, think that the restricted meaning placed upon the expression "preliminary decree" in the above-mentioned decisions of this Court is correct. The ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhup Indar Bahadur Singh v. Bijai Bahadur Singh (4), which has been relied upon by the appellant's Counsel, is not in point, inasmuch as the appeal in that case arose out of execution proceedings and the sole question for decision before their Lordships was as to whether the order made by the executing Court to the effect that the decree-holder was entitled to mesne profits for the period of three years from the date of the original decree, passed by the District Judge, was or was not a final order amounting to a decree.

In the present case, no decision has been given by the District Judge on the question whether the present plaintiff's next friend in the suit of 1906 had or had not acted fraudulently or in collusion with the defendants in entering into the compromise; the sole point decided is that notwithstanding the decision of the Court of the 15th March 1907, which was based upon a compromise, the present suit was maintainable, and we have no hesitation in holding that this decision does not amount to a preliminary decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. No appeal could, therefore, lie to this Court from the order of the District Judge, dated the 14th April 1910, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Atmaram Bhagwant and A. C. Roy, for the Non-applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This application arises out of a remark made at the close of my judgment, dated the 12th October 1911, in First Appeal No. 26 of 1911, to which the present applicants and non-applicants were all parties.

The applicants were defendants in the suit out of which the said first appeal arose. The decree of the Court of first instance was passed on the 10th February 1911, the proceedings having been ex parte against those defendants. On the 18th idem, they applied to have the decree set aside. Pleadings were recorded and the case was adjourned to the 13th July for evidence. In the meantime, on the 16th June, the plaintiffs had appealed from the decree, which was eventually modified on the 13th October. Some of the evidence required in connection with the application to set aside the ex parte decree of the 10th February 1911, has still to be recorded.

This Court is now asked to withdraw to itself the proceeding to set aside the lower Court's decree. This application is opposed on the ground that the lower Court ought to be allowed to complete the inquiry begun before the appeal from the ex parte decree was preferred. The decision in Sankara v. Subraya (1) is sought to be distinguished on the ground that there the appeal was disposed of before an application to set aside the decree appealed from was filed.

Ramanadham v. Narayanan (2), which was cited and followed in Sankara v. Subraya (1), has been overruled by a Full Bench in Chenna

(1) 30 M. 535; 17 M. L. J. 436.
(2) 27 M. 602; 14 M. L. J. 321.

Reddi v. Pedda Obi (3). The first and third of those cases were concerned with applications for review of judgment presented by a party to a suit in which an appeal was afterwards preferred. Neither of them lays down that a Court of first instance can review its judgment after its decree has actually been modified in appeal. In Damodar v. Sarat Chandra (4), it was held by Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., that the mere fact that an appeal has been preferred from an ex parte decree and is pending does not preclude a defendant against whom the decree was passed from applying under section 108, Civil Procdeure Code of 1882, for an order to set it aside. The position is, however, different when by decision of the appeal the decree appealed from has been superseded by that of the Appellate Court. In these Provinces, it has long been settled that a decree cannot be amended by the Court of first instance even after it has been confirmed by the Appellate Court: see Moriram v. Daryao (5). That this view is correct is now settled by the judgment of the Privy Council in Lala Brij Narain v. Tejpal (6). It seems to follow clearly from the fact that the appellate decree supersedes the one appealed from, that there is no decree left which the Court of first instance can set aside once the Appellate Court's decision has been given. I hold accordingly and, under sub-section (1) (b), section 24, Civil Procedure Code, withdraw from the District Judge's Court the application under rule 13, Order IX, preferred to the Additional Judge of that Court by the present applicants. The costs of this application will follow the result of the one withdrawn to this Court. I allow Rs. 10 as Counsel's fee.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2)—Preliminary decree—Decision on the question of res judicata.

The decision of a Court on a preliminary issue framed on a plea of res judicata is not a preliminary decree and is, therefore, not appealable.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 12th of September 1910.

Dr. S. C. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Sen, for the Respodents.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of this appeal on the ground that no decree has been passed in the suit and, therefore, no appeal lies. What happened in the Court below was this. A plea of res judicata was urged on behalf of the defendants. Arguments were heard in regard to that plea and the Court came to the conclusion that the matter was not res judicata between the parties. A number of other issues were framed and the Court, after determining the preliminary point referred to above, proceeded to try the other issues. It is from the decision upon the issue as to res judicata that this appeal has been preferred. We are of opinion that the determination of such an issue is not a decree within the definition of that term as given in the Code of Civil Procedure. No preliminary decree has been passed in the suit. What the definition means is that a Court may pass a preliminary decree in certain circumstances, which is appealable, and a final decree subsequently. It could never mean that the determination of each issue would give rise to an appeal and that such determination would be deemed to be a decree.

We accordingly allow the preliminary objection and dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher cale.

Appeal dismissed.

Custom—Mahars in Berar—Right to carcases and hides of dead animals disposed of by owners—Unreasonable custom.

It is the duty of working village mahars in Berar to remove and bury the bodies of dead animals not disposed of by the owners.

Where the mahars dispose of a carcase, they are ordinarily allowed by custom to appropriate the hides and flesh as remuneration for their service.

The mahars have no right by custom to appropriate the carcases and hides of animals whose owners dispose of the carcases in a sanitary manner without calling in the services of mahars.

The mahars cannot claim the carcases and hides of dead cattle which the owner has not abandoned and which he himself disposes of.

One of the principal requisites to the validity of a custom is that it shall not be unreasonable. Nothing can be more unreasonable than an invasion of the rights of property without any benefit to the common weal.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 20th October 1910, reversing that of the Junior Munsif, Akola, dated the 3rd February 1910.

Mr. J. Hornby, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The admitted facts of this case are that the two plaintiffs-appellants, are, by rotation, the watandar mahars of the village of Anbhora in the Murtizapur Taluk of the Akola District in Berar. The two defendants, who are brothers, are members of the Patelki family of that village, though neither of them is actually the Patel. A bullock belonging to the defendants died, and the defendants sent for the plaintiffs to remove the dead animal; the plaintiffs said that they would remove the dead bullock if they were allowed to keep the hide; the defendants refused to let the plaintiffs remove the dead bullock on these terms, and the defendants themselves buried the carcase; what became of the hide does not appear from the record, but the learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents says his clients, no doubt, sold it.

On these facts, the plaintiffs have sued the defendants for Rs. 10, Rs. 5 being the value of the hide and Rs. 5 being the value of the flesh of the bullock.

For the plaintiffs, it was contended that by local custom when a bullock or cow or other animal belonging to a villager dies, the watandar mahars are entitled as of right to dispose of the carcase and to retain for their services the flesh and hide, whether the owner of the animal be a member of the Patelki family or not.

For the defendants, it was contended that though such a custom might exist as regards the cattle of other villagers, the members of the Patelki family were entitled to have the carcase removed by the watandar mahars who were bound to return the skin, or its price, to the owner of the dead animal, the mahars receiving for their services 8 pailis of jowari.

Issues were framed on these pleas and each party adduced evidence. The Munsif found the evidence on both sides to be interested and worthless, but, as it is the duty of mahars to remove and bury dead animals, he held that they were entitled to the flesh and hide; he also held that it was not established that any member of the Patelki family, except the Patel himself, was exempt from this rule, and that the fact that the defendants had themselves buried the bullock in no way lessened the plaintiffs' rights; on these grounds, he decreed the plaintiffs' claim. On appeal, the learned Additional District Judge held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the custom as set up by them. He held firstly, that the plaintiffs' evidence was insufficient to prove any custom by which the watandar mahars of the village had the right to remove the dead body of a bullock or other domestic animal and appropriate its carcase and hide irrespective of the wishes of its owner; secondly, that such a custom would be unreasonable, and thirdly, that the defendants' evidence shows that members of the Patel family were in the habit of keeping for themselves the hides of their cattle.

It is to be observed that the two witnesses for the plaintiffs, who are themselves watandar mahars who work as such in rotation, and who are obviously interested witnesses, are anxious to show that the watandar mahars are entitled to the hides of all cattle that die whether the owner wishes to use the services of the mahars in disposing of the carcase or not, while the two witnesses for the defendants, who are members of the Patel family and thus very interested witnesses, are mainly concerned with showing that members of the Patel's family are to be distinguished from other villagers.

The evidence being what it is, the learned Additional District Judge was quite justified in finding that the custom as set up by the plaintiffs has not been proved as regards any villagers. On this finding, the question whether the members of the Patel family would not be bound by the custom if it existed does not really arise, and it cannot be said that in this suit the question, whether a member of the Patel family has privileges beyond those of other villagers as regards the hides of cattle, whose carcases have been disposed of by the watandar mahars with the concurrence of the owners, has been disposed of, even as regards this one village.

It is a fact, as pointed out by the Munsif, that one of the duties of village mahars is removing and burying the bodies of dead animals. This is laid down by rule 437 (8) of the rules framed under section 216 (i) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, to be found at page 161 of Volume 1 of the Berar Revenue Manual. This duty, however, is in the interests of sanitation, and must, in my opinion, be held to refer in the case of domestic animals only to the bodies of such animals as are not disposed of by the owners. The rule does not give the village mahars any right to appropriate the carcase and hide of animals whose owners dispose of the carcase in a sanitary manner without calling in the services of the mahars. The custom, which undoubtedly exists in at least some villages for the mahars to take the hides of dead cattle, no doubt, has its origin in the view that when the duty of disposing of a carcase is cast on the mahars, they are entitled to some remuneration, which conveniently takes the form of allowing them, if they wish to claim, the flesh, and dispose of the hide for what it will fetch. Such a custom also must relate back to the time when hides were of trifling value, but now that, owing to improved communications and other causes, there is a strong demand for hides with a consequential great rise in their value, disputes between villagers and mahars have naturally arisen.

My judicial experience in connection with Berar has lasted for many years, as Judge and Judicial Commissioner in Berar and as Additional Judicial Commissioner in the Central Provinces with jurisdiction over Berar cases, and many cases relating to the claims of watandar mahars to the hides of cattle have come to my notice. In many cases, the right of mahars to the skins of abandoned cattle has been recognised, in some cases relating to certain villages it has been held proved that members of the Patelki family are exempt from any such claims by mahars, but in no case, to my knowledge, has it been held that mahars can claim the carcases and hides of dead cattle which the owner has not abandoned. The subject, apart from the special claim of members of Patelki families, has been succinctly put by Bullock, J. C., in Berar Second Appeal No. 16 of 1891, where he says: "The plaintiffs claim as a right, belonging to them as watandar mahars, the skins and carcases of dead cattle, saying that the owner of the dead cattle had no right to make over the carcases to the Mangs of the village. The evidence is rather unsatisfactory but the lower Appellate Court in deciding the appeal has gone on grounds which cannot, in my opinion, be opposed, viz., that the owner of cattle has as much right over his cattle when dead as when alive and may give the skins to whomsoever he likes. This is the view taken by the Bombay High Court [Yellappa v. Mankia(1)] and I see no argument that can possibly be set against it. The mahars are, no doubt, entitled to the carcases of abandoned dead cattle. But if a bullock dies in the possession of its owner, they cannot as a right claim it against the owner's right of disposal."

One of the principal requisites to the validity of a custom is that it shall not be unreasonable. Nothing could be more unreasonable than an invasion of the rights of property without any benefit to the common weal.

Malus usus est abolendus, and the Additional District Judge was justified in holding not only that the custom as set up was not proved, but would be an unreasonable custom.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24—Withdrawal of suit by District Judge—When should be made—Scope of section 24—Erroneous view of law.

A District Judge should not withdraw a suit under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code, merely because in an analogous case a Subordinate Judge had taken what, in his opinion, was an erroneous view of the law. If the District Judge does not intend to try a suit finally, the case ought not to be transferred merely to enable him to dispose of it on a preliminary ground.

Rules granted against the orders of the District Judge of Midnapore, dated April 15th and 23rd, 1912.

Mr. B. Chakravarti, Counsel and Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Petitioner.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, Senior Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made by the Court below on the 15th April 1912, under section 24 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. It appears that thirty-one suits were instituted under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act; four of them were instituted in the Court of the Munsif, twelve in the Court of the first Subordinate Judge and the remaining fifteen in the Court of the second Subordinate Judge. Upon the application of the plaintiff, the cases were, shortly after their institution, transferred to the Court of the second Subordinate Judge. On the 19th September 1911, an applicalion by the defendant, the Secretary of State for India in Council, praying that the under-tenants ought to be joined as parties defendants, was refused by the Subordinate Judge. On the 26th March 1912, the Subordinate Judge tried a group of eight cases and decreed the suits. One of the issues raised before him was whether the under-tenants were necessary parties; he held that although it might be desirable to have them on the record, the suits could not be dismissed on the ground that they had not been joined as parties. Subsequently, the matter was brought to the notice of the District Judge, in what manner it has not been explained, and on the 15th April 1912, he made an order for transfer of the pending suits to his own file: this is the order now assailed on behalf of the petitioner.

The District Judge states explicitly that in his opinion the order of the Subordinate Judge in the cases already finally tried by him, was contrary to two decisions of this Court and that he transferred the pending cases to his own file as otherwise the Subordinate Judge might erroneously hold that the suits were properly constituted and could be heard in the absence of the under-tenants. The District Judge thereupon proceeded to hear the cases which he had transferred to his own file by what he himself characterises as "an unusual procedure" and came to the conclusion that the under-tenants ought to be joined as parties defendants. He accordingly directed the plaintiff to join the under-tenants as defendants within a week and added that if his order was not carried out, the suits would be dismissed on the ground that they were improperly constituted. The District Judge further stated that should it be ultimately held by the High Court that his view of the law was erroneous, the cases would have to be re-transferred to the Subordinate Judge because he had no time to hear original suits of this description. In our opinion, upon the circumstances stated in the order of the District Judge, the order for transfer ought not to have been made.

Section 24 of the Code of 1908 authorises a District Judge to withdraw a suit pending in any Court subordinate to his and to try and dispose of the same. The object of the Legislature is obvious; it was never intended that a District Judge should withdraw a suit merely because in an analogous case a Subordinate Judge had taken what in his opinion was an erroneous view of the law. If the District Judge does not intend to try the suit finally, the case ought not to be transferred merely to enable him to dispose of it on a preliminary ground. We may add that the motive of the District Judge has not been called in question before us, and it has not been disputed that he acted with a view to prevent what, he thought, might otherwise involve a waste of public time. It has only been argued and, in our opinion, correctly, that, in the admitted circumstances, the order for transfer should not have been made. The Rule will, consequently, be made absolute and the order of the 15th April 1912 discharged, in each of the cases. The result will be that the cases will be re-transferred to the file of the second Subordinate Judge. The Secretary of State will be at liberty to prefer appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge in the cases decided on the 26th March 1912; if such appeals have already been preferred, the Secretary of State may apply to the Subordinate Judge to defer the trial of the other suits pending the result of the appeals. The Subordinate Judge will make such order as he considers appropriate; if he refuses to stay the hearing of the suits, the Secretary of State will be at liberty to apply to this Court.

The Rules are made absolute with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur in each case. All orders of the District Judge subsequent to the order of the 15th April will necessarily stand discharged.

Rule made absolute.

Musammat MUKTAI—RESPONDENT.

Berar Land Revenue Code, ss. 205, 211—Pre-emption—"Co-occupant having a right of pre-emption"—Subsequent transferee from person having right of pre-emption.

The words "co-occupant having a right of pre-emption" in section 211 of the Berar Land Revenue Code, refer only to the person who was co-occupant at the date of the transfer on which the claim for pre-emption is based or a transferee from that co-occupant by inheritance. The words do not include an entire stranger to whom the co-occupancy right has passed by voluntary transfer, that is, by sale or gift, subsequent to the sale sought to be pre-empted.

A right to sue for pre-emption, which has already accrued, cannot be transferred to an entire stranger. Consequently, a stranger, who has become a co-occupant by a transfer subsequent to the sale sought to be pre-empted, is not entitled to the right of pre-emption.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, West Berar, Akola, dated the 31st August 1910, confirming that of the Senior Munsif, Akola, dated the 23rd December 1909.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Reshmai was a co-occupant in the field Survey No. 24 in mouza Manki, Balapur Taluk, with respect to a demarcated one-third share of the field. On her death, which occured early in 1909, her daughters became, according to the plaintiff-appellant, her heirs, and on the 4th March 1909, one of them, with the consent, it is said, of her sisters, gifted this one-third share to the plaintiff-appellant, who was not previously a co-occupant in the field. On the 20th April 1908, nearly a year before the plaintiff became, as he claims, a co-occupant by the deed of gift, the first defendant Musammat Muktai, who was a co-occupant in the field with respect to a demarcated half share, sold her share to Raoji, the second defendant, a stranger. On the 19th April 1909, the last day within limitation, the plaintiff has brought this suit for pre-emption as regards the half share sold to the second defendant. A preliminary issue was framed as to whether, even if the plaintiff had become a co-sharer by the deed of gift, the suit was maintainable. The learned Munsif held that it was not, and the same view was taken on appeal by the learned Additional District Judge. The plaintiff appeals to this Court. For the appellant, it is argued that Musammat Reshmai or her daughters could certainly have brought a suit for pre-emption with reference to section 211 (1)(a) of the Berar Land Revenue Code, and that as the appellant has by the deed of gift succeeded to the rights of Musammat Reshmai, he is equally entitled to pre-empt. The plaintiff was not a co-sharer at the date of the sale to the second defendant, Musammat Reshmai was a co-sharer and could have brought this suit if she had lived. The question is whether the right to sue has passed to the plaintiff. It may be conceded that the right to sue did pass to the daughters of Musammat Reshmai as her heirs or rather as heirs of her husband. It has been laid down, in Faquir Ali Shah v. Ram Kishan (1), that as regards transfers by inheritance, the general principle should apply that the right of pre emption passes with the land. This ruling was with reference to the Punjab Pre-emption Act, II of 1905. But the same view was taken in Muhammad Yusuf Ali Khan v. Dal Kuar (2), with reference to the rights of pre-emption under the wajib ul-arz, and the principle was carried further to apply to a relinquishment by a widow of her rights in favour of her daughter who was the reversioner, and the right of pre-emption in respect of a sale which had taken place prior to the relinquishment was held to pass to the daughter. Thus, the plaintiff is in the same position, neither better nor worse, as he would have been in if the gift had been made to him by Musammat Reshmai, who fully represented the estate, with the consent of the reversioners. The question is whether the plaintiff, having got possession of the land by a gift, has also acquired the right to sue for pre-emption in respect of a sale prior to the date of the gift. He cannot be in a worse position than a person who acquired the share by sale. In Sheo Narain v. Hira (3), the Full Bench answered the following question in the negative: "Where there is a right of pre-emption under the wajib-ul-arz, which a share-holder could claim and enforce in respect of a sale of property, can a person, purchasing the said share-holder's interest in the village subsequently to sale, claim and enforce pre-emption just as his vendor might have done?"

Mahmood, J., was the only Judge who gave reasons for his opinion, and the reasons he gave were three in number. The first was that the whole object of the law of pre-emption is to prevent the intrusion of strangers, and at the time of the sale to the plaintiff, the earlier purchaser was not a stranger but had become a co-sharer, and was less of a stranger than the later purchaser. The second was that the earlier purchaser could sue the later, just as well as the later purchaser could sue the earlier, and if both suits were brought, they would result either in nothing or in an exchange. The third was that as the original co-sharer had not taken steps to object to the earlier sale, his successor could not do so. The third of these reasons has been shown to be erroneous in Muhammad Yusuf Ali Khan v. Dal Kuar (2), cited above, for, until the period of limitation had expired, abstinence from objection for only some portion of that time could not raise any inference of the abandonment of a claim to pre-empt. In Fakir Ali Shah v. Ram Kishen (1), also cited above, transfers by inheritance were distinguished from voluntary tranfers by some act of the owner, and the arguments of Mahmood, J., in the case in Sheo Narain v. Hira (3), were held to be applicable only to voluntary transfers, and not to transfers by inheritance. As regards transfers not by inheritance, Clark, C. J., remarked: "There is good reason why voluntary transfers should not pass a right of pre-emption as regards properties previously sold." This remark is no doubt an obiter dictum but it nevertheless carries great weight. The views of Mahmood, J., on which it is based, seem to me to be applicable in the case of a suit for pre-emption brought under the statutory rights conferred by the Berar Land Revenue Code. The later purchaser is just as much a stranger as the earlier purchaser, more so in fact, for the earlier purchaser has ceased to be a stranger and has become a co-occupant. In the present case, the plaintiff is not a later purchaser, but a donee. I do not see how this improves his position, except that his acquisition of the co-occupancy-right does not give the earlier purchaser a claim for pre-emption. I am of opinion that the words "co-occupant having a right of pre-emption", in section 211 of the Code, refer only to the person who was co-occupant at the date of the transfer on which the claim for pre-emption is based, or a transferee from that co-occupant by inheritance; the words may possibly include a transferee in whose favour the inheritance has been accelerated. But the words do not include an entire stranger to whom the co-occupancy right has passed by a voluntary transfer, in the sense in which those words are used in the case of Faqir Ali Shah v. Ram Kishan (1) including both a sale and a gift. In other words, a right to sue for pre-emption which

KAMINI PRASHAD CHOWDHURY—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Court-fee—Appeal—Suit for possession and mesne profits—Value of suit—Value of land at Rs. 1,020 and mesne profits at Rs. 4,199*—Decree—Appeal with Court-fee on Rs.* 4,199 mesne profits—Subsequent assessment of mesne profits at only Rs. 2,570*—Whether Court-fee is to be paid a second time on memorandum of appeal.*

The plaintiff, in a suit for recovery of land and mesne profits, valued the relief for recovery of land at Rs. 1,020 and for the mesne profits antecedent to the suit at Rs. 4,199. The Courts below made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed to the High Court and valued their appeal at Rs. 5,291 and paid Court-fees on their memorandum of appeal ad valorem. During the pendency of this appeal, mesne profits were assessed at Rs. 2,570 and a decree made in favour of the plaintiff for this amount. The defendants desired to appeal against this decree:

Held, that as the defendants had already paid Court-fees upon the claim for mesne profits valued at Rs. 4,199, they could not be called upon to pay Court-fees a second time, and that this appeal would be filed without any Court-fee being paid on the memorandum of appeal.

This is an application for the admission of an appeal without payment of further Court-fees.

Baba Ram Charan Mitra, Senior Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application raises a question apparently of first impression. The petitioners were the defendants in an action for recovery of land and mesne profits. The plaintiff valued the relief for recovery of the land at Rs. 1,020 and of the mesne profits antecedent to the suit at Rs. 4,199-8. The Court below made a decree in favour of the plaintiff, which entitled the plaintiff to recover possession of the land and also to realise mesne profits to be subsequently ascertained. The defendants appealed to this Court, valued their appeal at Rs. 5,219-8 and paid Court-fees on the memorandum of appeal ad valorem. During the pendency of this appeal, proceedings for the assessment of mesne profits have been carried on in the Court below and mesne profits have been assumed at Rs 2,570-1-10. A decree for this sum has now been made in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants now desire to appeal against this decree for mesne profits. The question arises, whether they can be called upon to pay Court-fees upon the memorandum of appeal. They have already paid Court fees upon the claim for mesne profits valued at Rs. 4,199-8, and they cannot, in our opinion, be called upon to pay Court-fees a second time. Under section 97 of the Code of 1908, they were bound to appeal against the preliminary decree and they have done so upon payment of full Court-fees. That preliminary decree has meanwhile been carried into effect and a final decree made by which the liability of the defendants has been fixed at a sum, smaller than what is claimed by the plaintiffs. Consequently, it is not incumbent upon the defendants to pay Court-fees a second time. If mesne profits had been decreed for a higher sum than what is claimed in the plaint and if the plaintiff had obtained a decree for such sum upon payment of additional Court-fees, the defendants might have been called upon to pay the difference between the Court-fees payable on the sum ultimately determined and the sum originally mentioned, respectively. The reason why a question of this character has not been raised before, is explained in the decision in Bunwari Lal v. Sheo Sanker Misser (1), where it was pointed out that an erroneous practice has hitherto been followed by which the defendant was allowed to prefer an appeal to this Court against a preliminary decree for mesne profits upon payment of Court-fees of Rs. 10. We hold, therefore, that the appellants are not liable to pay Court-fees upon the present memorandum of appeal, and we may add that the learned Government Pleader, who has appeared on notice, concedes that this is the correct view of the law.

It is competent to an arbitrator, who is empowered to decide whether a sale should be set aside, to pass an award setting aside the sale on the vendor re-paying the purchase-money.

Obiter:—A refusal by Court to remit an award under rule 14 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code is not appealable.

Suryanaraiana Row v. Sarabaya, 21 M. L. J. 263; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 151; 9 Ind. Cas. 173; 9 M. L. T. 251, referred to.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore, in A. S. No. 272 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Ellore, in O. S. No. 402 of 1907.

Mr. P. Narayanamurty, for 2nd Appellant.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The matter in dispute before the arbitrator was whether the plaintiff was entitled to have a sale-deed set aside. The arbitrator was of opinion that while the plaintiff was entitled to have it set aside, she was also bound as a matter of equity to repay the money that she had received in connection with the sale-deed. It cannot be said that he acted beyond the limits of his jurisdiction in passing what in substance was a conditional award in plaintiffs' favour and the District Munsif was right, therefore, in holding that there was no ground under rule 14, Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code, to remit the award. The Appellate Court's decision on the merits modifying the decree of the District Munsif is wrong. In this view of the case, it is, perhaps, unnecessary to consider whether an appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge at all against the Munsif's decree. The Procedure Code provides no appeal against an order refusing to remit an award and the Full Bench decision of this Court in Suryanaraiana Row v. Sarabaya (1) is in favour of the appellant's contention that no appeal would lie in such a case. But it is unnecessary to decide that point as we hold that on the merits the Subordinate Judge is wrong. His decree must be set aside and that of the District Munsif restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal—Order directing application for assessment of mesne profits to be registered as execution case—Interlocutory order, not appealable.

Babu Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of the Court of appeal below made in affirmance of an order of the primary Court, directing an application for assessment of mesne profits to be registered as an execution case on the basis whereof inquiry into the amount of mesne profits is to proceed. A preliminary objection has been taken to the competency of the appeal on the ground that the application is in reality an application in the suit and the order made thereon cannot be treated as a decree under section 2 read with section 47 clause (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. In reply to this contention, it has been urged by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the respondent has treated the application for assesement of mesne profits as an application in execution, that, at his instance, it has been registered as such, and consequently, it is not open to the respondent now to urge that the matter is not really one in execution. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the case of Bindeswari Prosad Singh v. Thakur Lakpat Nath Singh (1).

In our opinion, the preliminary objection must prevail.

Even if it be assumed, on the principle explained in Bindeswari Prosad v. Thakur Lakpat (1), that it is not open to the respondent to urge that the application is not properly an application in execution, still the order in question is an interlocutory order and does not determine the rights of the parties. An order of this description is clearly not open to appeal as pointed out by this Court in the cases of Dalgliesh v. Nandan Misser (2) and Srinivas Prosad Singh v. Kesho Prosad Singh (3). A similar view was taken by this Court in the case of Behary Lal Pundit v. Kedar Nath Mullick (4).

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Landlord and tenant—Permanent lease—Stipulation for payment of Government revenue—Increase in Government revenue on re-settlement—Whether tenant liable to pay the increase.

Where, under the terms of a permanent lease, the lessee agreed to pay a fixed annual rent and a certain sum which was the Government revenue:

Held, that the lessee was not liable for any increase in the revenue imposed by Government on a subsequent re-settlement.

Second appeal against the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of North Malabar, in A. S. No. 337 of 1909, presented against that of the District Munsif of Kuttuparamba, in O. S. No. 38 of 1909.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Govinda Marar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the appellant before us is the holder of a Saswatham or permanent lease. The 'Marupat' or counterpart executed by him contains these stipulations:—(2nd para).

"The purapad settled to be paid by us to you hereafter annually is 1,200 seers of paddy worth Rs. 96. We agree to pay the said 1,200 seers of paddy before 30th Makaram every year and take a receipt and to pay Rs. 16-2-9, the revenue of the said properties, along with the said varam and take a receipt." The question raised for decision is whether the landlord is entitled to recover from the tenant the increase in the Government revenue in consequence of a fresh settlement made by Government after the date of the lease. The covenant on the part of the tenant is to pay a certain sum, namely, Rs. 16-2 9, to the landlord which was the revenue on the properties at the time of the lease. There is no provision in the deed that the tenant should pay the Government revenue, whatever it may be, in addition to the rent fixed in the lease. He was to pay rent and a specified sum which was the revenue. On the words of the lease, it is impossible to hold that there is any covenant on the part of the tenant to pay anything more than Rs. 16-2-9 on account of the revenue of the land leased. There is nothing in the plaint to show that the tenant is bound to make any payment except on the covenant contained in the lease. We may also mention that, on the date of the lease, the parties must have been well aware that a re-settlement of Government revenue would soon be made, and with that anticipation before them, the covenant is specific as to what the tenant should pay on account of Government revenue. We must, therefore, hold that the tenant is not liable to pay to the jenmi the increase in the revenue. The decree of the lower Appellate Court in so far as it modifies that of the District Munsif is set aside and the District Munsif's decree is restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The time for payment of revenue will be extended to the 15th day of June 1912.

Babu Girija Prosonna Roy Chowdhury for Moulvi Shamsul Huda, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in an action to eject the defendants who hold under a lease, dated the 31st May 1886. That lease, on the face of it, embodies a permanent settlement for agricultural purposes, and the defendants have been in occupation of the disputed land thereunder from the date of the settlement up to the present time. The plaintiff, however, contends that he is entitled to eject the defendants by virtue of the following clause in the lease: "Be it further stated that if I myself take up cultivation in future, that is, after twelve years, then you shall give up the said land to my cultivation." The question, therefore, arises whether this condition is operative in law. In support of the view that it entitles the landlord legally to terminate the tenancy at any time after the expiry of twelve years from the commencement of the lease, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1). But it is clear that the decision is of no assistance to the appellant. In that case, there was a conveyance with a clause for re-purchase within the term of ten years. No question, therefore, obviously arose as to the validity of the covenant. It does not follow, however, that a covenant for re-purchase at a period of time which may be indefinitely postponed, is valid in law. In fact, the decision of Sir George Jessel, M R, in London and South Western Railway Company v. Gomm (2), shows that a covenant of this description may be bad on the ground of remoteness. This view accords with the principle recognised in Gosavi v. Rivett-Carnac (3) and Ray v. Walker (4). It is further plain that the clause upon which the learned Vakil for the appellant relies is bad, because it contravenes the provisions of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section provides in clauses (a) and (c) of sub-section (1) that nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant, made before or after the passing of the Act, shall bar in perpetuity the acquisition of an occupancy-right in land or shall entitle the landlord to eject a tenant otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act. The effect of the clause in substance is to reduce the defendants to the level of tenants-at-will after they have been in possession for more than twelve years and have acquired a right of occupancy in accordance with the statutory provisions on the subject. The appellant, therefore, invites us to support a clause in the lease, which is inconsistant with the interest created in the lessee, is bad for remoteness, and tends to bar the acquisition of a right of occupancy. The validity of a clause of this character cannot possibly be maintained.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Muhammadan Law—Guardianship—Sale by de facto guardian of minor—Valid necessity, whether justifies alienation—Benefit to minor—Partition—Decree directing division of a shop into a number of shares—Non-reservation of power to sell if division not effected—Power of Court to make order after decree.

The de facto guardian of a minor can, under Muhammadan Law, alienate the minor's property in cases of urgent and imperative necessity, whether the property be moveable or immoveable. He can also do acts on behalf of the minor which, from their nature, must necessarily be beneficial to the minor. In either class of cases, there is no substantial difference between the power of such a person who has assumed the duties of guardian without lawful authority and of a legal guardian, though there are cases wherein the powers exercisable by a lawful guardian are not within the competence of other persons.

According to the general principles of Muhammadan Law, the sale of a minor's property by an unauthorized guardian, even if it was not made for a valid cause, i.e., for necessity, or under circumstances which would make the transaction purely advantageous to the minor, would, strictly speaking, be neither void nor voidable in the ordinary sense of the term. An alienation of the minor's property without any justifying cause is regarded as maugut, i. e., its validity will depend upon the minor accepting the transaction on attaining majority. It is not inoperative until it is avoided, nor is it invalid unless and until it is ratified. It is a transaction in a state of suspense. Its validity or invalidity is only determined by the minor adopting or not adopting it after he has attained majority, though the effect of his decision will relate back to the date of the inception of the transaction. If he decides to adopt the transaction, it becomes valid from the inception; otherwise, it will be treated as void and of no effect from the very commencement.

A sale by a Muhammadan mother of her minor son's property to find money for the expenses of the minor's sister's marriage or for the discharge of family debts or for family purposes is not for a justifying cause, according to Muhammadan Law, and is, therefore, invalid.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In both these appeals one common question arises, whether the sale of a minor's property by his mother acting as de facto guardian is valid under the Muhammadan Law, and if so, under what conditions. In one case, Appeal No. 1416, the deed of sale alleges that the shop which was sold had been vacant as the Municipality prohibited the selling of fish and flesh in that shop, that it was in a dilapidated condition, and the mother of the minor, who is the 8th defendant, was unable to execute repairs. The sale-proceeds, it is alleged, were applied to the discharge of certain debts contracted for the marriage of a sister of the minor and for other purposes. It was to meet the expenses of this marriage that money was required and the other facts mentioned apparently furnished the reason for selecting this particular property for sale. In Suit No. 4 of 1909, which has given rise to Second Appeal No. 1639 of 1910, the allegation in the plaint is that the minor's mother, who was managing the family affairs and maintained the children, utilised the money obtained by sale of certain mortgage rights belonging to the minor for the discharge of proper family debts and for other family necessity. The Court of first instance and the Appellate Court, relying on the authority of Pathummabi v. Vittil Ummachabi (1); Durgozi Row v. Fakeer Sahib (2) and Abdul Khadar v. Chidambaram Chettiar (3), have held in both the suits that the sales, even if the allegations as to the purpose be true, would not be binding on the minor in Muhammadan Law.

The decisions of the Courts on the question how far the mother or other near relative of a minor, who is not a guardian of the minor according to Muhammadan Law with respect to his property but has the custody and up-bringing of the minor, is authorised to alienate the minor's property are more or less conflicting. There are two decisions of the Privy Council bearing on the question which must be noted first; one of these is reported as Kali Dutt Jha v. Abdul Ali (4). That was the case of a guardian, and, with respect to his power, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee approved of the statement of the law as contained in Macnaghten's Principles of Muhammadan Law, Chapter VIII, clause 14, but they upheld the transaction in question in that case on the ground that there was dispute as to the title of the minor to the property and, therefore, the rule laid down in Macnaghten did not apply, and also on the ground that the sale was for the benefit of the minor. In Mata Din v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali (5), the sale was effected by the minor's mother who had custody of the minor's person and was in possession of his property, in order to pay certain debts binding on the minor and their Lordships held that a person, by de facto guardianship, may assume important responsibilities towards the minor though he cannot clothe himself with legal power to deal with the estate. They declared the sale not binding although it was made for the payment of an ancestral debt as it was not made of necessity, nor was beneficial to the minor inasmuch as the facts of the case showed that the sale of the property was unnecessary. It is not clear what their Lordships' decision would have been if the sale was made of necessity or was for the benefit of the minor. Another question was raised before the Judicial Committee in that case, whether a sale under the circumstances found there would be void or voidable. Their Lordships refrained from deciding that question. It should also be noted that one of the members of the Committee, Mr. Syed Ameer Ali, observed with some emphasis during the argument that there was no warrant in the Muhammadan Law for sale by the mother of her minor sons' immoveable property, even for necessity, but though much weight must, of course, be attached to this observation, it cannot be said that the decision of their Lordships was based on such broad and general grounds. In this Court it was held, in Pathummabi v. Vittil Ummachabi (1), that the principles of Hindu Law relating to alienation by a Hindu widow are not applicable to alienations by the mother of a Muhammadan minor, although the sale for the purpose of paying ancestral debts by a co-heir in possession of all the effects of the deceased, if bona fide, would be binding on the other co-heirs. The principle of this ruling has been followed in Durgoji Row v. Fakeer Sahib (2); Abdul Khadar v. Chidambarasam Chettiar (3). In none of these cases was any definite opinion expressed on the general question, how far an alienation by a de facto guardian which is made for neccessity or for the benefit of the minor is valid. Nor was this question decided in Second Appeal No. 1443 of 1907, an unreported judgment of Mr. Justice Benson and one of us. It was held in Thattoli Kothiian Aliyumma v. Kunhammad (6) that a guardian's powers in respect of the immoveable property of the ward are very restricted in Muhammadan Law and urgent necessity or clear benefit to the ward must be shown before an alienation by the guardian could be upheld. In laying down this proposition, the learned Judge followed the Privy Council ruling already mentioned [Kali Dutt Jha v. Abdul Ali (4)] and certain decisions of the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts.

In the Calcutta High Court the law seems to be in a somewhat uncertain state. The earlier decisions confined within very narrow limits the power of the de facto or de jure guardian in dealing with a Muhammadan minor's property, while in more recent decisions this view has undregone considerable modification. In Musammat Bulshun v. Musammat Doollin (7), a sale by a guardian of a minor's property was held not to be permitted by the Muhammadan Law except for urgent necessity. In Bhutnath Dey v. Ahmed Hosain (8), a mortgage by a person purporting to act as a guardian was held to be void as it was not shown that the money raised by the mortgage and utilised for paying arrears of rent could not have been raised otherwise than by mortgaging the minor's property. Similarly, in Moyna Bibi v. Banku Bihar (9), Justices Rampini and Brett set aside a sale by a de facto guardian because such a person has no authority to deal with the minor's estate, doubting whether even if the sale was for the manifest advantage of the minor it, could be upheld under the Muhammadan Law. In Mafazzal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (10), however, Rampini and Woodroffe, JJ., decided that a sale for urgent necessity in order to pay the debts due by the deceased and for the maintenance of the minor was valid in Muhammadan Law. Mr. Jutsice Woodroffe was inclined to place the validity of such a transaction also on grounds of justice, equity and good conscience inasmuch as it was not made out that it was prohibited by Muhammadan Law. It should be noted that the learned Judges distinguished the decision in Moyna Bibi v. Banku Bihar (9) on the ground that in that case it was not shown that the transaction was for the benefit of the minor. Chief Justice Maclean and Mr. Justice Caspersz, in a case reported as Ram Charan Sanyal v. Anukul Chandra Acharyya (11), followed the ruling of Rampini and Woodroffe, JJ., in the last mentioned case and held that a sale by the mother as de facto guardian of her minor son is good and valid if it is found to have been made bona fide for the benefit of the minor. Referring to the case in Moyna Bibi v. Banku Bihar (9), they point out that the effect of that ruling is considerably modified by the ruling in Mafazzal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (10). In fact, however, they have laid down a broader proposition than what forms the basis of Rampini and Woodrofe, JJ.'s judgment in Mafazzal Hosain v. Basid Sheikh (10), placing the ruling on general grounds of justice, equity and good conscience. But, with all deference to the learned Judges, there can be no doubt that the question must be determined in accordance with the provisions of Muhammadan Law. Moreover, it is difficult to see how a man who chooses to buy a minor's property from a person who has no power to deal with it, however bona fide his action may have been, can invoke any principles of justice and good conscience to support the transaction itself, though, no doubt, such considerations may be a good ground for the Court refusing to render any help to the minor when he seeks to recover the property except on the condition of his restituting whatever benefit he has derived from the transaction. The other principle indicated in the decision of Rampini and Woodroffe, JJ. and in other rulings, viz., that in Muhammadan Law urgent necessity and benefit of the minor is a justifying cause of such a transaction, though the person who acted on behalf of the minor had no legal authority of a guardian, seems to be a more intelligible ground and requires careful consideration.

In the Allahabad High Court, in Hasan Ali v. Mehdi Husain (12), a sale by the mother was upheld on the ground that it was made for necessary purposes, namely, the payment of ancestral debts and the charge of maintaining the minor. In Hamir Singh v. Musammat Zakia (13), a Full Bench of that Court held that a decree duly obtained against one heir, who is in possession of the entire estate of the deceased, is binding on the minor. In Sitaram v. Amir Begam (14), there are certain general observations of Mr. Justice Mahmood to the effect that the powers of alienation, such as those enjoyed by a Hindu widow, are not known to the Muhammadan law, a Muhammadan widow being merely a co-heir with her children and has not the authority of a guardian with respect to their property: and Chief Justice Edge, in Nizam-ud-din Shah v. Anandi Prasad (15), set aside a mortgage executed by a Muhammadan minor's uncle, which was apparently not created for necessity on the ground that he had no power of alienation over the property.

Two decisions of the Bombay High Court were brought to our notice, reported as Baba v. Shivappa (16) and Hurbai v. Hiraiee Buramjee Shanja (17). In the first case, a sale by the mother professing to act as guardian of her minor son was set aside although it was made to discharge certain debts of the minor's deceased ancestor; and in the other case, a mortagage by the mother was declared not to be binding as it was made neither for absolute necessity nor for the benefit of the minor. Both the rulings enunciated the general principle that a mother, not a legal guardian, cannot bind the estate of the minor by any act of hers.

In this state of the rulings, it becomes necessary to examine the text-books on Muhammadan Law to ascertain how a person who is not a legal guardian, but is in fact acting as guardian, is regarded in Muhammadan Law.

We may take it that the powers of such a person cannot be greater than those of a guardian recognised by the law. The question is, whether they have any power at all to bind the minor's estate or rather, in what circumstances, if any, dealings of a de facto guardian with the minor's estate will be upheld.

It seems to us to be quite clear from the authoritative pronouncement of Muhammadan jurists, as well as upon principles of Muhammadan jurisprudance, that while the general rule is that the dealings with such a person do not ipso facto bind the minor, the law recognises certain exceptions to this rule. The exceptions are mainly based on the general principle of Muhammadan Jurisprudence that necessity is a valid ground for relaxing a strict rule of law and the application of the principle in cases where a minor has no legally appointed guardian seems to be well recognised. The author of Hedaya (see Hamilton's Translation, Grady's Edition), in laying down that a person who has the protection of an orphan may lawfully take possession of a gift made to the orphan in order to make the gift valid, observes:— "Acts in regard to infant orphans are of three descriptions. (I) Acts of guardianship, such as contracting an infant in marriage, or selling or buying goods for him (here we may point out that the proper translation of the word in the original, namely, * * * which is translated as 'goods' should be animals for breeding purposes), a power which belongs solely to the walee or natural guardian whom the law has constituted the infant's substitute in those points. (II) Acts arising from the wants of an infant such as buying or selling for him on occasions of need. Strictly speaking, the translation of the passage in the original Hedaya ought to be purchase of what the minor cannot do without and sale of it or hiring a nurse for him for the like, which power belongs to the maintainer of the infant, whether he be the brother, uncle or (in the case of a fondling) the mooltakit or the mother, provided, she be maintainer of the infant; and as these are empowered with respect to such acts, the walee or natural guardian is also empowered with respect to them in a still superior degree, nor is it requisite with respect to the guardian that the infant be in his immediate protection. (III) Acts which are purely advantageous to the minor, such as accepting presents or gifts and keeping them for him, a power which may be exercised either by a mooltakit, brother or uncle and also by the infant himself, provided he be possessed of discretion, the intention being only to open a door to the infant receiving benefactions of an advantageous nature to the infant, therefore, he is empowered in regard to these acts, provided he be discreet, or any person under whose protection he may happen to be." It should be observed that the sale and purchase, mentioned as belonging to the first category of enumerated transactions, which are stated to be within the power of lawful guardian but not of a person who is not such a guardian but has in fact the custody of the minor, are in the nature of transactions entered into for purposes of profit. This text, however, be it also noted here, does not deal with the question, under what conditions such sales and purchases by the guardian will be binding on the minor. Stated in plain language, the law according to the Hedaya is this: a person who is in actual charge of the property and person of the minors is empowered to do acts which are of imperative necessity having regard to the wants of the infant and acts which by their nature are necessarily advantageous to the infants; such acts are not confined to dealings with any particular form of property of the minor so far as it can be gathered from the language of Hedaya and the other text-books which will be presently noticed and the very principle upon which the validity of such acts is based precludes the idea of any such limitation. The rule enunciated by the Hedaya is accepted as good law by other jurists of the Hanafi School. Imam Zellai, in his well-known commentary on Kanz, viz., Tabinul Haquors, Vol. VI, at page 34, in the Chapter on Sales, also states the law in similar terms. He says that the power which the law allows to be exercised over a minor is of three kinds; (1) What must be advantageous to the minor and such power exists in all who have charge of the minor, whether guardians or not,; for example, the acceptance of a gift or alms, and such acts can be done by the infant himself if he is of the age of discretion: (2) what is absolutely injurious, such as divorcing the minor's wife or emancipating a slave: such authority is not recognised in any one; (3) what is midway between the two, that is, what may be advantageous or hurtful to the minor, such as sale or hiring of property for the purpose of profit; such power is possessed only by the father, the grandfather and their executors, whether they have the actual custody of the minor or not, because their power to deal in this manner with the minor's property is by reason of their guardianship. Therefore, it is not a necessary condition of the exercise of such power by them that the minor should be in their actual custody. This is how it is stated in Alkafi:—The hiring of a house belongs to the first category; and (4) giving the minor in marriage, this is a power possessed by all asha, or paternal kindred as it is usually translated, and also by zavilarham or distant kindred in the absence of paternal kindred. None others possess this power. In Majmaul Anhar, which is a commentary of Multakal Abhar, it is pointed out that according to Ashshafai and Malik, a de facto guardian can buy or sell for the minor only with the permission of the Judge but the author does not doubt that the Hanafi law, which is the law governing the parties in this suit, is, as stated in the text of Altagwa, in the same terms as in the Hedaya and Kanz. It is not necessary to refer to the Arabic text-books on this point, as there seems to be no difference of opinion so far as the Hanafi jurists are concerned and all the text-books repeat the statement of the law as cited above. The principle of the rule is also forcibly illustrated in the provisions of Muhammadan Law regarding the powers of an executor in connection with the question whether, where more than one executor have been appointed by the testator, one of them can act singly. The general rule is that one of the two joint executors cannot act alone. But an exception is recognised in such matters as are of urgent necessity and purely for the benefit of the estate. Thus, in the Hedaya (see Hamilton's Translation, Grady's Edition, Vol. IV, Ch. 7, page 699), the matters in which one of two executors can act singly are thus enumerated:—Payments of funeral charges or for purchasing victuals or cloths for an infant, the hiring of a nurse, the selling of goods of a perishable nature, preserving the property of the deceased. In all such matters, one of the joint executors is permitted to act alone on two grounds, urgent necessity or clear benefit and advantage to the estate. We may also point out here that, according to the general principles of Muhammadan Law, the sale of a minor's property by an unauthorised guardian, even if it was not made for a valid cause, i.e., of necessity, or in circumstances which would make the transaction purely advantageous to the minor, would, strictly speaking, be neither void nor voidable in the ordinary sense of the terms. An alienation of the minor's property without any justifying cause is regarded as maugat or dependent, that is to say, its validity will depend upon the minor accepting the transaction on attaining majority. It cannot be said to be inoperative until it is avoided nor can it be said to be invalid unless and until it is ratified. It is a transaction in a state of suspense; its validity or invalidity is only determined by the minor adopting or not adopting it after he has attained majority, though the effect of his decision will relate back to the date of inception of the transaction. If he decides to adopt the transaction, it becomes valid from the inception; otherwise it will be treated as void and of no effect from the very commencement. Some Hanafi Jurists are inclined to classify such transactions under the head of Sa'ibs or legally correct transactions on the ground that the subject-matter dealt with being fit for the purpose and the parties to the transaction being majors, the contract is validly constituted and that is all that is required to make a transaction Sa'ib or legally correct, though it will not be operative until the minor on whose behalf the transaction was entered into notifies his assent on attaining majority. But the question as to the exact nomenclature applied to such a transaction in Muhammadan Jurisprudence is of no substantial importance. All that we are concerned with is its legal effect. (See Baharurraiq, Vol. VI, p. 78). The law, as regards the effect of dealings with a minor's property by a de facto guardian otherwise than in a case of absolute necessity or clear advantage to the minor, is but a corrolary of the general rule to sales by a person professing to deal with another's property but without having legal authority to do so, i.e., by a Feroli as he is technically called; such sales generally are treated as malikuf or dependent. The subject is discussed in Hedaya, Vol. VI, Chapter X, Section of Feroolez Bez or the sale of the property of another without his consent; Grady's Edition of Hamilton, page 296, Baillie on the Muhammadan Law of Sale, pp. 218, 220 and 221, 249, Kazi Khan, Vol. II, p 172(original) Talimulhaqu, Vol. IV, p. 44 (original), Radd-ulmuhtar, original, Vol IV, p. 110; Bahrurraiq (original) Vol. V, pp. 75 and 76; Almajallah (original), p. 53; Fatwai Alamgiri original II, Calcutta edition, page 235. The result of the above discussion is, that according to Muhammadan Jurists, in case of urgent and imperative necessity such as those mentioned, the de facto guardian can alienate the property of the minor, no distinction being made between moveable and immoveable property. Also such a person can do acts on behalf of the minor which from their nature must necessarily be beneficial to the minor. In either class of cases, there seems to be no substantial difference between the power of such a person who has assumed the duties of a guardian without lawful authority and of a legal guardian. But there are other powers which a lawful guardian can exercise which are not within the competence of other persons. It may be observed here that an act by which the wants of the minor are met, must, to that extent, be also advantageous to the minor, and that is apparently why some of the text-writers regard acts done of necessity in the same light, as acts which are purely for the benefit of the minor. (See Fathul Mubeen, Vol III, Chapter on Abomination, section Sale, page 410).

It should be pointed out that, in Macnaghten's Precedents of Muhammadan

Law, it is stated in case 6, at page 171, that a mother, who assumed the guardianship of her minor son, cannot exercise any right over the property of the minor. This, as a statement of the general rule, is undoubtedly correct, but leading authorities, as we have shown, recognize certain exceptions to this rule. The case cited by Macnaghten in which a mother sells a small portion of her minor son's property for resuming the estate and recovers judgment in a suit would seem to be a case of absolute necessity and pure advantage to the minor. Such a sale is, however, stated to be totally illegal and inadmissible. This would seem to be in conflict with the case in Chapter VII, page 305, where it is laid down that, where the uncle of a minor jointly interested in the property sells both his own share and the share of the minor, such a sale may be valid under certain circumstances, such as when the minor's share is sold for double its value, or where there is no means of supporting him without recourse to sale of his property, or where the land is in danger of being lost, or with a view to save the minor's property from usurpation or when some similar emergency has arisen. At all events, according to the authoritative Hanafi Jurists, there can be little doubt that the law is as we have stated it and the general trend of decisions of the Courts seems to be substantially to the same effect.

In the present cases, the sales were clearly not of the character which would be upheld on the ground either of their being made of necessity or being by their nature necessarily beneficial to the minor. The sale, which is in question in S. A. No. 1416, was really made to find money for the expenses of the minor's sister's marriage and neither this nor the grounds on which the sale, which is in dispute in S. A. No. 1639, was made, are justified nor the discharge of family debts and other family purposes, can be said to be justifying causes according to the rule of Muhammadan Law.

In Appeal No. 1416, an objection was taken to the decree which directs the division of the shop in as many as 54 shares on the ground that it does not make any provision for the sale of shop in case such a division cannot be conveniently effected. But the objection was not taken in the lower Courts and we are not prepared to hold that such an order, if found to be necessary, cannot subsquently be made by the Court which passed the decree. See Bai Hirakore v. Trikamdas(18). In Appeal No. 1639, it was argued by the Pleader for the applicant that the suit was barred on two grounds, firstly, even if the findings of the Court be accepted that Jamil Mohamad Rular, the 10th defendant, attained majority in January 1906, the suit which was instituted on the 3rd January 1909 was time-barred. We find that the verification of the plaint is dated the 23rd of December 1908, but the plaintiff did not apparently file the plaint until 4th January 1909.

If the Court re-opened after the Christmas vacation on the 4th January 1909, the suit would be within time and if the objection now taken had been taken in the lower Courts, this apparently would have been the answer. The question not having been raised before the lower Courts and being one involving an investigation of facts, cannot be entertained for the first time in second appeal. The second ground on which it is contended that the suit is barred is that although the 10th defendant could avail himself of three years' time after attainment of majority, the plaintiff, as his assignee, cannot be allowed such extension of time. This question again was not raised in the lower Courts and, in the circumstances which are stated in paragraphs 15 and 16 of the judgment of the District Munsif in Suit No. 248, we do not think we should allow the objection to be raised for the first time here. The result is both the appeals are dismissed with costs.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

April 12, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Mookerjee and

RASIK LAL ROY AND OTHERS— DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Plaint—Verificaiton, improper—Trial on merits, effect of—Second appeal—Objection as to defect in verification—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 53, 578.

A plaint was verified by the first three plaintiffs, who were sui juris, for themselves, and on behalf of the mother of the other three plaintiffs, who were minors, by her son who was the first plaintiff. The first plaintiff had no authority from the mother of the infants to verify the plaint on their behalf. The first Court held that the plaint had not been properly verified, but yet proceeded to try the suit on the merits and dismissed it. That decision was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs contended in second appeal that, so far as the minor plaintiffs were concerned, the plaint ought to have been taken off the file as it was not properly verified:

Held, that the proper procedure here was not to frame any issue but to decide the preliminary question, whether the plaint was properly verified, first, for then the plaintiff would have had an opportunity of curing the defect; that, therefore, there was no substance in the plaintiffs' contention; and further, that the defect, if any, was completely cured by section 578 of the Code of 1882.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs in an action for recovery of possession of immoveable property, which has been concurrently dismissed by the Courts below. It is plain that the decision on the merits cannot be successfully challenged in second appeal. But it has been ingeniously argued by the learned Vakil for the appellants that no decision on the merits ought to have been given by either of the Courts below inasmnch as the defendants successfully urged before the Court of first instance that the plaint had not been properly verified. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the case of Baroda Prosad Bose v. Girija Nath Roy Chowdhury (1). In our opinion, this position cannot be supported.

There were six plaintiffs in the suit, of whom three were sui juris and the rest were infants on whose behalf their mother acted as next friend. The plaint was verified by the first three plaintiffs for themselves, and on behalf of the mother of the other three plaintiffs, by her son who was the first plaintiff. Objection was taken by the defendants that the plaint had not been properly verified, as it transpired that the first plaintiff had no authority from the mother of the infants to verify the plaint on their behalf. The Court of first instance, therefore, held that the plaint had not been properly verified, but proceeded to try the suit on the merits. As we have already stated, the case of the plaintiffs was negatived on the merits and that decision has been affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. The plaintiffs now contend that as in respect of the three infants, the plaint was not properly verified, so far as they were concerned, the plaint ought to have been taken off the file. There is obviously no substance in this contention. No doubt, it was held, in the case of Baroda Prosad Bose v. Girija Nath Roy Chowdhury (1), that the provisions of section 53 of the Code of 1882 for amendment of the plaint, when it has not been signed and verified as recognised by section 51, cannot be put into operation after the issues have been framed. It is clear, however, that the proper procedure to follow in cases of this description, where the verification is challenged, is not to frame any issue but to decide the preliminary question first. In fact, it is obvious from the definition of the term 'issue' as given in section 146 of the Code of 1882 that no issue, that is material proposition of fact or law affirmed by one party and denied by the other, can arise till there is a proper plaint. Consequently, as pointed out in the case of Port Canning and Land Improvement Company v. Dharanidhar Sardar (2), the Court should first decide the preliminary objection to the validity of the plaint. But the learned Vakil for the appellant has argued that if issues have been, as a matter of fact, raised, the power of the Court to act under section 53 completely ceases. This contention is inconsistent with the decision in Ganga Sahai v. Muhammad Ali Jan Khan (3), where it was explained that the mere fact that issues have been raised does not stand in the way of the return of the plaint by the Court for amendment under section 53. It is the duty of the Court to return the plaint before the settlement of issues and the mere fact that issues have been improperly settled, cannot deprive the plaintiff of the opportunity which he might otherwise have had and ought to have had of curing the defect in the plaint. If, therefore, the proper procedure had been followed in this case, the position would have been that the plaintiffs might have got an opportunity to verify the plaint properly, and, if it had been so amended, there is no question that it could not have been rejected as laid down in the cases of Fateh Chand v. Mansab Rai (4) and Munshi Fakir Chand v. Mahesh Das (5). There is, therefore, no substance in the objection taken on behalf of the appellants. We may further add that, as laid down by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Basdeo v. John Smidt (6), the defect, if any, has been completely cured by the provisions of section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. See also Shama Soonduree v. Rahim-ud-deen (7).

(1) 2 C. L. J. 11.
(2) 9 C. W. N. 608.

The result is that the decree made by the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1783 OF 1911.

April 29, 1911.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar.

In re ARMUGAM PILLAY—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT.

Practice—Procedure—Trial of suit—Summoned witnesses of party absent—Application by party for issue of warrants to witnesses—Another application for adjournment of case—Order granting adjournment—Failure of Court to pass orders on application for warrants—Applicant's failure to secure attendance of witnesses at adjourned hearing—Refusal of Court to grant further adjournment—Landlord and tenant—Suit to eject tenant—Denial of landlord's title—Absence of notice to quit.

In a suit to eject a tenant, the latter denied plaintiff's title and the allegation in the plaint that the title was denied before suit was not traversed in the written statement. Nor did the defendant raise the plea in his statement of the want or inadequacy of notice, but took it only in the grounds of appeal:

Held, that the defendant was not entitled to rely on the plea of want of notice in bar of plaintiff's claim.

Kathijakutti Umma v. Kuthrussa, 20 M. L. J. 415; 5 Ind. Cas. 924; 7 M. L. T. 173; (1910) M. W. N. 158, referred to.

At the first hearing of the suit, the defendant represented to Court that his summoned witnesses were absent and applied for the issue of warrants against them and also for adjournment. The Court adjourned the hearing but did not pass orders on the application for warrants. The defendant took no steps to secure the attendance of his witnesses at the adjourned hearing, when he again prayed for a further adjournment which was refused:

Held, that the adjournment was rightly refused.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tinnevelly, in A. S. No. 420 of 1910, preferred against the decree of the District Munsif of Tuticorin in O. S. No. 396 of 1909.

FACTS.—The following judgment of the District Munsif sets forth the facts of the case:—

This is a suit to establish plaintiff's title to the suit property;

(2). To declare that the sale to 1st defendant by 3rd defendant on behalf of 2nd defendant is not valid and binding on the plaintiff and to cancel the sale;

(3). To recover the suit property from the 1st defendant with past profits Rs. 13-8 together with future profits and costs of suit.

The plaintiff states that the property originally belonged to one Parasakthi Ammal, his mother's sister, that she conveyed the same to plaintiff by a registered Will on 25th September 1897 as she had no issue, that the plaintiff has been enjoying it ever since, that he let out the house to 1st defendant for rent at Re. 0-12-0 per mensem, that the 1st defendant has paid the rent till March 1908 and defaulted to pay subsequent rent on a frivolous ground that he is in possession of the house in virtue of a sale to him by the 3rd defendant, who executed it on behalf of his daughter, the 2nd defendant, that as she is living with her husband and as she is major, she had no necessity to sell the property through her father, the 3rd defendant and that the sale is not valid and binding upon the plaintiff.

In re ARMUGAM PILLAY.

2. First defendant pleads that the plaint property was not the property of Kuppammal, that she did not enjoy it in her right, that she had no money of her own to purchase it, that it was purchased in her name by her husband benami, that the possession was not given by the plaintiff to him (1st defendant), and that the plaint property was sold to this defendant and Pichiammal on 21st July 1908 for Rs. 200 by 3rd defendant and it is now in his possession.

3. Issues.

(1). Whether the plaint property was the property of Kuppammal or of her husband Subbu Pillai?

(2) Whether the 1st defendant was let into possession by the plaintiff as alleged by him? If so, what is the amount of rent that plaintiff would be entitled to?

(3) To what relief, if any, is plaintiff entitled ?

4. First defendant's Pleader says he has no instructions and 1st defendant is absent.

Plaintiff examined two witnesses and proved his claim. Exhibit B is the sale-deed to Kuppammal alias Parasakthi Ammal by her father. This shows that the plaint properties are her absolute property. She has bequeathed them in favour of the plaintiff by Exhibit A.

Issues 1 and 2 are found for the plaintiff.

5. Judgment for plaintiff as prayed for with costs and subsequent rent at the rate originally stipulated for.

The 1st defendant appealed to the District Court on the following grounds:—

1. The decree of the lower Court is contrary to law and against the weight of evidence.

2. The evidence adduced by the plaintiff in respect of his case is insufficient and cannot support the lower Court's decree.

3. The lower Court failed to give sufficient time to appellant and this disabled him from producing his evidence.

4. The notice upon which the plaintiff relies is not in accordance with the provisions of law nor is the notice in evidence,

5. The decree, so far as it directs that the plaintiff do recover the same from 1st defendant, cannot be supported.

The District Judge delivered the following judgment:—

The main objection to the lower Court's decision is that it should have adjourned on 1st defendant's application First Appeal No. 1063, dated 30th June 1910 and that it should have issued warrant for the witness, for whom it was asked for therein. In fact an adjournment was given to 8th July 1910, and that should have been sufficient for the execution of the processes asked for, warrant and two summonses, all against persons in Tuticorin itself. The lower Court, no doubt, did not pass orders specifically on the application for warrant but only on that for adjournment with which it complied. Whether the former was pressed is not clear There is, however, other reasons available in support of the lower Court's eventual decision. On 8th July 1910, when the suit was disposed of, 1st defendant's Pleader repeated his application for adjournment and, on its being refused, said that he had no instructions. First defendant was absent. I cannot see how he had any right to expect that the case would be postponed without such progress as was possible being made with it, or that such evidence as plaintiff or he could produce at once would not be taken. If he had taken part in the trial, so far as it could be proceeded with, and then asked for an adjournment, the persent plea might merit consideration. As the facts stand, the lower Court was justified in proceeding to trial and disposal, and this ground of appeal must fail.

3. On the merits, plaintiff's evidence transferred the burden of proof and alleged was unrebutted. The ground of appeal regarding insufficiency of notice represents nothing in 1st defendant's written statement and is unsustainable in view of the decision in Kathiya Kutti Umma v. Kuthusa (1). This portion of the appeal fails also.

4. The lower Court's decision is confirmed with costs.

First defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair. for the Appellant.

This second appal coming on for Orders as to admission under the provisions of order XLI, rule 11 of Act V of 1908, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—There are no grounds for interference in second appeal in this case. The first point argued is that the District

Munsif ought to have granted a further adjournment of the suit on the 8th July 1910. It does not appear what steps the 1st defendant had taken prior to that date after the previous adjournment and what steps he wanted to take by obtaining the adjournment. In fact no sworn statement appears in the papers before me which would justify my holding that the Munsif acted wrongly in refusing the adjournment. The 1st defendant did not appear after the adjournment was refused. With reference to the question of notice; no plea was raised in the written statement, probably because the defendant considered it untenable inasmuch as he had, according to the allegation in the plaint, not traversed in the written statement, denied the plaintiff's title prior to the institution of the suit. Even now the appellant does not say what notice he got and how he says it was insufficient. The decision in Kathiya Kutti Umma v. Kathussa (1) seems also to apply in the circumstances of this case. I reject the second appeal.

Appeal rejected.

Patni tenure—Creation of tenure—Two estates comprised in one tenure—Power given by kabulyats to bring tenure to sale under Regulation VIII of 1819, legality of—Suit for declaration that tenure liable to sale under Regulation—Party—Collector not made party to suit—Suit improperly framed—No declaration should be made.

A patni tenure comprised two estates bearing separate touji numbers. By the kabulyat, express power was given to the landlord in default of payment of any part of the rent due for any year to bring the tenure to sale under Regulation VIII of 1819. The landlord made two applications to the Collector to sell the tenure under the Regulation. Both were refused, and on the second occasion the Collector's action was upheld by the Board of Revenue. The landlord brought a suit for rent and interest and a declaration of his right to have the tenure sold under the Regulation. The Collector was not made a party to the suit:

Held, that the Collector ought to have been made a party and that the suit not being properly framed, no declaration should be made.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Rampur Boalia, dated December 20th, 1909.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, Maharajah Manindra Chandra Nandi, is the proprietor of two estates bearing separate numbers (Nos. 136-1 and 137) on the revenue roll of the Rajshahye District. The tenure to which the suit relates comprises these estates and was created in the year 1251 (1844) as a patni taluk, the rent reserved being Rs. 27,001 per annum. The kabulyat, dated 26th Ashar 1251, executed by the original holder, is recited and its terms are embodied, in the kabulyat dated 16th Sraban 1279 (1872), executed in favour of the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest by the father of defendants Nos. 1-3, Babu Mohini Mohan Roy, who had purchased the tenure in 1871. By these documents express power is given to the landlord in default of payment of any part of the rent due for any year to bring the tenure to sale under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819. It appears that the plaintiff made two applications to the Collector to sell the tenure under the Regulation, one in respect of the rent due for the year 1313 and the other in respect of the rent due for the following year. Both applications were refused and on the second occasion, the matter having been brought before the Board of Revenue, the Collector's action was upheld by an order of the Board dated the 17th September 1908.

The plaintiff brought the present suit, firstly, to recover the rent and cesses due for the years 1313, 1314 and 1315 with interest, the claim being laid at Rs. 1,25,174 odd and a further claim being made for interest during the pendency of the suit and up to the date of payment, and, secondly, to obtain a declaration of his right to have the tenure sold under Regulation VIII of 1819. The defendants Nos 1-4 were impleaded as being the heirs of Babu Mohini Mohan Roy. It has been found, however, that on a partition of the property left by the latter, the tenure in question was attached to the defendant

No. 1. The defendant No. 5 is Receiver to the estate of that defendant.

In the lower Court, the plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant No. 1 for the sum claimed with interest after decree at the rate of six per centum per annum. Apparently, by inadvertence the learned Sub-Judge omitted to allow interest during suit. He also rejected the prayer for a declaration. This appeal preferred by the plaintiff is confined to these two matters. The defendants Nos. 1 and 5 were not represented before us and we have not had the advantage of hearing argument on their behalf.

As to interest during suit, it should have been allowed at the same rate as interest after suit. The decree of the Sub-Judge will be modified accordingly.

The question whether the declaration sought for should have been made is more difficult. The Sub-Judge refused to make the declaration not only on the grounds suggested by the order of the Board of Revenue to which we have referred but also on the further ground that the declaration is unnecessary for the purposes of the suit as a suit for arrears of rent and in the proper exercise of judicial discretion ought not to be made. In connection with the Board's order, the Pleader for the plaintiff (Babu Ram Charan Mitter) very properly drew our attention to note 31 on page 77 of the Board's Manual of the Revenue and the Patni Sale Laws (Edition 1906). The view, which the Board appear to have taken in such cases as the present, is that a tenure covering more than one revenue estate is not a patni tenure within the meaning of Regulation VIII of 1819 and that the zemindar or landlord has, therefore, no right to have recourse to that Regulation for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of it. We do not find that this view is based upon any express prohibition in, or any particular provision of, the Regulation. The reasoning, so far as it can be gathered from the material before us, is of a general character, to the effect that it is of the essence of a patni tenure that it should be carved out of one estate, that the Regulation does not contemplate patni tenures embracing more than one estate, and that to admit the existence of such patni tenures would lead to complications and is contrary to public policy or the policy of the revenue laws. These propositions are not self evident and, as at present advised, we are not prepared to say that they correctly interpret the law. At the same time, we feel that the matter is one of some importance and that it is inconvenient that we should be called upon to arrive at a decision upon it in a proceeding in which the Revenue authorities have had no opportunity of being heard. The issue lies between the plaintiff and the Collector who refused to sell the tenure at the plaintiff's instance rather than between the plaintiff and his tenants, and so far as any revenue or fiscal question is involved, the Collector would not be bound by any decree which might be made in this suit to which he is not a party and of which he has had no notice. In other words, for the present purpose the suit has not been properly framed. It is within the discretion of the Court to refuse to make a declaratory decree and, in the circumstances, while we do not accept all his reasons, we agree on the whole with the Subordinate Judge that no declaration should be made. We come to that conclusion without expressing any final opinion on the question whether the plaintiff has or has not the right which he claims.

The result is that the appeal partly succeeds and partly fails. The plaintiff is entitled to costs in proportion to his success. The defendants not having appeared will have no costs.

Appeal partly allowed.

Malabar Tarwad—Possession, suit for, by a member—Subsistence of mortgages on property—Whether plaintiff should first sue to set aside mortgages—Right of junior members of a Hindu family—Redemption of mortgage, suit for—Valuation—Jurisdiction.

The proper valuation of a suit to redeem a mortgage is the amount of the mortgage or mortgages admitted by the plaintiff to be binding on him and not the mortgages set up by the defendant. The question of jurisdiction has to be decided on the averments in the plaint and not with reference to the pleas of the defendant.

Chandu v. Kombi, 9 M. 208, referred to.

A junior member of a Hindu family or of a Malabar Tarwad need not, in the first instance, sue to set aside all alienations made by the manager or Karnavan before suing to recover possession of the property alienated by him. He may sue to recover possession on his title and will be entitled to recover such possession if the defendant does not prove the validity and binding effect of the alienation on the plaintiff.

Where a junior member of a Tarwad sued to redeem a mortgage, ignoring the subsequent mortgages created on the property by the Karnavan as not binding on him:

Held, that the suit was maintainable and that the plaintiff was not bound to sue to set aside the later mortgages.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Malabar, in A. S. No. 301 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Quilandy, in O. S. No. 400 of 1900.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. R. Subramanya Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, the trustee of a Devasom, sues to redeem a mortgage of Rs. 50 created by the plaintiff's Karnavan on the 21st January 1891. It is admitted, that, on the 21st February 1905, the same Karnavan mortgaged the lands included in the mortgage instrument aforesaid with certain other lands for Rs. 1,650. On the same day, he also mortgaged the equity of redemption for Rs. 1,500. It is conceded this mortgage for Rs. 1,650 was a consolidation of two previous mortgages, one for Rs. 900, dated 25th March 1890 and the other for Rs. 700 on the 13th February 1890 and the mortgage for Rs. 900 has been already declared to be binding on the property. The District Judge held that the mortgage of Rs. 50 is now no longer in force as it is merged in the mortgage for Rs. 1,650 and that the plaintiff is bound to sue to set aside the mortgages of the 21st February 1905 and as a suit to redeem on those mortgages or set them aside will not lie in the Munsif's Court, he dismissed the suit. The question in dispute is concluded by authority. The proper valuation of a suit to redeem a mortgage is the amount of the mortgage or mortgages admitted by the plaintiff to be binding on him, not the mortgages set up by the defendant. Otherwise, if the plaintiff files this suit in a Court of higher jurisdiction and succeeds in proving that the mortgages binding on him are less than Rs. 2,500, his plaint may be returned to him to be filed in the Munsif's Court. In a suit of this nature, the question of jurisdiction has to be decided upon the averment in the plaint, not with reference to the pleas of the defendant, see Chandu v. Kombi(1), which is directly in point. It was then argued that the plaintiff is bound to set aside the subsequent mortgages created by his Karnavan and the present suit treated as one to set them aside is not maintainable as three years from the date of the mortgages had expired before its institution and as the amount of the mortgages exceeds the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court. It may be doubted whether the plaintiff is in the position of a junior member of a Tarwad seeking to set aside an alienation by his Karnavan. He is a trustee impeaching the conduct of his predecessor-in-office. But treating the case as that of a member of a Tarwad seeking to recover possession of properties mortgaged by his Karnavan, we do not think it is necessary for him to set aside the mortgages granted by the Karnavan. The same contention was put forward and disallowed in Chandu v. Kombi(1) by Kernan and Muthusami Ayyar, JJ., and by Shephard and Weir, JJ., in Unni v. Kunchi Ammal (2), following the judgment in an earlier case S. A. No. 270 of 1880 by Turner, C. J., and Kernan, J., [see the judgment extracted in Unni v. Kunchi Amma (2)]. The property of the Tarwad is vested in the members of the Tarwad. The Karnavan can alienate the property only when the interests of the Tarwad require such alienation. When he makes, therefore, an alienation which is not binding on the other members, it is unnecessary for the other members to set them aside. They may sue to recover possession on their title and they would be entitled to recover such possession if the defendant does not prove the validity and binding effect of the alienation on the other members of the Tarwad. The case may be different where the plaintiffs themselves have executed the instrument under which the defendant claims. Certain cases were relied upon by the respondent's Pleader in which it was held that a minor was bound to set aside an alienation by his guardian. The case of a guardian and a minor is governed by a separate Article in the Limitation Act. Those cases may be distinguished on the ground that in such cases a guardian executes the instrument solely on behalf of a minor and if it is not binding on the minor, it ceases to have any legal effect, whereas an alienation by a Karnavan, though not binding on the other members of a family, may continue to be binding on the Karnavan. We, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct the appeal to be restored to the file and disposed of in accordance with law. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiff is the zemindar of Jalantra and the defendant is the Maharajah of Vizianagram. By an instrument Exhibit C, date dthe 20th June 1887, the plaintiff mortgaged his zemindari to the defendant with possession for the sum of Rs. 2,60,000. The present suit is brought by the plaintiff to redeem this mortgage. The defendant denies the plaintiff's right to redeem, because, on the 10th November in the same year, the plaintiff's equity of redemption was brought to sale in execution for a money decree (obtained as No. 27 of 1886 by a third party) and was purchased by the defendant. The plaintiff's reply to this is that the defendant was guilty of fraudulent misconduct in connection with the sale and that he, therefore, must be held to have purchased, and to hold the equity of redemption for the plaintiff's benefit. He relies on the principle enunciated, in section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882). The District Judge found that the defendant was not guilty of any fraud, misrepresentation or misconduct in connection with the sale and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Plaintiff appeals against the decree but we have no doubt that the suit was rightly dismissed. In 1885, the plaintiff executed a usufructuary mortgage (Exhibit D) of his estate for Rs. 1,35,000 in favour of certain persons who are referred to as "the nalam people." In the following year, he executed two other mortgages (Exhibits XII and XV) on the estate for Rs. 10,000 each in favour of other person, and he had various other debts also. In April 1887, the zemindari was put up for sale in execution of a decree obtained by Kamasam, but the money was paid and the sale stayed. Meantime another creditor Krishnama who held a money-decree against the plaintiff for some Rs. 13,000 in Original Suit No. 27 of 1886 applied for execution of his decree. After some negotiations, evidenced by Exhibits A, G and B in May and June, it was arranged between the plaintiff and the defendant that the defendant should obtain a transfer of the three mortgages, Exhibits D, XII and XV that were outstanding on the estate and that the plaintiff should execute a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant for Rs. 2,60,000. In pursuance of this agreement, Exhibit C was executed on 20th June. It recites the above mortgage debts and some other specific debts which are to be paid by the defendant out of the Rs. 2,60,000 and then adds "out of the balance, the remaining other debts due by me should be discharged as the said amount is sufficient for it; the vouchers, etc., thereof should be retained with your Highness for proof of record, and your Highness should cause to be given to me a list of the other defendants and decrees, etc., that may be so discharged. After discharging the debts as mentioned above, should there be any surplus, your Highness should obtain receipt from me and pay that money to me."

The Rs. 2,60,000 was applied by the defendant in the manner required by Exhibit C, but it was argued for the plaintiff that the defendant improperly charged the plaintiff with a sum of Rs. 20,000 and frittered away the rest of the balance in his hands in making importunities with the deliberate intention of having Krishnama's decree debt undischarged and thus bringing the estate to sale in satisfaction of it. The sum of Rs. 20,000 was a lump sum which had to be paid to the 'nalam people' in order to induce them to transfer their mortgage (Exhibit D) to the defendant. The District Judge has shown clearly that it was greatly to the advantage of the plaintiff, even at the cost of this Rs. 20,000, to exchange the extremely onerous terms of Exhibit D for the very moderate terms in Exhibit C. Although the sum of Rs. 20,000 is not specifically named in Exhibit C, yet a reference to its terms and to the preceding agreement (Exhibit B) of the 5th June, shows that the parties intended that, the cost of getting transfer from the 'nalam people' should be treated as chargeable to the plaintiff. That it should be so treated is obviously fair, and the plaintiff, on the 1st July when Exhibit C was being registered, signed the receipts acknowledging payments on account of the mortgage to the extent of Rs. 2,32,000 in which the sum of Rs. 20,000 is included. The receipt does not show details and the plaintiff says that he did not know the details until he received the account Exhibit E on the 19th July, but the District Judge gave good reasons for not believing his evidence on this point. The plaintiff, in fact, took no exception to the Rs. 20,000 until nearly a month afterwards in his letter (Exhibit L). We accept the conclusions of the District Judge that the payment of Rs. 20,000 to the 'nalam' mortgagees was a reasonable one and that it was rightly and properly debited against the sum advanced under Exhibit C, and that this was done with knowledge and consent, implied if not express, of the plaintiff. As to the other payments made by the defendant out of the mortgage-money (Rs. 2,60,000), every one of them was made to, or at the request generally in writing, of the plaintiff himself. It will be observed that, in Exhibit C, though certain debts are specifically named, the discharge of Krishnama's decree debt is not so named nor is the debt described generally to discharge decree debts in preference to other debts. We, therefore, agree with the Judge that it is unreasonable to conclude that the defendant frittered away the balance under Exhibit C in order to prevent Krishnama's debt being discharged. We do not find that the defendant or his agent was guilty of any fraud or misconduct in the application of the money in defendant's hands under the mortgage, Exhibit C. The matter, however, that was most strongly urged before us on the plaintiff's behalf was that the defendant's agent, Jagannatha Rao (plaintiff's 1st witness), made deceitful representation to the plaintiff that he would advance him money to pay up Krishnamma's debt, but then suddenly left him in the lurch at the last moment and so prevented him from discharging the debt with the result that the equity of redemption was sold by the Court and was purchased by the defendant. It will be remembered that the sale was fixed for the 10th November 1887. The plaintiff relies on the telegram (Exhibit O) sent to him by Jaganatha Rao on the 26th October in which he offers to get plaintiff a loan of Rs. 80,000 at 12 annas interest. Plaintiff admits that he took no notice of this offer, but went on with certain negotiations which were in progress with one Gopal Rao, to raise money to meet this and other debts. He even went so far as to have the agreement (Exhibit S) with Gopal Rao engrossed on a stamp paper and to send for the Registrar to have the document registered. When the Registrar came, however, he refused to register the document. It was apparently soon after this, that the letter, Exhibit J, on which the plaintiff mainly relies, was sent. The letter is not dated, but the person to whom it was sent, (plaintiff's 8th witness) who is a servant of the plaintiff, fixes the date as about the 5th of November. It was written by Kamesam (plaintiff's 2nd witness), an Ameen, who had managed the Jalantra zemindari for the Jalantra zemindar as well as for the 'nalam' mortgagees and then for the defendant. It runs:—"Jagannatha Rao Pantulu sent a telegram just now that he would give Rs. 50,000 at Re. 0-14 0 interest; somehow or other cause Mr. Gopal Rao's transaction to be stopped and come at early dawn." It is contended for the plaintiff that when this letter was shown to him, he concluded that the defendant's agent was in earnest about lending money and so broke off his negotiations with Gopal Rao. We do not believe this. Kamesam, the sender of Exhibit G, says that he wrote it of his own motion and out of regard for his old master, the Jalantra zemindar, owing to the onerous terms required by Gopal Rao. There is nothing to show that this is untrue. It is also alleged that Jaganatha Rao came to plaintiff on 7th and remained until the 9th and there left, having promised plaintiff to go to Berhampore next day and stop the sale. We agree with the District Judge that the plaintiff has not established this case. Jaganatha Rao entirely denies that he made any such representations as alleged, and the evidence on the plaintiff's side to prove them is untrustworthy and inadequate, while the inferences from the documents and from the proved facts negative the contention. We have already seen that plaintiff took no notice whatever of Exhibit O in which Jaganatha Rao offered to get in a large loan at a reasonable rate of interest. He did not even reply to it. The reason seems to be that he distrusted him. He had already, on the 13th September (Exhibit 76), given the Collector notice that he intended to file a civil suit to set aside Exhibit C. In these circumstances, he would hardly care to bind his estate by a further mortgage to the defendant. So three days after he got this offer from the defendant's agent, we find the plaintiff going on with his negotiations with Gopal Rao and even sending for the Registrar to register the document. The terms required by Gopal Rao were, however, very onerous. Interest was to be charged at Rs. 2½ per cent. The mortgage money could not be paid off in less than five years, but the mortgagee could claim payment in full at any time on 3 months' notice. Moreover, "commission" of Rs. 10,000 was to be paid to Gopal Rao and also a village and a house were to be given to him. It is no wonder that the plaintiff, unwilling at the last to bind himself by such terms, refused to see the Registrar when he came for the registration of the document. Moreover, plaintiff himself says that up to the very day of the sale he had "strong hopes" that he would be able to get the money he required on reasonable terms from his own father-in-law, who was the zemindar of Parlakemedy and we find that the Collector, on the 3rd October, was inquiring into the value of the zemindari (Exhibit III H) with a view to purchase it for the Parlakemedy zemindar. In these circumstances, it is most unlikely that plaintiff could have been induced by the receipt of an undated scrap of paper from a subordinate like Kamesam, which plaintiff never even took the trouble to see, to break off his negotiations with Gopal Rao and rely exclusively on the oral promise of the defendant's agent to pay up the decree debt. Moreover, we, in fact, find that he did not do so. In Exhibit L, which is dated the 6th November, (i.e., after the date appended to Exhibit 9), we find the plaintiff petitioning the Court to adjourn the sale, and stating that Jaganatha Rao (defendant's agent) intended to purchase the zemindari at the sale but that he (plaintiff) would raise the money by a mortgage to the Parlakemedy zemindar and would pay off the debt if the sale should be adjourned. This petition was dismissed and, on the 1st November, that is, on the very day of the sale, we find him sending a telegram (Exhibit Y) again asking that the sale be postponed for two days, and his Vakil presents another petition Exhibit II protesting against the impending sale, and saying that plaintiff would raise the money somewhere if time should be given. In none of the papers, is there the slightest suggestion that the defendant or his agent has promised to pay the decree debt or advance the money for it to plaintiff, but had deceitfully withdrawn at the last moment. The fact seems to be, as found by the District Judge, that the plaintiff's omission to accept Gopal Rao's offer was not due to any false promise made by the defendant or his agent, but to the "strong hopes" which he had of getting the money from his own father-in-law, the Parlakemedy zemindar and to the feeling that, somehow or other, it would be all right and that he would be able to get another adjournment or make some temporary arrangement as he, in fact, tried to do by sending a pro-note to Gopal Rao on the night of the 9th November. Gopal Rao, in his evidence, states that he would have paid up Krishnama's debt even on the day of sale if plaintiff had executed the document proposed by him. There is no reason to hold that the defendant or his agent acted fraudulently or dishonestly or made false representations in connection with the sale. This finding on the facts is sufficient to show that the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed. The appellant's Vakil relies on section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act and contends that the fact that defendant was a mortgagee, even without fraud or misrepresentation or misconduct on his part, renders the sale to him invalid. We cannot accept the contention in the present case. It was not the defendant, but Krishnama, who attached and brought the property to sale. Section 99 has no application nor is there any such general principle as the appellant's Vakil suggests. Sesha Ayyar v. Krishna Ayyangar(1); Ikkotha v. Chakkiamma (2); Raja Kishendatt Ram v. Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan (3); Khiaraj Mal v. Daim (4). Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) also has no application, for the simple reason that it applies only to cases where the mortgagee (or other qualified owner) of any property has availed himself of his position as mortgagee and has thereby gained an advantage in derogation of the rights of other persons. It is impossible to see how the defendant in this case can be said to have availed himself of his position as a mortgagee in derogation of the plaintiff's rights.

We concur with the findings of the District Judge on all the issues.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 677 OF 1911.

June 18, 1912.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

DWARKA PERSHAD—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SHEOAMBAR KOERI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Usufructuary—Mortgagor to redeem on the last day of Jeth in a particular year—Notice—Mortgagee entitled to notice of redemption.

A usufructuary mortgage contained a covenant that the mortgagor would redeem the mortgage on the last day of Jeth of the year 1317 Fasli corresponding with the 22nd of June 1910. On the 17th of June 1910, the mortgagor deposited in Court the full amount of the mortgage-money under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. The notice of deposit, however, could not be issued from the Court before 27th of June 1910:

Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to a notice of the deposit either on or before the 22nd of June 1910, and that, under the circumstances, he was entitled to maintain his possession and cultivate the land for two more harvests and was not liable to damages.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Jaunpur, dated 3rd April 1911.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ahmed Kareem, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for redemption of a mortgage on a certain fixed-rate tenancy, the mortgagees having obtained possession under the terms of the mortgage. There is no question now before me as to the plaintiff's right to redeem or the amount to be paid for redemption.

The only question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to damages claimed by him on the ground that he was wrongfully kept out of possession by the mortgagees during the year 1318 Fasli, after he had made a valid tender of the entire amount due. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 14-12 as damages, calculating the same to be the gross rental of the land in suit for that year. The learned District Judge, on an appeal by the defendant, has dismissed the claim for profits, remarking that, under the circumstances of the case, it did not appear to him that there was anything in law to compel the defendants to pay damages. Coming to this Court in second appeal, the plaintiff contends that he is entitled to damages either from the date of deposit, or from such date as shall be found by the Court to be the date on which the mortgagor did all that could be done by him to enable the mortgagee to take the money deposited by him out of Court. The appellant relies upon the provisions of sections 83, 84 and 76 clause (i) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). Those provisions are in his favour unless it can be shown that there existed between the parties a contract of notice of such a nature as to bring the case within the proviso to section 84 of the aforesaid Act. Now, the contract of mortgage in this case contains a very stringent provision which is nothing more or less than that the mortgagee will not be bound to accept payment unless such payment is made or tendered on one particular day in the year, namely, the last day in the month of Jeth. This is not an unusual covenant in mortgages of this sort, and it is a covenant as to notice and a very stringent one. It proceeds on the assumption that there will be no standing crops on the land on the last day of Jeth and that the mortgagee will not require formal notice of the mortgagor's intention to redeem provided payment is made or tendered on that particular day. Of course, if the mortgagee chooses to go out of his way to bring the land under cultivation during the month of Jeth, he takes the risk of his own covenant operating unfavourably to him, but as a general rule cultivation would not have commenced in that month. The effect of the covenant is really this, that if the mortgagor intimates his intention to redeem or makes a tender of the money to the mortgagee at any time before the last day of Jeth in any given year, the mortgagee is entitled to continue in possession, that is to say, he is entitled to notice until the last day of Jeth next following but if on that date he does not accept the tender and deliver up possession, he makes this refusal at his own risk and subjects himself to the provisions of those sections on which the appellant now relies in this case. On the terms of the covenant between the parties, there is only one possible case in which the mortgagees would be entitled to no notice at all, and that would be in the case of a payment made or tendered precisely on the last day of Jeth. In any other case, the effect of the contract between the parties is to entitle the mortgagees to notice from the date on which the payment was offered to them until the last day of Jeth next following. The length of notice would, therefore, vary according to the date on which the mortgagor tendered payment, or intimated to the mortgagees his intention of paying but the covenant is nevertheless essentially one as to notice. Now, in the present case it has been found by the lower Appellate Court that it is not proved that any communication took place between the parties privately or otherwise than through the agency of the Court, which would amount to a tender of the mortgage-debt by the plaintiff to the defendants or even an intimation by the plaintiff of his intention to pay the mortgage-debt on the last day of the month of Jeth next following. I have, therefore, only to consider what took place in Court. The last day of Jeth of the year 1317 Fasli fell on the 22nd of June 1910. On the 17th of June 1910, the plaintiff made in Court a tender of the full amount of the mortgage-debt as required by section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. Before the mortgagees could possibly be in a position to take this money out of Court, it is obvious that they must be informed of its having been deposited. It is possible that, under normal circumstances, a written notice issued by the Court might have been served on the mortgagees on or before the 22nd of June 1910, and that all the requirements of the contract between the parties might have been duly satisfied. The plaintiff, however, was unfortunate. The presiding officer of the Court concerned was absent on the 17th of June 1910 and the matter was only laid before him for orders on the 27th of June 1910, when writtten notice was ordered to be issued on the defendants-mortgagees. It is thus clear that the defendants did not receive and could not have received any intimation of the fact that the money due to them under the mortgage was lying in deposit to their credit, and might be taken out of Court by them at their pleasure, until the last day of Jeth of 1317 Fasli was gone by. The defence actually put forward by them against this claim for damages is that they received no intimation before the last day of Jeth 1317 Fasli of the plaintiff's intention to redeem and, therefore, brought the land under cultivation. I agree with the learned District Judge that this was, under the circumstances, a valid defence. The mortgagees had, under the terms of their covenant, a right to decline to accept payment, by taking the money deposited out of Court, until the last day of Jeth next following, the date on which they received intimation that the money was lying in deposit. They were, therefore, entitled to maintain their possession and cultivate the land for two more harvests, that is the khanif and rabi of 1318 Fasli. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CIVIL APPEAL No. 15 OF 1907.
April 25, 1912.
Present:—Sir Ralph Benson, Judge and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar.
THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF GANJAM—APPELLANT
versus
KANNAPALLI VENCATARATNAMMAH AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Deed, construction of—Grant of inam village, "besides poramboke"—Meaning of "besides poramboke"—Right of grantee to channels and tanks in the village.

Where an inam title-deed contained the following recital, "I acknowledge your title to a personal inam consisting of the right to the Government Revenne of land claimed to be * * * * * acres situated in the village of L." and the words 'besides poramboke' were inserted in the margin:

Held, (1) that the insertion of the words 'besides poramboke' need not necessarily be taken to be an acknowledgment by the Government of the inamdar's title to all kinds of poramboke and that the effect to be given to those words must depend on the evidence in each case and the circumstances attending the grant.

Papala Narayanasawmi v. Pensalani Kunniappa, (1912) 1 M. W. N. 496; 14 Ind. Cas. 261 and Ambalavana Pandara v. Secretary of State, 28 M. 539; 15 M. L. J. 251, referred to.

(2) that where the channels or tanks in the village grant had no connection with a Government source of irrigation and were not controlled by the Government to any appreciable extent, the effect of the said words was to invest the property in the channels and tanks in the inamdar.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Ganjam, dated 20th August 1906 in O. S. No. 47 of 1905.

This appeal coming on for hearing on 10th and 13th February 1911, the Court made the following ORDER:—To enable us to decide this appeal satisfactorily, we consider it desireable to allow the parties to adduce further evidence on the following point (1) what, if anything, passed to the grantee under Exhibit XX under the words 'besides poramboke' and whether she obtained a right to the channels conveying water to the tanks irrigating the lands of the Lakkamdiddi village or to those tanks themselves.

The lower Court has not dealt with this point in its judgment, but appears to have assumed that the Government did not reserve the channels and tanks at the time of the inam settlement.

We request the District Judge to take the additional evidence that the parties may adduce and to submit the same together with his opinion on the effect of such evidence within one month after the re-opening of the District Court after the recess.

In pursuance of the above order, the District Judge of Ganjam submitted the following

FINDING:—In obedience to the High Court's order of 13th February 1911, I have taken the additional evidence adduced by the parties and I submit the same along with my following opinion on the effect of such evidence on the point (1) what, if anything, passed to the grantee under Exhibit 20 under the words "besides poramboke" and whether she obtained a right to the channels conveying water to the tanks irrigating the lands of the Lakkamdiddi village or to those tanks themselves.

S. N. DAR, B. A. LL. B.
Vakil High Court,
SRINAGAR (Kashmir).

2. The additional evidence consists of the documents G. to N. on plaintiff's side and of the documents 21-(a), 22-(h) on defendant's side as also the oral evidence of one additional witness on defendant's side. The oral evidence of the witness is of very little use. He speaks to the payment of water-cess by him and his co-inamdars to the Government for water supplied to raise second crops on the excess area over the mamool area cultivated in the village of Gokayavalasa. He also speaks to the inamdars of the neighbouring village of Satyavaram being under a similar liability. The liability of these two villages for water-cess on excess area for second crop cultivation depends on the ownership of the water flowing through the Komarthy branch of the Polaki main channel and the ownership of the beds of the Komarthy branch channel and the Polaki main channel. The witness clearly admits in his evidence that the Government D. P. W. is in charge of the Polaki and Komarthy channels, that is, that the inamdars have no possession or control over those channels and the beds of those channels. Exhibits 22 series are accounts of water cess collected from the inamdars in those two villages. These accounts also might be set aside as of little value in coming to a conclusion on the question whether the inamdars of the plaint inam village of Lakkamdiddi are entitled to the beds of the plaint Yellamanchilli channel and its sub-channels so far as those beds lie within the limits of the inam village of Lakkamdiddi. The Yellamanchilli channel branches off from the Garebula Gedda hill-stream, whereas the Komarthi channel branches from the Government Polaki channel and irrigates Government villages also. This jungle-stream (Garebula Gedda) in its upper portion (above the surplus weir) is used only for the irrigation of zemin and inam lands.

3. I shall, therefore, consider the other additional evidence taken in the case and comment upon it in the light of the other facts of the case. The plaint village of Lakkamdiddi was one of the villages in the Chicacole haveli. Before 1766, the haveli belonged to the Mogul Emperor. The Emperor issued a Firman granting the management of the Circars to the East India Company. The East India Company leased the haveli lands in Chicacole in 1767 to one Sitaramraz, the brother of Vaziaramraz, the then zemindar of Vizianagram (see District Manual, page 212). This Sitaramaraz seems to have at once granted the plaint village of Lakkamdiddi within the Chicacole haveli as an Agraharam inam to a Brahmin, named, Kannepalli Ramavadhanulu for subsistence. The village consists of no vrittis because it was Yekabhoga Agrahar or an Agrahar that was in sole possession of a single individual up to the 8th February 1861, on which date Kannepalli Venkata Narasoo (the holder of the inam) died leaving a childless young widow by name Kannepalli Venkataratnamma (see recitals in Exhibit 16).

4. In 1802, the District of Ganjam consisted of four havelis (including the Chicacole haveli) and 21 zemindaris. The haveli lands were resumed by the Government from the temporary lessees and sold in lots in 1803 and 1804 to the highest bidders on permanent settlement. Twenty proprietary estates were formed by the sale of the Chicacole haveli lands in 1803. One of them is Jarjangi and another is Urlam. The plaint Agraharam village of Lakkamdiddi is within the proprietary estate of Jarjangi (or Jarjangi Gangaram). The proprietors of these twenty estates were entitled to get only Kattubadi or a fixed low rent from the inamdars of the inam villages included in their proprietary estates, though they were, of course, full proprietors of the ordinary zeroyati lands in their estates. The Government also seems to have reserved to themselves the "reversionary right in the inam tenures included in these proprietary estates when the Government granted sanads to the proprietors for their respective estates" (see page 149 of Exhibit N). The Kattubadi rent paid by the inamdar to the proprietor is also called Shrotriem when paid by Brahmin inamdars for their Agraharam inams. The words Agraharam and Shrotriem inam seem to be used in the same sense. In the inam Settlement papers (Exhibit N page 330), Shrotriem is stated to be "a general term for all favourably assessed villages held by Brahmins"; see also Wilson's Glossary, 1855 Edition, page 11). Again at page 154 of Exhibit N, Agraharams are treated under "whole village inam" and are said to mean villages "granted to Brahmins". There can be no doubt that Lakkamdiddi was an Ekbhog Agraharam "whole village inam" enjoyed by Brahmin inamdars and has been paying a favourable Kattubadi or Jodi of Rs. 212-8 to the Jarjangi Estate proprietors from 1803 up to date, the inam having been created about 1½ centuries ago. (There seems to have been an account called the gudikat account prepared in Fasli 1226 of the inam lands included in the proprietary estates). Besides the major whole village inams (or sometimes, carved out of such inams), there are minor inams which relate to grants of defined extents of lands as contrasted with grants of entire villages. (See the distinction between whole village inams and minor inams in para. 29 page 155 of Exhibit N).

5. The rights of Government over the lands of these inam villages seem not to have been ever defined unambiguously. A reversionary right to resume the inams on failure of direct lineal heirs seems to have been always asserted by Government. In Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (1), Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar, J., says at page 345: "According to the theory of the common law of the land,.....succession".....(to inams grants) "is, or at any rate is supposed to be, limited to the undivided brothers and to the direct lineal heirs, including a daughter's son, of the last incumbent, as also his widow and failing them, to the direct lineal heirs of the original grantee. And under that law, it is, or it is supposed to be, competent for Government to resume personal inams, when the reversion falls in.....by reason of the extinction of direct lineal heirs of the body of the original grantee"....The question as to whether the Crown has such prerogative reversionary right in the case of hereditary personal inams has never been subjected to the test of a judicial decision, for the simple reason that claims in respect of personal inams, which have not been enfranchised, are exempt from the cognizance of Civil Courts and can be adjudicated upon only by the Governor in Council or other Executive Authority.....The Government, of course, was not bound to exercise its right of resumption and it was open to it to exercise it only partially and surrender its reversionary rights. The declared policy of Government, when the Inam Commissioner was appointed in 1859 and rules framed for his guidance, was to waive its right of resumption and enfranchise personal inams and convert them into ordinary heritable property and forego its reversionary right in consideration of the holder of the inam agreeing to pay a quit rent, the rates of which varied with reference to the value and prospect of the reversionary claim of the Government in each case."

6. In 1854, Jarjangi was the 6th of the 28 proprietary estates then existing within the Ganjam District. The Government wished to give up their reversionary interests in the whole village inams and similar inams (excluding service inams) situated within the limits of the zemindaris and of the proprietary estates in the Ganjam District after fixing a permanent quit-rent based on the value of the cultivated lands in the inam village, Porambokes as such yielding no income and having no market value. The Deputy Collector, Sudarsana Row, as Inam Commissioner, was directed to fix such values, that is, to find out the net income of the villages. He prepared the register Exhibit 16 for the plaint inam village of Lakkamdiddi. The total area of the village was taken from the old gudikat account of Fasli 1226 as 266⅔ graces or 533 acres (2 graces making one acre). The 533 acres were classified as follows:—

	Acres.
Poramboke consisting of tanks, village sites, paths, channels, burial grounds, pasture lands, etc.	116
Personal and service inams (which were not settled then) ...	34
Waste ...	8
Remaining cultivated and cultivable lands ...	375
(249 acres cultivated wet, 13 acres cultivated tope, and 113 acres cultivated dry).

7. The whole village was an Ekbhog inam (as already said) till the middle of the 19th century (though a few minor personal and service inams aggregating 34 acres had been created). Then, 1/10th of the village area seems to have passed to one Ravi Janaki Ramayya by a Court auction sale. The 375 acres was afterwards enjoyed by Kannepalli Venkatarathnamma and by this Ravi Janakiramayya in the proportion of 9/10th and 1/10th accordingly, that is, about 340 acres by Venkataratnamma and 35 acres by Janaki Ramayya.

8. The Inam Deputy Collector recomended that in the "particulars to be entered in the title deeds" (or deeds) to be issued for the village, 340 acres should be entered in the name of Kannepalli Venkatarathnamma and 35 acres in the name of Janaki Ramayya (see Exhibit No. 16). Venkataratnamma was to pay Rs. 297 as quit-rent at the highest rate of $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ because Government's reversionary rights would fall in as soon as she died, while Ravi Janaki Ramayya was charged a quit-rent of only 9 Rupees (at $\frac{1}{8}$th rate as Government's reversionary expectancy was very remote).

9. Two separate title deeds were issued accordingly to K. Venkataratnamma and Janaki Ramayya in 1867. Neither of these is forthcoming now. Venkataratnamma lost her title-deed of '67 and Ravi Janaki Ramayya is dead and his grandson, who was summoned to produce his title-deed of '67, could not or would not produce it. The Settlement proceedings began in 1859. The order confirming the Inam Deputy Collector's recommendations was passed in February 1865 and the title deeds were issued in February 1867. The form of grants then obtaining in respect of whole village inam title deeds appears from Exhibits K, K 7, K-10, K-11, L 1, 2/(a) and 2/1 (b). The form in the 1st page first sets out the grantee's present title (which is acknowledged in para. 1 of the 1st page by the Governor in Council) and is then followed by the Government's proposals (in paras. 3 and 4) to give up their reversionary rights in consideration of a quit rent. Then on the 2nd page, the conversion into free-hold in favour of the grantee is entered as the grantee had agreed to pay the quit-rent demanded. It is the entry on the 2nd page that extinguishes the Government's reversionary claims. The form in page 1 paras. 1 to 3 is as follows:—

1. On behalf of the Governor in Council of Madras, I acknowledge your title to the Shrotriem village of—claimed to be of—acres of dry land and—acres of wet land besides poramboke.

2. This inam is subject to a Jodi or quit-rent of—and is hereditary but it is not otherwise transferable; and in the event of failure of lineal heirs, it will lapse to the estate.

3. On your agreeing to pay an annual quit-rent of—inclusive of the Jodi already charged on the land as above said, your inam tenure will be converted into a permanent free-hold.

10. I take it that Kannepalli Venkataratnamma got her title deed in February 1867 in this form for 9/10ths of the area of the Shrotriem whole village inam of Lakkamdiddi (340 acres of dry and wet lands "Besides Poramboke") and Ravi Janaki got a similar title deed for 35 acres "Besides Poramboke". It has to be observed that in the case of minor or subsidiary inams, the title deeds issued about that time do not contain the manuscript additional words "Besides Poramboke". (See Exhibits K8, K9, K12, K13 which relate to small defined extents of 1 acre, 6 acres, 2 acres and 7 1/100 of an acre which had been granted as inam).

11. As I said before, the major inam title-deeds issued between 1863 and 1867 were in the form of Exhibit K1, K7, etc. Exhibit 21 (a) and Exhibit 21 (b) filed on defendant's side also contain the additional words "Besides Poramboke" as they are also grants of the whole Shrotriem Villages of Gokayavalasa and Satyavaram and not minor grants of small areas within a whole village. In December 1867, the Madras Government evidently wanted to introduce a bill in respect of the form of title-deeds for the various descriptions of Inams (see pages 86 to 94 of Exhibit N showing the old forms). The Inam Commissioner then suggested (in January 1868) that in para. 1 in the form of title deeds, the words "claimed to be of" should be substituted by the words "claimed to consist of the right of receiving the rent or tax payable to Government on." In July 1868, the Advocate-General thought that the Government of Madras had no right to issue deeds in its own name and suggested (among other changes) that in para. 1, the words "acting on behalf of the Secretary of State" should be introduced after the words "the Governor in Council of Madras" and that all title-deeds should be re-issued with the necessary alteration (See pages 82 to 302 of Exhibit N which deal with these matters). At last, Act VIII of 1869 was passed giving effect to the views of the Inam Commissioner in his letter of January 1868; and all title deeds subsequently issued omitted the use of words which might enable all kinds of inamdars to claim proprietary rights in the soil which they "would not otherwise possess" and it made clear that only the rights of Government were intended to be granted and that no proprietary rights in the soil (which did not already exist in any particular inamdar) were intended to be newly given.

12. Kannapalli Venkatarathnamma evidently wanted about 1898 a renewal of her lost title deed of 1867 to 9/10th, of the area of the Lakkimdiddi Major inam village. Exhibit 20 was issued to her accordingly on 20th June 1898. This title deed was issued in a form which varies from the old form of 1864 to 1867 in the following particulars. (a) The words "acting on behalf of the Secretary of State" have been inserted in para. 1 as per the opinion of Mr. John Pruce Norton (Advocate-General in 1868). (b) In the same para 1, instead of the bare words "right to land claimed to be 108.38 acres of dry, 218 53 acres of wet and 13 acres of garden besides Pormaboke and situated in the Jarjangi proprietary Shrotriem portion of the village of Lakkamdiddi," the words "right to the Government Revenue on land &c." have been substituted. In other respects, the title deed follows the old form including the insertion of the manuscript words "besides Porambokes" after the mention of the area of dry, wet and garden lands.

13. I think that there can be no reasonable doubt that the words "besides Poramboke" were intended to have the same meaning and implication in the renewed title-deed of 1898 as they had in the old title-deed of 1867. What there was the meaning of the words in the old form of title-deeds relating to major inams (See Exhibits K-1, K-7, K-10, K-11, 21-(a) and 21-(b) which all contain the words "besides Poramboke"), read specially in the light of the fact that these manuscript words were not inserted in minor inam title-deeds like Exhibits K-8, K-9, K-12, and K-13? One very significant entry appears in Exhibit K-2 (the Lukulam Register prepared in 1862). The Inam Commissioner first mentions the Gudikat Extent of the lands in Lukulam for purposes of valuation. He then deducts the extent of Poramboke in favor of the inamdar. [Poramboke consisting of (a) the bed of the river Vamsadhara, (b) path, (c) pasture land, (d) burial grounds, (e) channels, (f) sandy deserts, (g) sandy heaps in the bed of the river, (h) tanks and (i) village sites]. Then, he makes this important note: "The Agraharamdars have nothing to do with the bed of the river, that is, he denies their title to the items which I have marked (a) and (f) out of the Poramboke items but it does not say that the Agraharamdars have no right to the other Poramboke areas items (b) to (f), (h) and (i) which include the "channels" (e) and "tanks" (h).

14 My predecessor, Mr. Ayling, (now Mr. Justice Ayling), in his judgment in the suit has taken it as clear "that the Government did not reserve the channels and tanks" in the village (there are 6 tanks supplied by the channels) "at the time of the inam Settlement." In the Urlam Case which seems to me to be a weaker case for the plaintiff than the present case [see the judgment reported in Kundukuri v. Secretary of State(2)]. His Lordship, Mr. Justice Miller, (with whom Munro, J., concurred) remarks as follows:—"We have not been shown anything in the evidence to indicate that any channels or works in the haveli lands were so reserved" by Government at the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1803 and 1804 with the proprietors purchasers "nor does it seem probable that the Government would at that time have deemed it necessary to reserve a channel." * * "On the whole, the evidence seems to me to support the contention that the beds of the channels were not reserved by the Government at the Permanent Settlement but passed with the lands to the respective purchasers in so far as they lay within the limits of the land purchased by each to the same extent and in the same way as the tank beds, village sides and other Poramboke lands." In the present case, it cannot be contended that the Government have any rights in the house sites in the village and it seems to me that they have none in the channel beds and tanks also. If the Jarjangi proprietor purchased the whole Estate of Jarjangi including the channel beds and tank beds, etc., the Government lost all right in the channel beds even if the inamdars were not the owners under their original grant of 1767 which was confirmed in 1867. The Government must have intended by the insertion of the words "Besides Poramboke" in the major inam title deeds issued between 1863 and 1867 to acknowledge the title of the inamdars to the Poramboke lands along with the cultivated dry, wet and garden lands. The change of the form of the title-deed, by which change, the title only to the Government Revenue payable on the cultivated lands (instead of the title to the lands themselves) was acknowledged, retained the words "Besides Poramboke" (just after mentioning the area of the cultivated lands). This made the whole sentence in the new form to read rather awkwardly (if not ungramatically) but the intention of the Government to acknowledge the inamdar's title (in the case where the original inam grant was of a whole village) to the Poramboke lands in the village seems to me reasonably clear. The insertion of the words cannot mean that only the Goverment right to revenue from Poramboke land is given to the inamdar, because Poramboke lands (like channel beds, etc.,) are not assessed to revenue. Why the words "besides Poramboke" were not inserted in the printed forms of the title-deeds themselves and why they are added in every title-deed in manuscript both in the old and new forms is not indicated by the evidence. I am invited by the learned Government Vakil (Mr. W. L. Venkataramiah) to interpret the words "besides Poramboke" as meaning excluding Poramboke or "the Government reserving to itself the Poramboke". I can only remark that such an interpretation is, to say the least, entirely far-fetched. In Webster's Dictionary, two of the meanings of "besides" are given as "over and above" and "in addition to" and that is the meaning in ordinary parlance and not the meaning of exclusion or reservation. The Inam Commissioner, in preparing the register for whole inam villages, excluded service inams, minor personal inams and Poramboke from the area of a whole inam village in order to ascertain the income derivable from the village. Then, when title-deeds were issued to the whole village inamdars, the service inams area and the minor personal inams area were alone deducted from the grant (because they belonged to other than the whole village inamdars, and those lands had to be settled with those minor inamdars separately) but the Poramboke area was recognised in the major inamdar's title-deeds as belonging to them by the addition of the words "Besides Poramboke," that is, that the Poramboke area was to be included in the area, the title to which in the inamdars was acknowledged by Government.

15. In the result, my opinion is that by the words "Besides Poramboke", the Government acknowledged the title of the inamdars of the whole inam village to the channel beds and tanks in dispute.

This appeal coming on for hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge (Mr. Sadasiva Aiyar) has submitted the fresh evidence adduced both by the plaintiff and the Government and has expressed his opinion that by the words 'besides Poramboke' in the inam title deed Exhibit XX, given to the inamdar proprietor of the village, the Government acknowledged the title of the inamdar to the channel beds and tanks in dispute. The claim of the Government to water cess cannot be maintained unless the water irrigating the village flows directly or indirectly from any river, stream, channel, tank or work belonging to or constructed by Government. According to the former District Judge's finding, the Garebula Gedda, which irrigates the lands in the village takes its rise in the Parlakimedi zemindari and does not pass through any Government lands before it irrigates the plaint village, and the Government has not exercised any control over the Gedda. But it was contended, at the former hearing of the appeal, that although there is no evidence that the channel or stream and the tanks irrigating the village belong to Government, it must be presumed that the ownership thereof is vested in it by virtue of section 2, of Act III of 1905 (Madras Land Encroachments Act) which enacts (we quote only the necessary portion of the section) that "a bed of the sea and all harbours and creeks below high water mark and of rivers, streams, nalas, lakes and tanks and all canals and watercourses and all standing and flowing water and all lands wherever situated, save in so far as the same are the property of any zemindar, poligar, mittadar, jaghirdar, shrotriemdar, or inamdar or any person claiming through or holding under any of them, are and are hereby declared to be the property of Government, except as may be otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, subject always to all rights of way and other public rights and to the natural and easement rights of other land-owners and to all customary rights legally subsisting." It is contended for the plaintiff, the inamdar, that the section does not really alter the law as previously understood and the channels passing through the whole inam village cannot be presumed to be the property of the Government. We consider it desirable to call for a finding on the question whether, by the grant of the inam to the inamdar, the title to the channel irrigating the village belonged to the inamdar.

The original inam title deed which was granted by the Government in 1867 has not been produced. It is stated to have been destroyed. A fresh title deed which was granted in 1898 has been produced and is marked as Exhibit XX. An extract from the inam register, Exhibit XVI, has also been produced. It appears from it that the inam was originally granted in 1767 to one Kanna Pillai Ramavadhanulu as personal hereditary inam by Sitaramraz. Sitaramraz was the brother of Viziaramraz, the then zemindar of Vizianagaram. He was a renter under the East India Company which had obtained a firman from the Moghal Emperor granting the management of the Sircars to the Company. The village in question was included in the Chicacole haveli in 1802. The Government sold its haveli lands in 1803-04 to the highest bidder on Permanent Settlement and 20 proprietary estates were formed by the sale of the Chicacole haveli. The village in question is situated in one of the zemindaries so formed named Jarjangi. The inam village was excluded from the Permanent Settlement of the Jargengi estate. The proprietor of the estate was entitled only to get the Kattupadi fixed on the village, the right of resumption of the inam being reserved by the Government. The Government subsequently recognised the inam granted by Sitaramraz and settled the inam with the inamdars and granted a patta to them. The inam register, Exhibit XVI, does not show that the Government intended to exclude any portion of the inam which had been originally granted in 1767. Exhibit XVI shows the mode in which the quit-rent payable for the village was fixed; the Poramboke, consisting of channels, tanks, village sites, pattis, burial ground, hills as well as jungle and pasture lands together amounting to 116 acres, was excluded from the total acreage of the village. The assessment was fixed on the cultivated dry and wet lands. Exhibit XX, the inam patta of 1898, shows that the Government acknowledged the title of the inamdar to the whole village. It states:—"I acknowledge your title to a personal inam consisting of the right to the Government revenue of land claimed to be 108·38 acres of dry, 21·53 of wet and 13 acres of garden land situated in the Jarjengi Proprietary Shrotriam portion of the village of Lakkimdiddi of Chicacole, District of Ganjam." The words "Besides Poramboke" are inserted in the margin, the extent of this Poramboke being as appears from Exhibit XVI, 116 acres. The District Judge assumes that the original title deeds must have also acknowledged the inamdar's title to the Shrotriam village said to consist of a certain extent of dry and wet land besides Poramboke. This assumption is based on the form of grants issued in respect of whole village inams as appearing from the title deeds granted by the Government for other villages produced on behalf of the plaintiff. It is unnecessary to consider whether this assumption was safely made. It is contended on behalf of the Government that the object of the inam title deed was only to recognise the inamdar's title to the Government Revenue or Melvaram of the village and, in cases where the inam was enfranchised, to give up the Government's right of resumption; that as no Melvaram was levied or payable on Porambokes there could have been no intention to recognise the inamdar's title to any Poramboke by the grant of the title deed. We do not decide in this case that the mere insertion in the margin of the title-deed of the words "Besides Poramboke" must necessarily be taken to be an acknowledgment by the Government of the inamdar's title to all kinds of Poramboke. It was held, in Papala Narayansawmi v. Pensala Kanniappa (3), by this Court that such is not the necessary effect of the insertion of those words. The question in that case related to the bed of a stream. The inam there was granted by the British Government in 1802 in lieu of certain lands held as emoluments of the office of Nattuvar which had been resumed by the Government. No boundaries were stated in the documents relating to the grants and no mention was made of the river or river-bed. The Court held that notwithstanding the insertion of words "Besides Poramboke" in the margin of the title-deed, the documents in the case showed that it was not intended to acknowledge the inamdar's title to the bed of the stream. In Ambalavana Pandara v. Secretary of State (4), it was held that a grant of a village "with all wells, tanks and waters within the boundaries" did not pass to the grantee any artificial water-course then existing which irrigated the village granted and other lands. There was no mention in the grant of the channel although the existence and importance of the channel as separate entity were present to the mind of the grantor and although tanks and wells were separately mentioned. It was held that the omission of channel was intentional and that from that circumstance it was clear that it could not have been the intention of Government to recognise the inamdar's title to the channel or its bed. The effect to be given to the insertion of the words "Besides Poramboke" must depend on the evidence available in each case and the circumstances attending the grant. In this case, it is extremely unlikely that when the whole of the village was granted in 1767 by Sitaramraz, it was not intended to convey to the grantee all the wastes and Porambokes in the village. The British Government accepted that grant and recognised the inamdar's title under it. The channel was not one which passed through any Government property before it reached the village of Lakkimidi It is apparently not a large stream connected with any system of irrigation maintained by Government and, as found by the former District Judge, the channel was not controlled by the Government to any appreciable extent. There was no intention on the part of Government at any time to derogate from the grant made in 1767. Both of the learned District Judges who dealt with the case proceeded on the footing that the channel and other Poramboke in the village belonged to the inamdar. On the whole, we see no reason to dissent from that conclusion. It has, therefore, not been proved that the water irrigating the village belongs to Government. In the result we dismiss the appeal with costs. The memorandum of objections has not been argued and is also dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A decree under rule 8 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 is not an order of dismissal for default within the meaning of sub-section (2) of section 2 of the Code, and is, therefore, appealable.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge of Burdwan, dated September 14th, 1911.

Babu Shoroshi Charan Mitra, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law raised in this Rule is, whether a decree under rule 8 of Order IX of the Code of 1908, is an order of dismissal for default within the meaning of sub-section 2 of section 2 of the Code. It appears that the petitioner was the plaintiff in a suit for rent. When the suit came on for trial, an application was made on his behalf for adjournment. That application was refused, whereupon his Pleader stated that he had no materials in support of the claim. The Court did not dismiss the suit, as the defendants had admitted a part of the claim: and a decree was made in terms of rule 8 of Order IX of the Code. That decree is to the effect that the portion of the claim admitted by the defendant be decreed and that the remainder of the claim be dismissed. In our opinion, this decree is not an order of dismissal for default within the meaning of sub-section 2 of section 2. Consequently; an appeal against the decree was competent. Such an appeal was preferred, but the Subordinate Judge erroneously declined to entertain it on the ground that the decree was really an order of dismissal for default and was consequently non-appealable.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside, and the case remitted to him in order that the appeal may be heard on the merits. As the Rule has not been opposed, there will be no order for costs.

Rule made absolute.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in A. S. No. 435 of 1910, presented against the decree of the Principal District Munsif of Madura, in O. S. No. 200 of 1908.

Mr. T. Arumainatham Pillay, for the Appellants.

This second appeal coming on for orders as to admission under Order XLI, rule 11 of Act V of 1908, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—Both Courts concur in finding that there was no justifying necessity for the alienation made by the widow. The District Judge also finds that the defendant's father, the alienee, did not make proper inquiries before advancing the money to satisfy himself that funds were required by the widow for any necessary purpose. The alienation, therefore, cannot be held to be binding on the reversioner.

The next question argued is, whether the plaintiffs have a present right to recover the property. The widow is still alive, but she re-married after the alienation. It is contended that her widow's interest did not cease on her re-marrying, re-marriage of widows being permitted according to the custom of the caste. It was not alleged or proved that, according to the custom pleaded, widows who remarry would be entitled to retain the estate inherited from their husbands notwithstanding their re-marriage. I see no reason not to follow the decision of this Court in Murugayi v. Viramakali (1) that, according to the provisions in the Widow's Re-marriage Act, a widow's right to property inherited from her husband ceases on her re-marriage. This is the view taken also by the Calcutta and the Bombay High Courts. [See Rasul Jehan Begum v. Ram Surun Singh (2); Vithu v. Govinda (3); Panchappa v. Sanganbasawa (4)], though the Allahabad High Court has taken a different view in Gajadhar v. Musammat Kaunsilla (5) and Mula v. Partab (6). The Widow Re-marriage Act does not proceed on the assumption that the re-marriage of the widow would be invalid except for the provisions of the Act making it valid. I express no opinion on the question, whether if a custom were proved according to which a re-marrying widow is entitled to retain property inherited from her husband notwithstanding her re-marriage, such a custom could not be given effect to, in spite of the provisions of the Widow's Re-marriage Act. I reject the second appeal.

Husband and wife—Maintenance—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Order by Magistrate for maintenance of wife—Whether bars Civil suit for further order—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to entertain suit for additional maintenance.

Although there is an order by a Magistrate directing a husband to pay his wife's maintenance at a certain monthly rate, the Civil Court has power to make a further order in the matter in a suit by the wife.

The Civil Court may pass a separate order for additional maintenance if it thinks that the amount awarded by the Magistrate is not sufficient.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Cuttack, dated August 16th 1909.

Babus Bipin Bihary Ghose (Senior), Mohini Nath Bose and Jadu Nath Mandal, for the Appellant.

Babu Satish Chandra Bose for Babu Probash Chandra Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff, Bhuinyani Trinayani Dasee, in a suit which was brought by her against her husband for maintenance.

The only point which was argued before us was whether this suit was, in any way, barred by the fact, which is undisputed, that the lady had obtained an order from the Magistrate, under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the payment to her of maintenance of Rs. 50 a month. That sum is the highest which a Magistrate can award under that section and, in this Civil suit, the lady asked for Rs. 250 a month with arrears, for the provision of a proper residence and, further, that the amount allowed might be made a charge upon her husband's properties. The last order is one which, of course, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass.

We adjourned the appeal for a fortnight to enable the parties to come to terms. They have not, however, been able to do so, and we must, therefore, pass orders in the case.

We were referred to a number of decisions which, generally speaking, were to the effect that a Civil Court cannot interfere with the orders of a Criminal Court in the matter of maintenance. These cases, however, have no bearing on the question which is before the Court in the present case which is whether, although an order has been made by the Magistrate, the Civil Court has power to make a further order in the matter of maintenance. We are not aware of any provision of law which excludes the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in such a case, and we, therefore, cannot agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this suit is barred by the order which was passed by the Magistrate. It is true that the plaintiff cannot have that order set aside, but there seems to be no reason why she should not have a separate order for additional maintenance, if the Civil Court thinks that Rs. 50 a month is not sufficient, or an order from the Civil Court for a sum which would include and give credit for the 50 rupees allowed by the Magistrate.

We accordingly set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and remand the case to his Court for him to inquire and determine what would be the proper amount to allow this lady as maintenance either in addition to or, more properly, inclusive of the sum allowed by the Magistrate. The Subordinate Judge will be at liberty to pass an order making the amount allowed a charge on the properties of the husband. The appellant will have her costs of this hearing. We fix the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

If the plaintiff-appellant had been compelled to pay the Court-fee on this appeal, she would have been entitled to a refund of the amount but, as she filed the appeal in forma pauperis, no fee has in fact been paid, and, therefore, no order is necessary for a refund.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, rr. 5, 6—Attachment before judgment—Finding of essential elements necessary—Opportunity of furnishing security to be given before attachment before judgment.

A Court has no power to make an order under Order XXXVIII, rule 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, directing an attachment before judgment, without finding the essential elements mentioned in rule 5 of the Order, and without affording the defendant an opportunity of furnishing security.

Appeal from the order of the First Sub-Judge of Bhagalpore, dated January 26th, 1911.

Babus Baldeo Narain Singh and Jyotish Chandra Sarkar, for the Appellants.

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarti, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order of attachment before judgment, under rule 6 of Order XXXVIII of the Code of 1908. The order is assailed on behalf of the defendants-appellants on the ground that the learned Judge has not, as required by the statute, determined upon the materials on the record that they were about to dispose of the whole or any part of their property. In our opinion, this contention is well founded, and the order in question cannot be supported.

The plaintiffs-respondents, in an action to enforce a mortgage security, applied, on the 22nd December 1910, for an order of attachment before judgment on the allegation that the mortgaged property would not be sufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt and that unless an order for attachment before judgment was granted, the defendants would dispose of the whole of their property. The affidavit in support of this application was of the vaguest character. The deponent stated that he had been informed and believed that the allegations in the application were true; but the requisite details were not given [Gobinda Mohun Das v. Kunja Behari Das(1)] and there was no indication of the source of information. A petition of objection was filed in answer by the defendants. They denied the truth of the allegation about the insufficiency of the mortgaged security and of the statement that they were about to dispose of their properties. The Subordinate Judge thereupon recorded an order in the following terms: "The defendants object to the attachment before judgment, but the objection is groundless; I see there is no harm in keeping the properties under attachment. The objection is disallowed and the attachment is allowed to be issued". On behalf of the appellants, it has been argued that the order is bad as the Subordinate Judge has not found the essential elements mentioned in rule 5 of Order XXXVIII, which must be established before an order of this description can be made. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Ramnarain v. Ezekiel (2) and Shoshee Shekhoreswar Roy v. Haro Gobind Bose (3) In the latter case, Sir Richard Garth, C. J., pointed out, with reference to the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, that the power given to the Courts to effect an attachment before judgment, should be exercised sparingly and with the utmost caution. The Court should be fully satisfied before it proceeds under that section that the defendant is really disposing of his properties with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him. This view is also supported by the decision in Bishambar Sahai v. Sukhdevi (4), in which it was pointed out that although the Court should act cautiously, it was not necessary to establish by actual sale of the property that the mortgaged property would be insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt. The Subordinate Judge appears to have lost sight of this principle and seems to have assumed that no harm is done to the defendants if their property is kept in attachment and that an order in favour of the plaintiffs may be made as a matter of course. This view clearly cannot be sustained. An attachment practically takes away the power of alienation, and such a restriction on the exercise of the undoubted rights of ownership, ought not to be imposed upon an individual except upon clear and convincing proof that the order is needed for the protection of the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge has further overlooked the fact that before the order is made against a defendant, he ought to have been afforded an opportunity to furnish security, Ahmed Ali Muhammad v. Gladstone (5). The order in question is, therefore, inappropriate from every point of view.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the 26th January 1911, discharged and the case remitted to the Subordinate Judge in order that he may decide the questions raised on materials to be placed before him by the parties. The learned Vakil for the appellants has given an understanding on behalf of his clients that they will not deal with the property in any way between this date and the date of the final decision of the Subordinate Judge upon this matter. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

The rule is that a mortgage is one and indivisible, and the exception only arises when the mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees have acquired in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor.

Plaintiff sued for redemption of a mortgage as the purchaser of a part of the equity of redemption. First defendant, who was one of the several mortgagees, was the purchaser of the other part:

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to redeem a mortgage effected by the late zemindar of Vaiupur in favour of defendant No. 3 and of the fathers of defendants Nos 1, 2 and 4. Portions of items Nos. 1 and 2 of the mortgage properties were sold in execution of a decree obtained against the zemindar in 1866 and 1867 and now belong to the 10th defendant. In a suit of 1884 the plaintiff obtained a decree against the zemindar's elder son and in execution acquired the elder son's share of the mortgaged properties in so far as it had not been already alienated. The plaintiff's case is that the estate was impartible and that by his purchase he acquired the whole equity of redemption subject to the prior alienations. In 1897, the zemindar's younger son, claiming that the estate was partible, sold his share to a purchaser who transferred it to the first defendant who claims to be entitled to a one-third share in addition to his rights as a representative of one of the original mortgagees. Both the lower Courts, however, have held that it was unnecessary to decide the question of impartibility in this suit. Both the lower Courts gave the plaintiff a decree. Second appeals have been preferred by the 1st and 10th defendants and two questions have been argued before us.

In the first place, it is argued on the part of the 1st defendant that the plaintiff, not being the owner of the whole of the equity of redemption and part of it having become vested in the 1st defendant himself, who is also one of the mortgagees, the plaintiff is not entitled to redeem such part. This contention is opposed to section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act as well as to authority. Section 60 provides that "Nothing in this section shall entitle a person interested in a share only of the mortgaged property to redeem his own share only, on payment of a proportionate part of the amount remaining due on the mortgage, except where a mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees, has or have acquired, in whole or in part, the share of a mortgagor." Here there are more mortgagees than one but only one of them has acquired in part the share of a mortgagor. It is, therefore, perfectly clear that the exception does not apply, that the plaintiff is bound to offer to redeem the whole mortgage. It seems equally clear that he is entitled to insist on doing so (see section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act). The general rule being, as explained in Huthasanan Nambudri v. Parameswaram Nambudri (1), that a mortgage is one and indivisible and the exception only arises when the mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgages than one all such mortgagees have acquired, in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor. The rule is explained in Ghose on Mortgages, 4th Edition, page 247. The appellant relied on Kallam Khan v. Mardan Khan (2), but that was a case in which a single mortgagee had acquired a part of the mortgaged property and was, consequently, within the exception. It was there held, in cases coming within the exception, that the indivisible character of the mortgage was broken up and a mortgagor could not claim to redeem the shares of other co-mortgagors in which he was not interested but the judgment expressly distinguishes that case from one in which only one of several mortgagees had purchased a part of the mortgaged properties and the indivisible character of the mortgage had not been destroyed. Mamu v. Kutlu (3) was a case in which a single mortgagee had purchased a portion of the mortgaged property and so came within the exception and Thillai Chetti v. Ramanatha Ayyan (4) wastr eated as coming within the same principle.

The next objection is, that by a prior mortgage in 1863, the zemindar mortgaged certain items included in the plaint mortgage together with other properties and that the first defendant having become solely entitled to such prior mortgage, the plaintiff is not entitled to redeem the plaint mortgage without redeeming that mortgage to the extent of the amount thereof apportioned in the items included in the plaint mortgages.

What the first defendant claims, therefore, is to consolidate the two mortgages, that is to say, to treat them as one and insist that one shall not be redeemed without the other. But even before the right to consolidate had been restricted by legislation, as by section 61 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was always necessary that the two mortgages to be consolidated should have become united in title or come into the same hand, to use the language of Lord Davey in Pledge v. White (5), and this cannot be said to be the case where, as here, the 1st defendant is only a part owner of the plaint mortgage.

The point has been expressely decided in a later case Riley v. Hall (6). In the result, the appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Jats—Inheritance—Custom—Exclusion of daughters and daughter's sons.

There is no custom among Jats of Sardhana Tahsil, Meerut District, excluding daughters and daughter's sons from inheritance.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Meerut, dated 11th February 1911.

Mr. Howard, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him Mr. G. L. Agarwala), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of property and mesne profits. The plaintiffs are the reversioners of the last male owner and have brought their suit on the death of the last remaining widow against the daughters, and one daughter's son. Under Hindu Law, the daughters are entitled to succeed. The parties are Jats resident in the Sardhana Tahsil of the Meerut District. The plaintiffs, accordingly in para. 6 of the plaint, pleaded that according to a custom prevalent in the caste and brotherhood of their family, daughters and daughter's sons were excluded from inheritance and the defendants, therefore, had no title.

The main defence was a denial of the custom and a claim based on the ordinary Hindu Law.

The Court of first instance held that the evidence produced by the plaintiffs did not establish an immemorial invariable custom and dismissed the suit.

The lower Appellate Court held that the evidence sufficiently established the custom and decreed the suit. The defendants come here in second appeal and it is urged that accepting the evidence, it is insufficient in law to establish a custom in derogation of the ordinary rule of Hindu Law to which the parties are subject. To decide the point, we have had to examine the evidence and have been taken through all the details of it which bear upon the point.

There can be no doubt that the burden was upon the plaintiffs to prove a custom which overrides the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance.

They developed their case in the course of the evidence in the following manner. They tried to prove (1) that their class of Jats originally came from the Punjab; (2) that Jats in the Punjab follow the custom whereby daughters and their sons are excluded from inheritance; (3) that the custom prevailed in the two villages in which they own property and in the surrounding villages

In the course of this appeal, we are asked to accept the lower Court's finding that the plaintiffs are Punjabi Jats and our attention has been called to the reports of various Settlement Officers in several districts of the Punjab in which the custom is said to exist in those districts among Jats. It is then argued that the presumption is that the Jats who emigrated to these provinces retained their old customs and, therefore, there is a presumption in favour of the existence of the custom now put forward.

The evidence, on which the lower Appellate Court held that the Jats to which the plaintiffs belong, came from the Punjab, consists of the bald statement of one plaintiff and a few of their witnesses that their forefathers emigrated from the Punjab. As to when the emigration took place and from which part of the Punjab, there is no knowledge whatever displayed by the witnesses. One does, indeed, give a name of a village, but cannot say even in what district of the Punjab it is situate.

As evidence of the origin of the plaintiff's caste and family, this is worthless and we find it difficult to understand how the lower Court could, on such bald and unconvincing statements, hold that the fact was proved.

But, granting that their forefathers came from the Punjab in the remote past, there is no evidence at all to show how many hundreds of years ago this occurred. None of the evidence on record goes back later than 40 years. As the witnesses can give us no help in the matter, the presumption is that the emigration took place so long ago that all knowledge of it has vanished.

In these circumstances, there can be no presumption that the plaintiff's caste-fellows have not followed the same rule of law which prevails in these Provinces and which is an ordinary rule of Hindu Law. As the lower Court's judgment shows, there are many Jats in these Provinces who follow the rule of Hindu Law and only recently another Bench of this Court, in Lachhmi v. Sangram (1), in a similar case from this same part of the Province, has held that the custom now put forward by the plaintiffs does not exist among Jats

We are, therefore, unable to approach the actual evidence in the case with a persumption in favour of the existence of the custom. As we have already said, it is one contrary to the rule of Hindu Law and, the parties being Hindus, must be, therefore, proved by clear and cogent evidence.

To establish the custom, the plaintiffs have produced entries made at the two Settlements of the district of Meerut which followed each other closely and that soon after the Mutiny of 1857.

The entries are to be found in the wajib-ul-arz of seven villages of the district, two being these in which the family owns property.

In addition to these documents, they have called witnesses who testify to instances in which the custom has been observed.

In regard to the entries in the wajib-ul-arz, these lay down that daughters and their sons shall not inherit where a Jat dies leaving collaterals alive. But it seems to us that these very documents contain within themselves intrinsic evidence to show that they are not relating actual existing customs as to the law of inheritance but rules which the persons who dictated them wished to be established.

They lay down the rule that a Jat cannot gift his property to his daughters or their sons as long as he has any collateral relatives alive. They place no restriction on his power to gift to a stranger.

Again, in one set of these documents, it is laid down as a rule of inheritance that where a man has two or more families by two or more wives, his estate will be divided up into a corresponding number of portions and the sons of each wife will divide their portion among themselves. But in the other set of wajib-ul-araiz, the rule laid down is that his descendants will take per capita. These two sets of documents were drawn up at no great distance of time from each other and such customs do not alter so rapidly. Under these circumstances, considerable doubt arises as to whether actual existing customs were recorded or whether the records contain merely those rules which the persons, who dictated them, desired to promulgate.

And our suspicions are greatly strengthened when we come to the oral evidence as to the instances of exclusion.

The plaintiff's chief witnesses were Niada (plaintiff), Rup Ram Kure, Lachmi Dat and Sis Ram; a few others were also examined. The evidence of these witnesses go to show some 18 to 20 instances having occurred within the last 30 or 40 years of the exclusion of daughters and their sons. At the same time, we note that they speak in some cases merely by hearsay and their cross-examination shows that in many cases, they have a woeful ignorance of the family and estate. The best witnesess to prove such instances would surely have been the persons who excluded the daughters and daughter's sons, or their immediate descendants.

But, putting this aside, these very witnesses have had to admit at least six instances within the same period of daughters and their sons having inherited, even in spite of the opposition of collaterals in a few cases.

The defendants have called witnesses who similarly testify to instances the other way. Several of these are not real instances.

Stress is laid on the fact that in at least two cases, the daughters have sold the property to the collateral heirs of their fathers. This surely weighs against the plaintiff's case.

Some instances on both sides have occurred within the last 12 years and the persons in possession are liable to attack in the law Courts.

None of the instances are very old. We must note that the plaintiffs did not limit the custom to their own family. They distinctly pleaded a caste custom among Jats.

It comes then to this that about 18 instances of exclusion within 30 or 40 years have been proved and about six cases where the daughters have inherited, custom has been defined as a rule of conduct uniformly governing a community from time immemorial. The Hindu Law of inheritance is itself based on immemorial custom, and the parties are Hindus. They put forward what they designate an immemorial custom divergent from the rule of Hindu Law. The utmost that their evidence proves is that there is a strong feeling in their caste that the daughter should not be allowed to inherit and that during the last 30 or 40 years, there have been 18 cases in which the daughters have been excluded and that there have been at least 6 instances in which they have asserted their right successfully. In our opinion, this evidence is insufficient to establish a general custom, binding on the whole community this rule of inheritance. There is no evidence to show that it has been uniformly followed over a considerable period of time so as to be binding on the community as a custom.

In this view, we must allow the appeal. We set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 134—Suit for redemption of mortgage—Plea of purchase of mortgaged property by defendant—Onus of proving absolute conveyance—Limitation.

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, where the defendant pleads that he purchased not the mortgage interest but the property absolutely from the mortgagee and claims the benefit of Article 134 of the Limitation Act, the onus is on the defendant to prove an absolute purchase affirmatively and not on the plaintiff to prove that the mortgagee did not purport to transfer more than his mortgage interest.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, in A. S. No. 889 of 1909, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Tirutaraipundi, in O. S. No. 180 of 1908.

FACTS —The facts of the case are sufficiently clear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"Suit to redeem a mortgage with possession. The mortgagors were two brothers, Kolandaivelu Odayar and Srinivasa Odayar. One Singaravelu Odayar was the mortgagee. First plaintiff is the son of Kolandaivelu Odayar. First defendant is the brother's son of the mortgagee. Both the mortgagors and the mortgagee had since died. The mortgage was effected for Rs. 150, on 12th June 1874 fixing five years' time for redemption. On the death of the mortgagee, his brother, Rangasami Odayar, assigned it in favour of one Vithialingathudayar, the 2nd defendant's father. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 were impleaded as they are in possession of the plaint properties. In the course of the suit, 1st plaintiff having transferred his interest in the plaint properties to the 2nd plaintiff, his name was removed, and the 2nd plaintiff's name was substituted in his stead. First and 3rd defendants disclaimed any interest in the plaint property. The 2nd defendant did not contest the suit. Fourth defendant for himself and, as guardian of the 5th defendant, contested the same, and setting up absolute title to the plaint property by right of purchase of the same by himself and the father of the 5th defendant on 5th March 1902 under the sale deed, Exhibit II, from one Appusami Odayar, since deceased, who was the purchaser of the same, among others, from 2nd defendant under a sale deed, Exhibit I, dated 5th April 1893, ignored any knowledge of the plaint mortgage either on his part or on the part of Appusami Udayar, and pleaded limitation with reference to Article 134 of the Limitation Act.

The District Munsif found that the plaint mortgage was genuine, that Appusami Odayar had purchased under Exhibit I only the mortgagee's interest therein, and not the absolute estate also, with knowledge of the existence of the plaint mortgage, that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that Article 134 did not apply to the case, and gave a decree for redemption in 2nd plaintiff's favour. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 have appealed against the said decision.

VEERABADRA TEVAN v. VEERAPPA TEVAN.

"The only point then which was argued on appeal is, whether Article 134 of the Limitation Act applies to this case and bars the claim. Article 134 runs thus :—"To recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration—12 years, the date of the transfer". The words 'bona fide,' or rather 'in good faith', which appeared in Article 134 of Act IX of 1871, were advisedly omitted in Article 134 of Act XV of 1877, to exclude the possible inference that absence of notice of the real owner's claim was necessary to enable a purchaser to avail himself of the Article. Yesuramji Kalnath v. Balkrishna Lakshman (1). The Article is intended to provide for a case, where the defendant's vendor purports to transfer full ownership when, in fact, he has only a mortgage right to transfer, Rego v. Abu Beari (2) and it is not applicable to the case of a purchaser from a mortgagee of his interest as such mortgagee. Kamta Prasad v. Bakar Ali (3); Chandan Kuar v. Jhuran Singh (4); Inji Rai v. Wali Muhammad (5). In order to give the purchaser the benefit of Article 134, the purchase must have been made of that which is de facto a mortgage upon the representation made to him and in the belief that it is an absolute title, Pandu v. Vithu (6); but, if a purchaser from a mortgagee had actual knowledge that his vendor was in possession of the properties only as mortgagee, then Article 134 won't apply. So, the essential requisites of the applicability of Article 134 are, (1) the purchaser should have purchased in the belief that the mortgagee had a right to convey, and was conveying, an absolute interest, and not merely the interest of a mortgagee ; (2) the purchaser should have had no actual knowledge that his vendor was in possession only as a mortgagee; (3) the vendor must have made a representation to the purchaser that he was conveying only an absolute title; and (4) absence of bona fide does not prevent the purchaser from claiming benefit of this Article.

(4) A. W. N. (1881) 75.
(5) A. W. N. (1881) 169.
(6) 19 B. 140.

"Such being the principles of law applicable to this case, I shall now proceed to consider, whether the facts of this case would warrant the applicablity of Article 134 to the same.

"In order to have the benefit of Article 134, the purchaser must show that he is the purchaser of an absolute title; and the production of Exhibit I by defendants Nos. 4, 5 and the recitals thereof afford cogent proof of the purchase of such an absolute title in the plaint properties by Appusami Odayar The onus is, therefore, shifted on to the 2nd plaintiff to show that Appusami had purchased the plaint properties with the actual knowledge of the vendor's title only as mortgagee from the said vendor's representation of his real title as mortgagee and a belief on the part of the vendee, Appusami, that what he was purchasing was not an absolute title, to prevent the application of Article 134. Pandu v. Vithu (6). Such a vendee does not buy the property as an absolute property, and does not differ from an assignee of the mortgagee's right. The mortgagor's suit against such a purchaser would be governed by Article 148.

[After further discussion of the evidence, the Subordinate Judge concluded thus:—]

"For all these reasons, I have no hesitation in holding that the 2nd plaintiff has not proved actual knowledge of the plaint mortgage on the date of Exhibit I and that Article 134 does not apply. I find, accordingly, that Article 134 bars the suit."

Plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. S. Vencatachariar, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think the Subordinate Judge has erred in throwing on the plaintiff-mortgagor, the burden of proving that his mortgagee did not purport to transfer more than his mortgage interest so as to bring the case within Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act. The deed of transfer, Exhibit I, recites that the title-deeds were handed over, and if so, the fact that the transferor had only a mortgage interest must have appeared. As against this, there is only the evidence of a Pleader who speaks to facts sixteen years old. He says he does not remember whether any title-deeds were handed over or not. It is for the defence to prove a purchase affirmatively to bring the case under Article 134, and we think the facts relied on by the Subordinate Judge do not make out such a case. We reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 31st July 1911.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Chaudhri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession of a 3 pie, $1\frac{1}{2}$ suls zemindari share and for mesne profits. I must observe at the outset that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is most unsatisfactory and does not comply with the requirements of Order XLI, rule 31 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It does not set forth the points at issue, nor does it give full reasons for the decision on those issues. All that it says is that a competent Court has already decided that the defendant's mortgage is not prior but subsequent, and as that decision has not been set aside, it operates as res judicata. The learned Judge does not refer to the judgment which he says has the effect of res judicata, and it is difficult to see which judgment he had in view. The facts of the case are somewhat complicated. It appears that under a registered bond dated the 21st of May 1879, a $5\frac{1}{3}$ pie share was mortgaged to the ancestor of the defendant. A suit for sale was brought on the basis of that mortgage, and a decree was obtained on the 30th of May 1892. On the 20th of October 1898, the same mortgagors executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff in respect of $10\frac{2}{3}$ pies which included the $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies mortgaged to the defendant's ancestor. The plaintiff brought a suit upon his mortgage and joined as parties to it, among others, the present defendant who was at the time a minor and his brother Kalka Prasad. Kalka Prasad had been appointed by the District Judge guardian of the minor and he apparently was appointed by the Court guardian of the minor for the suit. In that suit, Kalka Prasad, on behalf of himself and the minor, set up two mortgages of 1890 as having priority over the plaintiff's mortgage. But apparently he did not put forward the decree of the 30th of May 1892 under which the right of the defendants, as prior mortgagees under the mortgage of 1879 had been recognized and ordered to be enforced. The Court, however, held that the mortgages of 1890 were not proved and passed a decree on the 25th of January 1904 for sale of the property comprised in the plaintiff's mortgage. The decree provided that certain other mortgages held by Musammat Kabutra and others should first be redeemed by the plaintiff, but it made no such provision in favour of the defendant so that the decree, so far as the defendant was concerned, was a decree for sale free from any incumbrance which might have existed in favour of the defendant. If the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court had this decree in view, he was wrong in saying that a competent Court had declared that the defendant's mortgage was subsequent to that of the plaintiff. The Court made no such declaration. The effect, however, of the decree was, as I have pointed out above, that the defendants could not take the benefit of the decree which they had obtained in 1892 on the basis of their mortgage of 1879. In execution of the decree obtained by the defendants, they caused $3\frac{1}{3}$ pies to be sold by auction and purchased it on the 27th of March 1905. Subsequently, on the 26th of October 1908, the plaintiff in execution of his decree caused $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies to be sold and bought it himself, but did not obtain possession of the $3\frac{1}{3}$ pies purchased by the defendants. He, therefore, brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for possession of that share. The defendant contended that he had priority over the plaintiff by reason of his having purchased the property under the prior mortgage of 1879 and the decree passed on the basis of that mortgage. He urged that his brother Kalka Prasad was a man of vicious habits, and that the decree, obtained by the plaintiff in the suit in which Kalka Prasad was the defendant's guardian, was fraudulently obtained as against the defendant. He further contended that the property purchased by him was not a part of the property purchased by the plaintiff, that is to say, that the property sold under the decrees held by the respective parties was not the same property. The Court of first instance decided all these points against the defendant and decreed the claim This decree has been affirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The defendant has preferred this second appeal. In my judgment, the decrees of the lower Courts are right. So far as the question of the identity of the property is concerned, it is clear that parts of the same property were sold in execution of the two decrees obtained respectively by the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff was the mortgagee of $10\frac{2}{3}$ pies, half of which, namely, $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies, was subject to the mortgage in favour of Musammat Kabutra and others which the plaintiff was ordered to redeem. That mortgage was not redeemed so that the plaintiff brought to sale the remaining $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies. It is a part of this $5\frac{1}{3}$ pies which was purchased by the defendant. He does not pretend that he purchased any portion of the property which was held in mortgage by Musammat Kabutra and others. This point was found against the defendant by the learned Munsif, and no objection was taken in appeal to the lower Appellate Court on that point. The next point is that the priority, which existed in the defendant's favour under the decree of 1892, not having been put forward in the suit brought by the plaintiff upon his mortgage of October 1898, it is not now open to the defendant to assert that he has priority over the plaintiff. This is settled by the principle of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sri Gopal v. Pirthi Singh (1). The decree passed in the plaintiff's favour against the defendant is binding upon him, and although it may have been a wrong decree inasmuch as it did not safeguard the defendant's rights under his prior mortgage and prior decree, yet the defendant is precluded from claiming priority over the plaintiff whom the decree gave the right to sell the property mortgaged to him free from any incumbrance which might have existed in the defendant's favour. The defendant, however, contends that the decree is not binding upon him inasmuch as it was fraudulently obtained. This plea was taken in the memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court but was not considered by the learned Judge. I have, however, looked into the matter and find that there is nothing on the record to show that there was any fraud on the part of Kalka Prasad, the defendant's guardian. As I have stated above, Kalka Prasad was the certificated guardian of the defendant. He is his own brother, and, as the Court of first instance finds, lives jointly with him so that the defendant was properly represented in the previous litigation by a duly constituted and legal guardian. If the guardian neglected to support the case of the defendant, and there is nothing to show that he did so deliberately, that circumstance alone would not entitle the defendant to avoid the operation of the decree. As he was represented in the suit by a duly constituted guardian and by a person who could legally act as such, he was as much bound by the decree passed in that suit as he would have been if he were of full age; see Daulat Singh v. Raghubir Singh (2) and Sham Lal v. Ghasita (3). The decree being a decree binding upon the defendant, the Possession, suit for—Dispossession of plaintiff by defendant—Non-acquisition of prescriptive title by defendant—Right of prior possessor to possession.

In a suit for possession, where it appears that plaintiff, who was in possession, had been dispossessed by defendant, and at the date of suit defendant had not acquired a title by prescription, and neither party is found to have a good title, plaintiff, as the prior possessor, has a right to recover possession from the defendant, who cannot show a better title.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Cuddapah, in A. S. No. 130 of 1909, presented against that of the District Munsif of Madanapalli, in O S. No. 220 of 1908.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are sufficiently clear from the following judgment of the District Judge on appeal:—

"Plaintiff is the purchaser of the suit land and he sues to establish his right thereto and recover possession thereof. He purchased it from his sister, who was kept by one Elliah, since deceased, and who had a son by him. The land is alleged to be the property of this illegitimate son, and she sold it as his guardian on his behalf. The first question which arises is whether this illegitimate son could succeed to his father, whose property it undoubtedly was. It is admitted that the woman was a widow at the time she came to live with Elliah. The Munsif has held that her son being born of an adulterous concubinage is not an heir in Hindu Law. The question arises as to whether the cohabitation with a widow amounts to adultery. It has been argued that, since Hindu Law cannot tolerate the idea of a second husband, a woman, although she becomes a widow, is still supposed to have a husband. Cohabitation with another person would, therefore, under the circumstances, amount to adultery. On the other hand, it is contended that a widow is as good as an unmarried woman, and in her case there can be no such thing as adultery. I am inclined to think that the former view is correct, and to agree with the Munsif in holding that the son of such a union is no heir. However, this point does not arise. The deceased Elliah, at the time of his death, had an undivided brother, Veeriah, and also a mother living. The natural heir of Elliah was his brother Veeriah, and after his death, the mother. The mother is said to have died only 10 years before the suit. Admittedly, Elliah's mistress was in possession and enjoyment of the land after the mother's death. This will not give her any prescriptive right. Plaintiff claims the land as his own, whereas defendant maintains that he has been cultivating it as a tenant. The Munsif has taken quite a different view of the case. He held that the plaintiff's sister has acquired an adverse title by possession and enjoyment. How he makes this out I cannot understand, for the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses shows that the produce of the land was all along being paid to the mother during her life-time. If it is anybody's property, it is Veeriah's and his heir's, if any. The plaintiff cannot, by virtue of his sale deed from a person who had no right to the property, acquire any title thereto. I reverse the decision of the Munsif, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs of both Courts."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court on the following, among other, grounds:—

"II. The District Judge failed to see that previous possession is in itself a heritable and alienable interest, which would give a right to possession from a dispossession without title.

III. Plaintiff's vendor admittedly having been in possession since the death of Elliah's mother, and the title set up by the defendants in denial of Elliah's title having been found against, the District Judge should have held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover having regard to rulings like Narayana Row v. Dharmachar (1); Sri Gopal v. Ayesha Begam (2); Krishnacharya v. Lingawa (3).

IV. The lower Appellate Court should have held that a tenant like defendant could not by claiming title in himself, impose upon the landlord the burden of proving his title in order to get back possession.

Mr. P. S. Subrahmanya Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Gopalaswmi Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the findings of facts arrived at by the District Judge, we are of opinion that he ought not to have reversed the District Munsif's decree. The District Judge finds that the ownership of the property is in Veeriah and his heirs, Veeriah being the brother of Ellaya. He also finds that Elliah's mistress was admittedly in possession 10 years before the suit, that is, about 1898. He is also of opinion that, during the life-time of Elliah's mother, his mistress was paying over the rental of the property to the mother of Elliah, so that possession was not then in the defendant. The District Munsif found that defendant must have dispossessed the plaintiff in 1905. The District Judge does not say when the dispossession commenced. But, on his finding, it must have been at the time when the plaintiff's transferor was in possession, her possession in 1898 being admitted. The defendant, therefore, had not, at any rate, acquired a title by prescription when the suit was instituted. The state of facts, therefore, is this, that plaintiff and his transferor had possession prior to the defendant, who has not acquired a title by prescription. On these facts, the law as laid down by this Court is that plaintiff, as the prior possessor, has the right to recover possession against the defendant, who cannot show better title. See Narayana Row v. Dharmachar (1), Bhagwan Singh v. Secretary of State (4), Sri Gopal v. Ayesha Begam (2), Perry v. Clissold (5) and Pollock on Torts, 8th Ed., pp. 369 and 370. The decision of the Calcutta High Court in Nisa Ghand Gaita v. Kanchiram Bagani (6) has not been accepted as good law by this Court, and it is not in accordance with several previous decisions of the Calcutta High Court itself.

The District Judge's decree is reversed and that of the District Munsif restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Babus Gonesh Dutt Singh, for the Petitioner.

Babu Satish Chandra Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order by which the Court of appeal below has discharged an order of the primary Court granting a temporary injunction. It appears that the landlord, opposite party, obtained an order under sub section (5) of section 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and proceeded to execute it by an application to the Civil Court. The petitioner thereupon commenced a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration that the order of the Revenue Authorities had been passed without jurisdiction and was illegal and inoperative. During the pendency of this suit, an application was made, under rule 2 of Order XXXIX of the Code of 1908, for a temporary injunction to restrain the landlord from executing the order in question. The Court of first instance granted this application. Upon appeal, the District Judge has discharged the order on the ground that a Civil Court is not competent to stay execution of an order made by the Revenue Authorities. In support of this view, the District Judge has referred to the case of Onkar Singh v. Bhup Singh (1). It does not appear, however, to have been brought to his notice that this decision of the Allahabad High Court has not been accepted as well founded by this Court, in the case of Ram Lochan Singh v. Beni Prosad Kumri (2). This latter decision is an authority for the proposition that although a decree may have been passed by a Revenue Court, when it is under execution in a Civil Court, proceedings may be stayed by the Civil Court if a suit has been brought for a declaration that the decree was obtained by fraud or was made without jurisdiction and for a perpetual injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree. In the case before us, the ground assigned by the learned Judge for his order is, therefore, not well founded. But it is clear that his order is right on the merits. An examination of the plaint shows that the suit is solely for declaration; there is no prayer for any consequential relief; the plaintiffs do not ask for a perpetual injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree on the ground that the decree was made by the Collector without jurisdiction. An order for temporary injunction, such as the plaintiffs seek, can, under Order XXXIX, rule 2 of the Code of 1908, be sought only in aid of the prospective order for a perpetual injunction. If the plaintiffs do not ask for a perpetual injunction, if, therefore, in the event of their success, they cannot obtain a decree for perpetual injunction, it is clearly not competent to them to ask for a temporary injunction during the pendency of the suit. In granting a temporary injunction, the Court acts in aid of the legal right, so that the property may be preserved in status quo. Saunders v. Smith (3), Hilton v. Granville (4), Harman v. Jones (5). Here, however, the plaintiffs do not seek a permanent injunction in the suit, and even if they are successful, the defendant will be free to execute the decree. They cannot on principle enjoin the defendant temporarily, when, upon the disposal of the suit and dissolution of the temporary injunction, the defendant will be at liberty to proceed with execution. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the District Judge rightly refused the application for injunction. But we do not express any opinion upon the questions whether the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, or sub-section (5) of section 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is a bar to the suit as framed.

The result is that this Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara school—Dayabhaga school—Manager, liability of, in a joint family to account—Member of an undivided joint family, right of, to sue for his share of profits.

Although a member of a joint family has a right to ask for a statement of account from the manager, yet he is not entitled to sue the manager for any money relief on account of his share.

Obhoy Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Pearee Mohun Gooho, 13 W. R. 75 (F. B.), referred to.

On this point, there is no difference between the Mitakshara and Dayabhaga schools of law.

Appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated 20th June 1910, upholding that of the Additional Munsif, Lucknow, dated 15th December 1909.

JUDGMENT.—Tara Nath Banerji, husband of Sarat Kumari Devi, and father of Lalit Mohan Banerji, was a Bengali governed by the Dayabhaga law who was employed in the Hardoi District. He had a brother, Bhola Nath Banerji, who is still employed in Lucknow. On the 27th January 1905, Tara Nath Banerji died. His widow, Sarat Kumari Devi, and his son, Lalit Mohan Banerji, the latter of whom is a minor, instituted a suit against Bhola Nath Banerji in the Court of the Additional Munsif, Lucknow, in which they alleged that Tara Nath Banerji and Bhola Nath Banerji were originally members of a Hindu joint family governed by the Dayhbhaga law, and that after the death of Tara Nath Banerji, they, the plaintiffs, had separated, although certain property in Bengal belonging to the said joint family had remained joint. They claimed an account from Bhola Nath Banerji who, they alleged, managed this said property in Bengal, and further claimed the payment of such sums as might be found due to them on the account, and the costs of this suit. The learned Additional Munsif dismissed the suit in a judgment, dated 15th December 1909, holding that the defendant Bhola Nath Banerji was not the manager of the property. Against this decision, the plaintiffs appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Lucknow. On the 16th of April 1910, Mr. C. E. Guiterman, then Additional Judge, passed an order of remand on this appeal. In this order, he discussed two points. The first was whether the appellants, as a widow and minor son of Tara Nath Banerji, were entitled to sue the manager of the family for accounts. He commenced with the assumptions that there was a joint family, that that joint family possessed certain property, that Bhola Nath Banerji was manager of the property, and that the plaintiffs-appellants were members of the joint family. These assumptions are not borne out by the plaintiffs' pleadings. The plaintiffs were not very clear in their plaint as to their exact status. They apparently took the position that, although they had separated in food and income from the joint family in question, they had left their share in certain joint family property unpartitioned, and in the management of the head of the joint family. I do not understand them to mean that they remained members of the joint family. Thus, when the learned Additional District Judge applied, in the course of the plaintiffs-appellants' case, the findings in the case of Obhoy Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Pearee Mohun Gooho (1), he made an assumption which the appellants had not made, namely, that they were still members of the joint family. I do not consider that they had taken the plea that they were members of the joint family, and in the circumstances, they could hardly have relied upon the decision in question, which laid down the law as to the right of a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga law to sue the manager for an account. The learned Additional Judge came to the conclusions, however, that they were so entitled, although he did not decide the question so as to examine the grounds, on which the learned Munsif had dismissed the suit, and found that the respondent, Bhola Nath Banerji, was manager of the joint Hindu family in question. He then referred to the learned Additional Munsif the following issue:—

"After taking of accounts, what sum, if any, is due from the defendants to the plaintiff in respect of the parties here in suit?"

The learned Additional Munsif decided on that issue that Rs. 6-12 were due to the appel

(1) 13 W. R. 75 (F.B.).

lants from the respondent under this head and remitted the finding to the Court of the Additional District Judge. When the case came on again for hearing, Mr. C. E. Guiterman had vacated the office and his place had been taken by Mr. T. K. Johnston. The latter officer proceeded with the hearing of the appeal. He came to the conclusion, that Mr. Guiterman had not definitely decided whether it was within his power to pass a money-decree and finally decided that he was not bound in any circumstances by Mr. Guiterman's finding on the order of remand. He then proceeded to examine the facts and law and to decide the various points raised seriatim. On the first point, he decided that the appellants and the respondent were still members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga law. He next decided that the appellants were entitled to demand an account, but that they were not entitled to any money relief upon the basis of such account except by recourse to a suit for partition. It is impossible for them to sue in this Province for partition of the immoveable property which belonged to the joint family, as that property is situated in Bengal. He further decided that the account given by the respondent showed that in any circumstances, nothing was due from him as he had expended the joint family income upon objects on which he was entitled to expend them as manager of the family. He accordingly dismissed the appeal and upheld the decree. The appellants have come before this Court in second appeal. The first ground of appeal is that Mr. Johnston had no authority to re-open the points decided by Mr. Guiterman. This is an academic point. I do not find that Mr. Johnston as a matter of fact reopened points that were decided by Mr. Guiterman. Mr. Guiterman had decided on the assumption that the plaintiffs and the respondent were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga law, that the provisions of the case of Obhoy Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Obhoy Mohun Gooho (1) governed the case. Mr. Johnston did not dissent from that finding. He found that the appellants and the respondent were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Dayabhaga law and that the provisions of the ruling in question governed the case. He distinctly states that the appellants have a right to sue the respondent for an account. Mr. Guiterman found that the respondent managed the property of the joint family. Mr. Johnston is not sure with regard to the views that Mr. Guiterman might have had with respect to the law, as indicated by the manner in which he framed the additional issue. Whatever views Mr. Guiterman may have had with regard to the law, these views could not be operative, until the issue was decided, and as the issue was decided later, Mr. Guiterman had no operative views on the point. Mr. Guiterman was at perfect liberty to discuss the question as to whether any money relief was due to the appellants. The second ground of appeal refers to a remark in Mr. Johnston's judgment, which would appear to show that he considered that the fact of separation by a member of a Hindu joint family could not be effected except by an instrument in writing. The third ground contests the finding that the parties are members of a joint Hindu family, and that the property in Bengal is held jointly. The fourth ground contests, amongst other points, the manner in which the burden of proof has been laid in the case. The above grounds of appeal have thus much importance. If Mr. Johnston applied the principles of law correctly, his finding as to the fact that the family was joint would be final. If he did not apply the principles of law correctly, the question can be re-opened in second appeal. I am not certain from reading his judgment that he did misinterpret the law on the subject, but it is not worth while to discuss the question as to whether he did or did not take the correct view. I have examined the evidence on the record and I am satisfied that there is nothing to prove that the appellants ever separated from the joint family. They admit themselves in the plaint that the family was originally joint. The burden of proof was distinctly upon them to prove the fact of separation. After an examination of the evidence, I am satisfied that they have failed to discharge this. I accordingly find that the appellants are still members of a Hindu joint family governed by the Dayabhaga law, of which the respondent is manager. With regard to the remainder of the fourth ground of appeal, which is to the effect that such a suit as this is maintainable without adding a claim for partition, I have only this much to say. I consider that according to the doctrine laid down in the case of Obhoy Chundar Roy Chowdhry v. Obhoy Mohun Gooho (1), a member of such a family has a right to ask for a statement of account from the manager. I do not consider that the appellants had a right to ask the Additional Munsif of Lucknow to grant anything more. It has been argued before me by the learned Advocate for the appellant that the position of a manager of a Hindu joint family under the Dayabhaga law is essentially different from the position of a manager of a Hindu joint family under the Mitakshara law. I agree that there is a difference between the status of the manager of the former and the manager of the latter family, but I cannot admit the proposition that there is anything in the Dayabhaga law or in any recognized authoritative pronouncement of the Courts on the subject that would permit a member of a Hindu joint family governed by the Dayabhaga law to sue the manager of the family for a money relief to be given on the valuation of the benefits accruing to him under his share. The remedy is by a suit for partition. This much, I think, is clear from the ruling reported in Obhoy Chunder Roy Chowdhury v. Pearee Mohun Gooho (1), to which I have already referred. It is true that Mr. Justice Mitter said in his note of reference quoted in this ruling, "He (the managing member of such a joint family) is entitled to obtain credit from his co-parceners for all sums of money bona fide spent by him for the benefit of the joint family, but he is certainly liable to make good to them their shares of all sums which he has actually misappropriated, or which he spent for purposes other than those in which the joint family was interested." But there is nothing in this dictum to show that the relief open to the joint member would be otherwise than by a suit for partition, and I think that Mr. Justice Mitter meant that the remedy would be by a suit for partition, for he goes on to say in a later portion of his note of reference: "Suppose, for instance, that one of the members of a joint family, with a view to separate himself from the others, asks the manager what portion of the family income has been actually saved by him during the period of his managership? If the manager chooses to say that nothing has been saved, but at the same time refuses to give any account of the receipts and disbursements, which were entirely under his control, how is the member who is desirous of separating to know what funds were actually available for partition?" The finding of Sir Richard Couch on the point of law was as follows:—"Where there is a joint interest in the property, and one party receives all the profits, he is bound to account to the other parties who have an interest in it for the profits of their respective shares, after making such deductions as he may have a right to make." Mr. Justice Phear expounded the law as similar to that prevailing in English Courts of Equity with regard to discovery. He said: "The principle that I understand the English Courts of Equity to act upon in these matters is simply this, that a person, who has the control of and management of another's property upon the footing of anything which amounts to a confidence or trust reposed in him by this other, shall not be allowed to abuse that confidence, and to make a profit out of his management without the owner's consent; and inasmuch as the question whether or not a profit had been made, or what had been done, lies, under these circumstances, solely within the knowledge of the manager himself, a Court of Equity will make him disclose what he has done; in other words, will make him to account for his administration of the property. It is the necessity for discovery, as the English Lawyers term it, in order to protect the actual owner's right and interest, which founds the jurisdiction of the English Courts of equity in cases of this sort." In the case of Bala Krishna v. Mathusami Ayar (2), it is clearly laid down that the above decision was under the Dayabhaga law. I have been unable to find any clear statement as to the difference between the Mitakshara and the Dayabhaga law in this respect. But in the recent "Treatise on Hindu Law" by Mr. Golapchandra Sarkar, 4th Edition, page 467, I find it laid down that with regard to this matter there is no difference between the two schools. The words are:—"As regards management of joint families by the managing member, there is absolutely no difference between the two schools. The distinction between the two schools with respect to the nature of the title of co-heirs, and its incidents of alienation and survivorship does not, in any way, effect any difference on the present question. For community of interest, which is a distinctive feature of jointness and upon which the question depends, is common to both schools" and he has said above: "Partition is the only remedy to which the other members are entitled for protecting their interests if the management be deemed negligent and prejudicial to the same." The view which I take upon the point raised is this that the right to sue for accounts carries a member of such a family no further than giving him the materials for a suit for partition. But as the point has been raised, I consider it advisable to add a finding as to the manner in which the respondent in this case has expended the income of the joint family property. Upon the facts, I see no reason to suppose that he has either misappropriated any portion of this income or expended it on unjustifiable objects. The case, therefore, stands that the appellants have asked for an account and that they have obtained a sufficient account already. This much is clear from the record. They are entitled to no other relief in this Court and it is impossible to pass any sort of decree in their favour. I might have been disposed to award them some portion of their costs, as the respondent at first did not show much desire to meet their demand for information, but in view of the frivolous nature of the suit and of the fact that the time of three Courts has been taken up with an absolute triviality, I do not consider that they are entitled to any indulgence. The subject-matter is practically nothing and the appellants must have known all along that it was practically nothing. I do not find that the respondent has in any way failed in his duty towards the appellants, and in the circumstances, the fact that they have brought him into Court over such a trifle, is sufficient to justify an exercise of discretion both in making them pay their own costs and also the costs of the respondents. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The English law of fixtures cannot be applied in this country as based on equitable grounds.

Mofiz Sheikh v. Rasik Lal Ghosh, 6 Ind. Cas. 796, 37 C. 815; 14 C. W. N. 952; 12 C. L. J. 246, followed.

The plaintiff, in execution of a decree for rent against the 2nd defendant, purchased a holding on May 19. 1911. He obtained delivery of possession through Court on August 19. Crops had then been grown by the second defendant and they remained on the land till December 25, when they were cut and taken away by the first defendant. The plaintiff brought this suit on the ground that as the crops were grown after his purchase by the second defendant on land, the title whereto had vested in him, the crops became his property:

Held, that the suit was not sustainable.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against a decree by which the suit of the petitioner for value of crops grown on his land by the second defendant has been dismissed. The petitioner alleges that in execution of a decree for rent against the second defendant, he purchased the holding on the 19th May 1911, that he obtained delivery of possession through Court on the 19th August, and that the crops grown thereon by the second defendant were unlawfully cut and taken away by the first defendant on the 25th December. His contention is that as the crops were grown after his purchase by the second defendant on land, the title whereto had vested in him, the crops became his property, and he is, consequently, entitled to the value thereof. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has negatived this claim and dismissed the suit; in our opinion the view taken by him is correct and his decree must be affirmed.

It was pointed out by this Court, in the case of Mofiz Sheikh v Rasik Lal Ghosh (1), that the English law of fixtures cannot be applied in this country as based on equitable grounds. No doubt, under the mediæval English law, as laid down in Bracton, whatever is planted, sown or built in belongs to the soil, if root has struck; or, as Britton and Fleta put it, if trees are planted or seeds sown in the land of another, the owner of the soil becomes owner also of the tree, the plant or the seed as soon as it has taken root. But that has never been the law in this country. On behalf of the petitioner, however, reliance was placed upon the text of Narada quoted in the case of Mofiz Shiekh v. Rasik Lal Ghosh (1), where it is stated that if a man had been residing on the ground of a stranger without paying rent and against that man's wish, he shall by no means take with him, on leaving it, the thatch and timber. It will be observed, at the outset, that this does not specifically apply to growing crops. It must further be remembered that, in the case before us, the second defendant must have continued in occupation of the land with the acquiescence of the plaintiff after his purchase. As already stated, the sale took place on the 19th May; possession was delivered to the plaintiff on the 19th August; the crops were then grown by the second defendant and remained on the land till the 25th December. During this period extending over many weeks, the second defendant must have been in actual occupation of the land, although, in the eye of law, possession might have been with the plaintiff. Neither authority nor principle can be invoked in support of the proposition that merely because the plaintiff became the owner of the land on the 19th May, and the crops were grown thereon by the second defendant after that date, the crops, as soon as they were grown, became the property of the plaintiff. The view we take is supported by the case of Lep Singh v. Nimar Khasia (2), where, in a suit for recovery of damages for value of the fruit crops taken away by the defendant from a garden alleged to be in the possession of the plaintiff, it was held that the fact that the plaintiff was in possession was sufficient to support his title to the damages claimed. In other words, if in the present case, the second defendant had brought a suit against the plaintiff, assuming that the latter had by force removed the crops, his claim would have been successful. Consequently, a suit by the plaintiff against the second defendant for the value of the crops grown by the latter cannot be sustained. The plaintiff may possibly be entitled to mesne profits against the second defendant if she continues in occupation of the land after her title had been extinguished by the execution sale. But there was no claim for mesne profits made in the Court below and nothing in this judgment will affect the title of the plaintiff to recover mesne profits from any person who may be found hereafter to have kept him out of possession of the land.

The result is that this Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at four gold mohurs.

Landlord and tenant—One of several tenants registered in landlord's books—Suit for rent against him—Disclaimer by him—Forfeiture—Suit for ejectment against all tenants, not maintainable—Act of disclaimer not within scope of authority—Partial forfeiture.

Defendant No. 1 alone was registered as tenant in respect of a holding in the books of the landlord, the plaintiff, though defendants Nos. 2 and 3 also were jointly interested in the tenancy. The plaintiff sued defendant No. 1 for rent. The defendant No. 1 denied the title of the plaintiff and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff then sued to eject all the defendants on the ground that the tenancy was forfeited by disclaimer, Held, that when defendant No. 1 repudiated the tenancy, he acted beyond the scope of his authority; that, therefore, his disclaimer could not operate as a forfeiture of the tenancy, in so far as the second and third defendants were concerned, that there could not be a forfeiture of a tenancy in part, and that the claim for possession was not maintainable.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for ejectment, and, in the alternative, for assessment of rent under section 157 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It appears that the first defendant alone is registered as tenant in respect of the disputed land in books of the landlord, though the second and the third defendants also are jointly interested in the tenancy. The plaintiff sued the first defendant for recovery of arrears of rent. That defendant denied the title of the plaintiff and the result was that the action for rent was dismissed. The plaintiff now sues to eject all the defendants on the ground that the tenancy has been forfeited by disclaimer. He also prays that if the tenancy has not been forfeited, fair and equitable rent may be assessed.

The Court of first instance declared the title of the plaintiff but dismissed the claim both for possession and assessment of rent. Upon appeal by the plaintiff, the Subordinate Judge has declared that the title of the first defendant as tenant has been forfeited; but he has held that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for possession as the second and third defendants are not liable to be ejected.

In the present appeal, it has been argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the tenancy has been forfeited and that he is entitled to eject all the three defendants. It has been contended in substance that as the first defendant was allowed by the co-sharers to represent them in the books of the landlord, the disclaimer by him operates as a forfeiture of the tenancy in respect of all the persons interested therein. In our opinion, this argument is obviously fallacious.

It may be conceded that as the first defendant represented the tenancy in the books of the landlord, he was entitled to bind his co-sharers for the purposes of the tenancy; but when he repudiated the tenancy, he must be taken to have acted beyond the scope of his authority. Consequently, his disclaimer cannot operate as a forfeiture of the tenancy in so far as the second and third defendants are concerned. It is further clear that there cannot be a forfeiture of the tenancy in part. The position, therefore, is that the tenancy still subsists and the suit for ejectment must fail. But there is no reason why the plaintiff should not realise rent from all the defendants on the footing that the tenancy still continues.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is discharged, and in lieu thereof it is declared that the claim for ejectment must be dismissed. The case is remanded to the Court of first instance in order that the plaint may be amended and the rent payable in respect of the tenancy determined. The defendants are entitled to their costs of this appeal as also of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge. The costs in the Court of first instance will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Court-fee—Probate and Letters of Administration—Fee to be paid—Exemption—Gross value of estate above and net value below one thousand rupees—Whether fee payable on net value—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 6, 19 (viii), 19 I, 19 K, Schedule I, No. 11, Schedule III, Form.

Section 19 (viii) and No. 11 of Schedule I of the Court Fees Act, exempt from liability to fees Probate or Letters of Administration where the amount or value of the property, in respect of which the grant is made, does not exceed one thousand rupees. This exemption, however, applies only in cases where the gross value of the property does not exceed one thousand rupees.

The fee mentioned in No. 11 of Schedule I is to be paid on the valuation mentioned in Schedule III, and is to be paid on the net value of the property.

COLLECTOR OF MALDAH v. NIRODE KAMINI DEBYA.

Where the gross value is above and the net value is below one thousand rupees, a fee of two per cent. is payable on the net value.

Rule against the order of the Munsif of Maldah, dated June 17th, 1911, as also the order dated November 14th, 1911, on an application for review of his previous order.

Mr. Kenrick, Advocate-General, and Babu Ram Charan Mitra, Senior Government Pleader, for the Petitioner.

Babu Krishna Kamal Mitra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, Nirode Kamini Debya, the opposite party in the present proceedings, applied for Letters of Administration of the property of her deceased husband to the Munsif of Maldah who was the Delegate for the purpose of granting such Letters under the Probate and Administration Act. It is admitted that the gross value of the estate was Rs. 1,985, and that the liabilities amounted to Rs. 1,009, giving a net value of Rs. 976. The Delegate held that as the net value did not exceed Rs. 1,000, no Court-fee was payable. On a review, he refused to set this order aside, and a Rule has been granted to show cause why it should not be set aside.

A preliminary objection has been taken that we have no jurisdiction to interfere either under section 115 of the Code or under section 15 of the Charter. After hearing arguments on the point, we hold that we have jurisdiction to interfere under the latter enactment.

The contention of the petitioner is that Court-fees are payable on the net value of the estate in respect of which Probate or Letters of Administration are asked for, and that no deduction is to be made if that value is below one thousand rupees. The opposite party contends that the decision of the Munsif is correct.

The question is purely one of the construction of the Court Fees Act of 1870. Section 6 of that Act is the provision by which, except in the case of High Courts, the fees specified in the Act are made payable. By section 19K, however, that section does not apply to grants of Probates and Letters of Administration, but fees are made payable on them by section 19I, which is as follows:—"No order, entitling the petitioner to the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration, shall be made upon an application for such grant until the petitioner has filed in the Court a valuation of the property in the form set forth in the third Schedule, and the Court is satisfied that the fee mentioned in No. 11 of the first Schedule has been paid on such valuation." Now, without labouring the point, it is safe to say that the valuation arrived at by following the form set out in the third Schedule is a valuation of the net value of the property and that the fee mentioned in No. 11 of the first Schedule is a fee calculated on gross value, being two per cent. on "the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant or Probate is made," which is unmistakeably a description of gross and not net value. But the fee mentioned in No. 11 is to be paid on the valuation mentioned in Schedule III, and we have no hesitation in reading this as providing that two per cent. is to be paid on the net value of the property. Then the question arises what is to happen in such a case as the present, where the gross value is above, and the net value is below one thousand rupees. The Act contains two provisions in favour of properties below this limit. These are section 19 (viii) and No. 11 of the first Schedule, which are couched in similar terms, and exempt from liability to fees Probate or Letters where the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant is made does not exceed one thousand rupees. But we have already said that these terms in No. 11 indicate gross value. Therefore, the exemption provided by these enactments applies only in cases where the gross value of the property does not exceed one thousand rupees.

It follows that the Munsif in this case was wrong in holding that a fee was not payable, as it was payable, though on the net value.

We may add that section 19B has no application to the present case, as it merely enables the Chief Controlling Revenue authority of the Province, in this case the Board of Revenue, to give relief in certain cases, which is an act of the Executive authority with which the Munsif was not concerned. It is to be observed that section 19B was added to the Act as it originally stood by Act XIII of 1875, and sections 19I and 19K and Schedule III by Act XI of 1899.

As the original order of the Munsif is wrong, this Rule must be made absolute and the order is set aside.

It is not, however, necessary, that we should make any further order in the case. We make no order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

Messrs. E. Venkatarama Sarma and P. Nagabushanam, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the lower Courts refusing specific performance of a contract of sale entered into by the 1st defendant, who is the managing member of the family and against defendants Nos. 2 to 4, his major sons, and defendants Nos. 5 to 8, his minor sons, who appear by their guardian, the 1st defendant. The lower Courts have both found that this contract is not binding on defendants Nos. 2 to 8 and the question which we have to decide is, whether specific performance should in these circumstances be granted or not.

We have been referred to a decision in Kosuri Ramaraju v. Ivalury Ramalingam (1), in which it was decided, without specific reference to the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, that the proper course in such cases as this would be to give a decree for specific performance of the whole of the contract against the 1st defendant leaving it to be settled in future litigation what passed under the conveyance.

Another case to which we have been referred is Srinivasa Reddi v. Sivarama Reddi (2), in which, similarly, a decree was granted directing the first defendant to sell the whole land without determining whether such a sale would bind the 2nd defendant. In that case, the provisions of section 15 of the Specific Relief Act were referred to and it was observed that, "section 15 of the Specific Relief Act would be applicable only if the 1st defendant had no interest in any portion of the property agreed to be conveyed as in illustration (a) or is unable to convey such portion as in illustration (b) to that section."

In Ponaka Subbarani Reddy v. Vadamadi Sesha Chellam Chetty (3), the Court considered it unnecessary to express any opinion as to the correctness of the observation that we have just cited and refused in that case to grant a decree for specific performance of the whole contract distinguishing the previous case on the ground that the contract before them was one entered into on behalf of the minors as well, but gave the plaintiff the benefit of the latter provision of section 15 of the Specific Relief Act.

In Govinda Naicken v. Apathsahaya Iyer (4), these cases were again considered and Srinivasa Reddi v. Sivarama Reddi (2) was distinguished from the case before the Court and was explained as proceeding on the ground that an undivided father has an interest in every portion of the undivided property, and that, therefore, section 15 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply. To us, however, it appears that the consideration that an undivided father has an interest in every part of the undivided property in no way takes the case out of the operation of the section which runs thus: "Where a party to a contract is unable to perform the whole of his part of it and the part which must be left unperformed forms a considerable portion of the whole, he is not entitled to obtain a decree for specific performance." We think the words of the section apply where a member of an undivided family agrees to sell part of the joint property in which he has only a share and the present case is a particularly plain one, because, according to the plaintiff's own evidence, the 1st defendant agreed to get the other members of the family to execute the sale-deed.

(1) 26 M. 74: 12 M. L. J. 400.

(2) 32 M. 320; 4 Ind. Cas. 506.

Further, the contract has been decided in the present suit not to be binding on the other members of the family and a decree for specific performance against the first defendant only would be merely encouraging useless litigation. We may add that Barrett v. King (5) is no authority on the persent point as the facts were entirely different.

The plaintiff does not claim the benefit of the latter part of section 15 of the Specific Relief Act, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

When a tenant holds on one contract of tenancy under the entire body of landlords, each co-sharer landlord claiming to collect rent proportionately to his share of the entire rent, a decree in a suit for rent against the tenant obtained by one co-sharer landlord, in which the other co-sharers were made pro forma defendants, is relevant to prove the entire rent and is thus admissible in evidence in proof of the rate of rent in a suit for rent by another co-sharer against the tenant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendant in a suit for rent. The question of law which requires consideration is whether the decree in a previous suit for rent by a co sharer of the plaintiff against the defendant, is admissible in evidence in proof of the rate of rent. The District Judge, in support of the view that the decree is admissible in evidence, has pointed out that the plaintiff was made a pro forma defendant in the previous suit for rent and has relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ram Ranjan v. Ram Narain (1). Against this view, it has been argued for the appellant, on the authority of the decisions in the cases of Abdul Ali v. Rai Chandra Das (2) and Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohun Das (3), that the decree is not admissible in evidence, because it was obtained by a co-sharer landlord. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. The case of Abdul Ali v. Rai Chandra Das (2), where it was stated that a decree by a co-sharer landlord is not admissible in evidence as to the rate of rent in a suit brought by another co-sharer, does not lay down any inflexible rule of law, and is clearly distinguishable; in that case, the subject-matter of the two suits was different and the plaintiff in the later suit was not a party to the previous suit. Similarly, in the case of Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohun Das (3), it was pointed out that the decree was not admissible because the title to the one-third share in dispute in one of the suits was different from the title to the share in controversy in the other litigation. In our opinion, the true test to be applied in a case of this description is, whether or not the decree obtained in the previous suit is relevant for the determination of the question raised in the subsequent suit. To take a concrete illustration: suppose the allegation is that the defendant holds on one contract of tenancy under a body of landlords, each of whom collects rent proportionately to his share; it is clear that the decree obtained by one co-sharer landlord is relevent to prove the terms of the entire contract of tenancy, and, therefore, to prove the rate of rent at which another co-sharer is entitled to collect rent. On the other hand, assume the allegation to be that the tenant holds on distinct contracts of tenancy under different landlords; a decree obtained by one co-sharer would not be relevent to prove the terms on which the tenant holds under a co-sharer. This is the true import of the observation of Sir James Maclean, C. J. in Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohan Das (3) that the title to the share in dispute in the later suit was not identical with the title of the share in controversy in the earlier litigation. Tested from this point of view, the contention of the appellant in the case before us must be overruled. The tenant holds on one contract of tenancy under the entire body of landlords; each co-sharer claims to collect rent proportionately to his share of an entire sum: this explains how the present plaintiff was joined as a pro forma defendant in the former suit by his co-sharer; the decree obtained therein is clearly relevant to prove the entire rent and thus admissible to establish the allegation of the plaintiff.

(1) 22 C. 533; 22 I. A. 60.
(2) 10 C. W. N. 1084.
(3) 25 C. 522, 2 C. W. N. 501.

The result is that the decree of the District Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern the other appeal (S. A. No. 1400 of 1910), which is also dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—We are dealing in this case with the affairs of a family of Panwar Thakurs who, according to a tradition embodied in the Settlement Records, trace back their descent to one Rao Sheopal Singh, who came into the Farrukhabad district from the Deccan something over six hundred years ago. His family acquired considerable landed property in Farrukhabad and across the Oudh border in Hardoi. It broke up into several branches, but the evidence shows that the village of Wazirpur in the Farrukhabad district was looked upon as the head quarters of the family. The branch with which we are immediately concerned had its head-quarters at Allahganj in the same district, and the group of villages owned by them was known as "taluqa Allahganj". There are other indications in the evidence besides the use of this name that the status of the family at one time approximated more or less to that of an Oudh talukdari estate. At the time of the Mutiny, the owners of "taluqa Allahganj" were three brothers, Lekha Singh, Hemanchal Singh and Dammar Singh. The first named was the eldest, and he had one son, named Gopal Singh, the other two died childless. The family was deeply involved in the Mutiny and was severely dealt with by the Government in 1859. When this day of reckoning came, it is clear that the three brothers, whatever may have been the actual state of things before 1857, found it convenient to represent themselves as entirely separate in estate, and as each owning one-third share of the villages forming the taluqa. This position was accepted by Government, and was to the advantage of the family because Government had nothing against Hemanchal Singh personally. He was accordingly left in undisturbed possession of one-third of the family estate; Dammar Singh's property was confiscated, but it appears that either the whole or a considerable portion of it was shortly afterwards restored to his widow, Musammat Dular Kuar. Lekha Singh had been deeply concerned in the doings of the mutinous sepoys; he was transported for life and all his property confiscated. It is clear that no reservation was made in favour of Gopal Singh and that the whole of Lekha Singh's one-third share in the estate was lost to the family; Gopal Singh had in fact been arrested along with his father, and it would seem that he only escaped transportation on the ground of his youth. Hemanchal Singh was left as the virtual head of the family; being childless himself, it would seem that he felt himself bound to do something for his elder brother's family. He probably felt that any disposition of his property in favour of Gopal Singh might lead to trouble but Gopal Singh had two minor sons, Kunwar Bahadur Singh and Lal Bahadur Singh. The former of these, the elder brother, was virtually adopted by Hemanchal Singh who finally placed matters beyond dispute by executing, on November 10th, 1875, a formal transfer of his entire property by way of gift (vide paper No. 69 at page 44 R.) in favour of the said Kunwar Bahadur, then still a minor. The next point to be noticed in the history of the family relates to the years 1878-9. Musammat Dular Kuar, widow of Dammar Singh must have got into difficulties, and on January 20th, 1879, we find her one-third share in the two villages, Allahganj and Islamganj, put up to auction sale and purchased (nominally at any rate) by Gopal Singh. (Vide papers No. 155 at 64R and No. 74 at 34A. of the printed books). In the year 1888, Kunwar Bahadur Singh died without male issue, leaving a young widow, (aged about 22 years, according to a paper No. 152 at 67R) Musammat Phul Kuar, who is the real defendant in the present suit. A dispute immediately broke out between this lady and her late husband's brother, Lal Bahadur Singh. The latter seems to have taken possession of as much of his late brother's property as he could get hold of, and Phul Kunwar brought a Civil Suit (No. 76 of 1889 see p. 67R) for recovery of the same. The suit ended in a compromise decree dated March 28th, 1891, see papers Nos. 71 and 72 at pp. 48 and 49A. which gave Phul Kunwar possession of the entire property in dispute for her life-time as a Hindu widow, with a proviso that Lal Bahadur Singh should succeed to the same after her death. With this proviso, we are not concerned, as Lal Bahadur Singh himself died childless in the year 1898, leaving him surviving a widow Musammat Tilok Kunwar. The details of this litigation require, however, to be attentively examined with reference to the disposition of the family property in the two villages of Allahganj and Islamganj. We have to see what Phul Kuar claimed in these two villages as having formed part of her late husband's estate, and what by implication she left to Lal Bahadur Singh as admittedly his property. The conclusions we arrived at, after examining the documentary evidence, were finally accepted by both parties before us as clear beyond dispute; it is, therefore, sufficient simply to state them.

In village Allahganj, Phul Kuar claimed five sixths of the entire village; and this five-sixths must have been made up as follows:—

One-third share originally Hemanchal Singh's which passed from him to Kunwar Bahadur;

One third share originally Lekha Singh's, which is proved to have been bought back by Hemanchal Singh after the confiscation, and so passed from him to Kunwar Bahadur;

One sixth share, representing one-half of Dammar Singh's original one-third share, purchased at auction by Gopal Singh in 1879, and treated at his death as having been equally divided between his two sons, Kunwar Bahadur Singh and Lal Bahadur Singh.

In village Islamganj, Phul Kuar claimed one-half of the entire village, that is to say, Hemanchal Singh's one-third share plus one sixth share, which again represents one-half of Dammar Singh's original one-third share. In this village, Lakha Singh's one-third share had not been re-purchased after the confiscation and was thus finally lost to the family. The important point to notice is that Phul Kuar leaves to Lal Bahadur Singh one-sixth share in each of these two villages and does not claim the same as forming part of the estate of her late husband.

Whatever Lal Bahadur Singh owned passed on his death to his widow Tilok Kuar, and it is with the death of this lady on January the 9th 1906, that the dispute begins out of which the present suit arises. The estate of Phul Kuar had in the meantime been taken under the management of the Court of Wards, and when Tilok Kuar died, leaving no heir behind her who had any clear or undisputed title to the succession, the Collector of Farrukhabad took charge of her entire property pending further inquiry. There is nothing on the record before us to show that there was any formal magisterial inquiry into the question of the right of succession to this small estate; apparently the matter was left to be dealt with by the Revenue Courts in connection with the applications for mutation of names in the village papers of Allahganj and Islamganj. The order of the Assistant Collector who dealt with this question of mutation has not been translated or printed, but it is on the file in the vernacular and we have been through it. It appears that at least three distinct sets of claimants alleging themselves to be the reversioners to the estate of Lal Bahadur Singh under the Hindu Law came forward with conflicting claims; on the other side, we know that Musammat Phul Kuar also claimed the property. It would be interesting if we could know the precise nature of the title asserted by her, but this is not clear from the mutation order. Obviously, Musammat Phul Kuar as widow of Kunwar Bahadur would have no title in law to succeed to the estate of a deceased brother of her late husband; the only way in which she could make out a title in law to the immoveable property in dispute would be by showing that it never really belonged to Lal Bahadur Singh at all but was always a portion of the estate of Kunwar Bahadur Singh, though assigned to his younger brother, and afterwards to that younger brother's widow by way of maintenance. Seeing that the Collector had originally assumed charge of the property left by Musammat Tilok Kuar as property for which no legal heir was apparently forthcoming, and which might, therefore, lapse to Government by way of escheat, it would seem that there ought to have been some sort of inquiry there and then into the validity of Musammat Phul Kuar's title before this property was practically made over to her. It seems unfortunate that we have no record before us of any such inquiry; and if, as a matter of fact, the handing over of the property to Phul Kuar took place as a consequence of the order passed in the mutation proceeding, the result is certainly peculiar. What the Assistant Collector in effect says in that order is, that none of the alleged reversioners have succeeded in satisfying him as to the validity of the title claimed by them, and that in any case Musammat Phul Kuar is actually in effective possession of the disputed property through the manager of the Court of Wards. It may be that there is some hiatus in the evidence before us which a more careful inquiry into the records of the Farrukhabad Collectorate might have supplied; but as the evidence stands, it would certainly appear that the Assistant Collector's order in mutation is based upon a misapprehension arising out of a failure on his part to distinguish between the Collector's possession over Phul Kuar's estate as manager of the Court of Wards and his possession over Tilok Kuar's estate as property liable to escheat to Government for which no claimant with a clear title was forthcoming. As a matter of fact, this particular point seems to me to be still involved in some obscurity which was not completely cleared up by the arguments before us. The original defendant in this case was the Secretary of State for India in Council. The name of the Collector of Farukhabad as manager of the estate of Musammat Phul Kuar under the superintendence of the Court of Wards was added as a defendant by an order passed more than three months after the institution of the suit. Separate defences were entered by the Collector of Farrukhabad on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council and by the same officer as manager of the Court of Wards. The judgment of the lower Court implies that the landed property in Allahganj and Islamganj is held by the Collector "in the name of the Government" as if the possession over this property were still that of the Secretary of State for India in Council. Yet the appeal before us has been filed by the Collector of Farukhabad as manager of the Court of Wards only; so that we must take it that the Secretary of State for India in Council acquiesces in the decree of the Court below, though I cannot say that it is at all clear to me whether he does so on the ground that he has actually recognised Musammat Phul Kuar as owner of the property in suit, and made over the same to her, or whether he is simply not prepared to offer further resistance to the plaintiff's claim. The point was alluded to before us in the course of arguments, and the parties were apparently satisfied that we ought to deal with the case on the assumption that Musammat Phul Kuar, through the manager of the Court of Wards, is actually in possession of the entire property in dispute. I accordingly propose to do so but I cannot say that on the record as it stands the point seems to me as clear as it ought to have been made.

In any case, the institution of a formal suit by some person or persons claiming as reversioners under the Hindu Law was almost certain, and it was rendered inevitable by a circumstance which may as well be noticed at once, as it requires to be borne in mind in estimating the value of all the evidence produced. The property actually in dispute in the present case is comparatively small. It consists of a one-sixth share in each of the two villages of Allahganj and Islamganj, of a grove in village Islamganj, of the dwelling house in village Allahganj occupied by Lal Bahadur Singh and after him by his widow, and of a considerable quantity of moveable property, a complete list of which was prepared under the Collector's orders at the time when he took charge of Musammat Tilok Kuar's estate. It is obvious, however, that any person who can prove himself to be the nearest reversioner under Hindu Law to the estate of Lal Bahadur Singh will at the same time be proving himself the nearest reversioner to the much larger estate of Kunwar Bahadur Singh at present held by Musammat Phul Kuar. I do not suggest that a decision in favour of the plaintiff in the present suit would necessarily operate as res judicata against all possible claimants, but it is obvious that any person whose title as reversioner is affirmed in this suit will have a claim to immediate possession of Kunwar Bahadur Singh's estate upon the death of Musammat Phul Kuar which the Collector of Farrukhabad, in whose hands the estate will then be left, will probably feel himself compelled to admit.

Now, amongst the three sets of claimants, who came forward during the mutation proceedings, were three persons who made common cause, namely Gangu Singh, Jwala Singh and Gajraj Singh. The two last named are father and son, and Jwala Singh is the son of one Ram Baksh Singh, who was the own brother of Gangu Singh. It need scarcely be remarked that, under these circumstances, if these three claimants had made out a good case, the estate would go to Gangu Singh to the exclusion of the other two. It would seem, however, that either by reason of their possession of necessary funds or for some other cause, it is Jwala Singh and his son Gajraj Singh who have interested themselves in fighting this claim. Gajraj Singh has obtained from Gangu Singh a deed of gift in his favour of whatever property Gangu Singh may have inherited upon the death of Musammat Tilok Kuar as reversioner of her late husband; he has also gone to another branch of Gangu Singh's family and has obtained a similar deed of gift from Madho Singh, a first cousin of Gangu Singh's. In the present suit, therefore, instituted on the 18th of May 1908, Gajraj Singh comes into Court as plaintiff on the basis of these two deeds of gift, that is to say, he sets up and undertakes to prove the title of his two donors, Gangu Singh and Madho Singh, as the nearest reversioners to the estate of Lal Bahadur Singh. The fact that Gangu Singh died in the month of June 1907 has no bearing on the plaintiff's case inasmuch as Gangu Singh admittedly survived Musammat Tilok Kuar. From the point of view of the two donors, the position is simple enough; they were making to Gajraj Singh a gift of property of comparatively small value, not in their possession and not to be obtained by them without troublesome and expensive litigation, on the understanding that Gajraj Singh was to institute and finance a suit which, if successful, would prove his donors to have a good claim to a very much larger estate, in the event of either of them surviving Musammat Phul Kuar, a lady who must now be some 45 years of age.

We shall have to turn presently to the pedigree upon which the plaintiff based his claim and the proving of which is undoubtedly the one substantial issue in the case; but it is necessary to dispose in the first instance of Musammat Phul Kuar's defence, in so far as that defence is based upon the allegation that the property in dispute was really not Lal Bahadur Singh's but that of her own husband Kunwar Bahadur Singh. The facts which I have stated in an earlier portion of this judgment are in themselves sufficient to show that there is but a slender basis for this claim. In any case, the dwelling house and the moveable property found in Musammat Tilok Kuar's possession would presumably belong to her and have come to her from her late husband. There is nothing to show that the grove in the village Islamganj does not appertain to the one-sixth share in the proprietary rights of that village held by Lal Bahadur Singh; and if by any chance, it does not so appertain, there is simply nothing in the evidence to show that it ever belonged to Kunwar Bahadur Singh and not to its ostensible and recorded owner. We have only to consider, therefore, Musammat Phul Kuar's case regarding the one sixth share in the zemindari rights in the villages Allahganj and Islamganj. It has been pointed out that these form part of the one-third share in each village purchased by Gopal Singh in his own name in January 1879. The case for the defendant is that Gopal Singh could have at that time no property of his own with which he could effect the purchase, and a certain amount of oral evidence has been tendered on behalf of the appellant to show that the money with which the purchase was effected came from the estate of Kunwar Bahadur Singh. It is unnecessary to discuss this evidence, because it is in itself of little value as against the documentary evidence on the other side; and, as a matter of fact, it might be true without being sufficient to make out Musammat Phul Kuar's case. I have pointed out that this lady herself, when suing Lal Bahadur Singh in 1889, did not claim the property now in dispute as part of her late husband's estate. Moreover, Kunwar Bahadur Singh himself in an application dated March the 25th, 1880, (No. 155 at page 64 R), applied that his own name and that of his brother Lal Bahadur Singh should be entered as owners in equal shares of the one-third share in the villages Islamganj and Allahganj which had formerly belonged to Musammat Dular Kuar and had been purchased at auction by Gopal Singh. Possession remained thereafter with Lal Bahadur Singh and with his widow after his death. One can understand Musammat Phul Kuar's claim as having some sort of basis in equity, with reference to the previous history of the family and to those parts of the evidence which suggest that the Allahganj estate was regarded at one time as an Oudh talukdari estate descending by the rule of primogeniture, subject only to a reasonable provision being made for younger branches of the family. This state of things, however, undoubtedly came to an end in 1859 if not before; and there is really nothing in the evidence to justify a finding that Lal Bahadur Singh held the immoveable property now in dispute as a mere grant in lieu of maintenance, or otherwise than as full owner.

This matter having been disposed of, it only remains to be considered whether the plaintiffs have made out their case by proving the pedigree set up by them. The evidence shows that it is so far incomplete that the various lines have not been carried further down than was sufficient to show that no person nearer in degree to the alleged common ancestor than Gangu Singh and Madho Singh, the plaintiff's donors, had survived Musammat Tilok Kuar. Otherwise, it purports to be a complete pedigree, and if proved by adequate evidence, it is sufficient to establish the plaintiff's case. The evidence tendered in support of it is both oral and documentary, and the documentary evidence was the subject of much argument before us. It must be remembered that Madho Singh and Gangu Singh were never landed proprietors. They come from a village called Behta in the Farrukhabad district, which, undoubtedly, appertains to the estate known as Taluqa Allahganj, and is shown in the schednle appended to Musammat Phul Kuar's plaint in Suit No. 76 of 1889 as the property of the owners of the said taluqa. The plaintiff's case is that, some generations back, at a time when the Allahganj estate was a real taluqa and the right to it descended by primogeniture, a younger branch of the family settled in village Behta, obtaining no share in the zemindari but only grove lands and what the witnesses on the point call "sir lands", by which they presumably mean tenant holdings at favourable rates. It was impossible, therefore, for the plaintiff to find documentary evidence in support of his claim in ancient village records containing the names of landed proprietors belonging to the family with which he seeks to connect himself. In default of this he has sought for documentary evidence in the books kept by certain Brahmins known as pandas at Soran on the Ganges and at the sacred city of Muttra. These pandas are priests who receive pilgrims visiting sacred places for purposes of devotion and assist them in the performance of ceremonies appropriate to the occasion. Their livelihood depends on the fees paid them by the pilgrims who thus employ their services, and there is no doubt that they are exceedingly jealous of their traditional or prescriptive rights to receive and minister to all pilgrims belonging to any family which has once definitely enrolled itself in their lists of jaimans or clients. For this purpose, they maintain certain books or registers one of which has been produced before us by the plaintiff's witness, Ganga Nath, a panda of Soran, whose evidence will be found printed at pages 10 to 14 of the respondents' book. His evidence needs to be compared carefully with the printed translation of the extracts from his bahi or register which will be found as document No. 230 at pages 61-62 R. As a matter of fact, we have had to subject the entire book to a good deal of examination. It begins with a sort of index giving the names of villages where the panda's clients live, together with numbers for facility of reference. A good deal of trouble seems to be taken to keep the entries relating to particular villages together or, at any rate, to facilitate reference when entries relating to the same village have got into different parts of the book. There seems, moreover, to be a certain amount of system employed in grouping villages together so as to connect with one another entries relating to different branches of one and the same family residing in different villages The entries themselves consist very largely of pedigrees or fragments of pedigrees sometimes purporting to be made by, or at the dictation of, a particular member of the family concerned on the occasion of a visit paid to the Ganges at Soran in a specified year and month, sometimes merely jotted down underneath some other entry, without any specific record either of the occasion or of the particular person on whose authority the entry is made. Of course, the book is not, and does not profess to be, a systematic record of family pedigrees. The pages are not consecutively numbered. It is admitted that the binding is unstitched and fresh pages inserted whenever the "panda" finds it convenient to do so. Blank spaces, and even blank pages, occur from time to time in the body of the book. It is admitted that if a page gets very much worn or tattered, the "panda" will copy out what he can decipher of the entries upon it on to a fresh page and will insert the same in its place. It must also be borne in mind that the "panda" does not hold himself responsible for the identification of pilgrims who appear before him and represent themselves as being members of such and such a family. On these and similar grounds a strong attack was made on behalf of the defendant-appellant, not merely upon the value of this Soran book as a piece of evidence, but upon its admissiblity under any of the provisions of section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act. The argument, indeed, went so far as to ask us to hold that in no case ought entries in these pandas' register or note-books to be treated as admissible in evidence upon a question of pedigree. I am satisfied that this contention goes much too far. Indeed, the more we examined the book produced before us, the more certain it appeared that this book contained a large number of entries, obviously genuine and of considerable antiquity, which might afford evidence of real value on the question of the pedigree of the persons named therein. The book needs to be received with caution and subjected to a severe scrutiny in order to guard against the possiblity of fabrication; but to say that no entry contained in it can be admissible in evidence, or even that none of the entries relied upon in the present case is admissible, is to go a great deal too far. Each entry must be carefully examined and dealt with on its own merits. Where it purports to be made by, or at the dictation of, a member of the family concerned, and the Court is of opinion that fair presumption exists in favour of its having been so made, it would clearly be admissible, as a statement by a person who had special means of knowledge, under the provisions of section 32 clause (5) of the Indian Evidence Act. Even as regards particular entries which do not purport to be made by any named person, I should not be prepared to lay down any universal rule of exclusion. Such an entry might be treated as admissible under the clause above referred to, if the Court were of opinion that there was a fair presumption that it represented a statement made by some person who had special means of knowledge, even though that person could not with certainty be named. I think also that such entries might be admissible under clause (6) of section 32 aforesaid. They are not family pedigrees as that expression was explained by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kalka Prasad v. Mathura Prasad (1), but they would seem to be statements as to the existence of relationship such as are referred to in the last part of the said clause as "made upon any tomb-stone, family portrait or other thing on which such statements are usually made". Taking into account all the evidence which has been laid before us regarding the manner in which these pandas' books are kept up, I do not see why even such entries, as I am now considering, should be treated as less admissible than (for instance) a note of the parentage of the subject of some old family portrait endorsed on the portrait itself. The principle laid down by clause (6) of section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act has been adopted from the English Law of Evidence; it seems to me that it has been laid down in sufficiently wide terms in order that there may be no doubt as to its application to analogous cases arising out of the widely different conditions of Indian life.

I now proceed to consider in detail the entries in the Soran book on which reliance is placed. The printed record gives a very imperfect, and in some ways almost a misleading, idea as to their actual appearance and significance. They undoubtedly occur amongst a series of entries relating to Thakur landholder of the Panwar clan coming from villages connected with Wazirpur. At the end of a page dealing with village Mahilia, comes a note which is not to be found in the translation of the Exhibit on pages 61 and 62R but which is referred to as entry No. 7, in the record of Ganga Nath's evidence as printed on page 13 R. It runs thus:—

"The Panwar clan, an entry by Thakur Shahzada, son of Deo Rao, and grandson of Bhagwant Singh."

This is separated by an entire blank page from the entries which follow; this blank page looks newer than those which precede and follow it, so that it is possible that its insertion is a mere accident during some process of re-binding; but if it be a mere accident, it is an unfortunate one for the plaintiff. What he is trying to prove is the common descent of himself and his donors on the one hand and of the family of Lekha Singh on the other, from an ancestor named Bhagwant Rai or Bhagwant Singh. He has here an entry purported to be made by a grandson of a Panwar Thakur named Bhagwant Singh, and corrobrating three important steps in the pedigree deposed to by his witnesses. This entry stands isolated, with no mark of time, no note of the name of the village from which "Thakur Shahzada" came, at the end of a page dealing with a different village, and separated by a blank page from the other relevant entries presently to be considered A curious point in connection with it is that it does not appear to have been put forward by the plaintiffs when he examined Ganga Nath in chief nor has the plaintiff thought it worth printing amongst the Exhibits on which he relies. It seems to have been dragged out of Ganga Nath under cross-examination and pressed upon the Court by the defendants as a palpable forgery. We know, as I shall have to point out presently, that Jwala Singh, father of the plaintiff, visited Soran and Muttra early in 1906 to see what evidence could be got together from the panda's books about the pedigree of his family and the suggestion is that he must have then procured the fraudulent insertion of a false entry about the parentage of Shahzada Singh on a blank space accidentally left at the end of the Mahilia entries. Such a theory would require to be carried to its logical conclusion; it implies that Jwala Singh arranged the perpetration of a forgery at once so futile and so palpable that he thougt it better not to invite the attention of the Court to it when the case came up for trial. On the whole, I think there is only one thing to be done with this entry, to disregard it altogether. It is so far suspicious that we ought not to rely upon it; yet there are difficulties in the way of dealing with it as an undoubted and demonstrable forgery.

Now we take up the examination of the book after the blank page. The heading of the next page is "Village Kasara" but this is immediately qualified by the opening words of the entry itself which are noted as belonging to "Village Wazirpur". Then follows a note that Thakur Dulo Rai, son of Bhagwant Singh, and grandson of Gharamdeo, etc., (his pedigree being carried back several generations), a Rajput of the Panwar clan, resident of Wazirpur in pargana Mehrabad, came to the Ganges in the month of Aghan 1802 Sambat corresponding with 1745 A. D. A formal pedigree repeating much of the information originally given but naming some collateral branches, follows; and at the end Dulo Rai is noted as having a son named Kunjal Singh, who has a son named Sahib Rai.

Immediately below this comes an entry dated in the month of Magh 1871 Sambat = 1814 A.D., expressly purporting to be made by Thakur Hira Singh, son of Thakur Kunjal Singh and grandson of Dulo Rai, the pedigree being traced upwards to Gharamdeo, resident of Allahganj, formerly resident of Wazirpur. Here again the pedigree is formally repeated, with the added information that Hira Singh had a brother named Sahib Rai, that Hira Singh's son was Bhure Singh, who had a brother called Bhikham Singh, who had two sons, Dal Singh and Bhawani Singh.

These entires are obviously genuine, and it is beyond question that they give accurately the pedigree of the defendant's side of the family down to Bhure Singh, who was the father of Lekha Singh, the man sentenced to transportation in 1859 A. D. I do not think any Court which had carefully examined this Soran book would hesitate to accept these entries not only as admissible, but as really valuable evidence of the facts therein stated. The note regarding the transfer of the family residence from Wazirpur to Allahganj is peculiarly significant in view of the tradition on this point preserved in the settlement records and in the oral evidence. It must be remembered that the defendant has never explicitly denied her family's side of the pedigree set forth in the plaint; it is the pedigree of the elder branch of the Talukdars of Allahganj, and would be well known in the Panwar clan by oral tradition. I have no doubt that it is fully established by the oral evidence alone.

Immediately under these entries about the Allahganj people, the paper has got torn, and we had to fit in the broken piece and to decipher with some difficulty. The entry next following relates to some Thakurs of village Kulhri, also appertaining to Wazirpur, and this brings us to the bottom of the page as it originally stood. We then turn the page, i.e., reverse it and read on the opposite side. The first entry then runs:

"Village Behta, pargana Maherabad Rajputs of the Panwar clan of the family of Becha."

(This is obviously intended to mean Becha Singh, whom Dulo Rai has previously named as his great-great-grandfather).

"Thakur Shahzade Singh and Daya Ram, brothers; Dunde Singh, Makan Singh, Ratan Singh and Fateh Singh, sons of Shahzade Singh, Chheda Singh, son of Makhan Singh, Bhawani Singh and Hindu Singh, sons of Dunde Singh. Budh Singh and Kunwar Singh, sons of Fateh Singh. Below is a note that the signature (or signatures) of the person (or persons) responsible for this entry will be found in "the old book".

Under this again is some writing in Urdu which shows that Jwala Singh inspected this book (presumably early in 1903) and found it worth while to leave his signature on this page to show that he had done so. The reference to the "old book" may be to a book of signatures which Ganga Nath tells us was kept up; but this youth (he is only 19 years of age) has not been able to help the plaintiff to trace the reference. We do not know, therefore, on whose information the pedigree of the Behta people was noted down, and we have to deal also with the defendant's argument that the entry is a forgery arranged by Jwala Singh. All reasonable presumptions seem to me against the theory of forgery. The entry looks genuine, and the very objection as to its not being more explicit is in favour of its genuineness. Moreover, from the plaintiff's point of view, it proves too little to have been worth forging. The plaintiff has to trace his family and that of his donors back to Bhagwant Rai, this entry begins with Shahzade Singh and Daya Ram, the alleged grandsons of Bhagwant Rai. It carries us down along one line of descent to Bhawani Singh, father of Madho Singh, who had not at that time made common cause with Jwala Singh or executed any deed of gift in favour of the plaintiff. But the most striking point of all remains. This enty gives Dunde Singh's sons as Bhawani Singh and Hindu Singh, while the plaintiff's case is that Dunde Singh had another son named Tilak Singh, and from this Tilak Singh are descended the plaintiff himself and his other donor, Gangu Singh. The latter's deed of gift in favour of the plaintiff is dated April 2nd, 1906, so that what we are asked to believe is that Jwala Singh got an entry forged which excluded from the pedigree the father of the claimant, Gangu Singh, whom he had squared, and his own grandfather. This I hold to be simply inconceivable. I hold this to be a genuine entry and admissible in evidence for what it is worth. It is of some value as showing the Panwar Thakurs of Behta connecting themselves in the pandas' books with that branch of their clan which had its head-quarters at Wazirpur, and it lends corroboration to the oral evidence through the following steps of the pedigree which the plaintiff has to prove, viz.:—

That Bhawani Singh (father of the plaintiff's donor Madho Singh) was the son of Dunde Singh, who was the son of Shahzade Singh.

The rest of the plaintiff's documentary evidence does not consist of a panda's book at all, but of three photographs of pages from a book kept by Arjun Panda of Muttra. This man was got into Court under a warrant of arrest; he either is in reality a most unwilling witness for the plaintiff, or he has contrived most artistically to suggest that he is. His evidence and that of the witness Kishun Kunwar, proves that Jwala Singh got these photographs taken early in 1906, and we know that they were put in evidence before the Assistant Collecor in the mutation proceedings of that year. The loss of this one book, out of ten or twenty which Arjun keeps, is a fact so extraordinary that I do not really believe it to be due to mere coincidence. I strongly suspect that the book has either been wilfully destroyed, or is being kept back, but I hesitate to form an opinion as to whether this is done at the instigation and in the interests of the plaintiff or of the defendant. The general tone of Arjun's evidence, taken in connection with what has apparently happened to another important document in the case presently to be noticed, inclines my suspicions against the defendant. I note that the photographs were admitted as secondary evidence in the Court below, apparently on the strenght of Arjun's evidence, and that their admission does not seem to have been seriously contested on behalf of the defendant. Following, therefore, the principles laid down in Harripria Debi v. Rukmini Debi (2), I do not think we should reject this secondary evidence on appeal merely on the contention that the loss of the original has not been satisfactorily proved. For all that, now the production of the original is from any point of view most unfortunate. Translations of the photographs are given as papers Nos. 15, 17 and 19 on pages 59, 60 and 61 R. The first looks to me like a genuine page from the panda's book; it mentions, Tilak Singh as a son of Dunde Singh, and gives Tilak Singh's four sons, including the plaintiff's donor, Gangu Singh. It purports to do this on the strength of information given by Parbat Singh, brother of Gangu Singh, in the Sambat year 1939,—1882 A. D. The second is, I think, also genuine and good evidence as far as it goes. It purports to be made in the Sambat year 1851—(1794 A. D.) —by Bhikam Singh, son of Sabit Rai, son of Kunjal Shah, son of Dulab Rai, the family being described as Panwar Thakurs of Allahganj. Subsequent entries follow, all dealing with the defendant's side of the pedigree, which I have already noted as sufficiently proved.

The real fight is over the photograph No. 19. Unfortunately, two pages have been photographed side by side, and in the absence of the original, it is simply impossible to tell whether there really was any apparent connection between the two in the book. The left-hand page as it appears in the photograph again begins with the year 1794 A. D., and goes to prove the defendant's side of the pedigree. The right-hand page, if one could only rely on it, sets forth the pedigree put forward by the plaintiff from Bhagwant Rai, through Deo Rai and Shahzade Singh, down to Dunde Singh and, moreover, it distinctly connects the plaintiff's branch with the defendant's by giving Deo Rai and Dulab Rai as amongst the five sons of "Thakur Bhagwant Singh." There is a repetition of a portion of the pedigree in a different hand, with a date "Sambat 1851," and this would seem purposeless in a forgery; but as the evidence stands, we do not know in what context this page really came in Arjun's book, and I cannot say that I feel justified in drawing any clear presumption as to its genuineness, or in assigning to it any evidential value.

The other missing document in the case is a pedigree of Gopal Singh's family, found amongst other papers in Tilok Kunwar's house when her property was taken charge of under the Collector's orders. That there was such a document there at the time is beyond question. It was entered as No. 127 in the list prepared at the time under the direction of Munshi Debi Sahai, Tahsildar. It is not now forthcoming. The suggestion for the defence is that it is really the paper No. 32 printed at page 54 A which is a pedigree of the Wazirpur family taken from the Settlement Records of 1872. Munshi Debi Sahai himself, however, called as a witness for the plaintiffs, is positive that this is not the right paper, and he gives a description of the missing document inconsistent with the appearance of paper No. 32. He is corroborated by Ghansham Das, patwari of Islamganj, and, of course, by all the witnesses for the plaintiff who profess to remember anything about the paper. Gopal Singh, in spite of the confiscation of his estate, was the representative of the elder branch of the Allahganj family. We know he kept amongst his papers an old farman of the Emperor Mohammad Akbar Shah, which was paper No. 128 on the Tahsildar's list, and must date from somewhere about the beginning of the nineteenth century; there seems nothing intrinsically improbable in the suggestion that he also kept an old pedigree bearing the branches of the family then in existence, and it may be kept up to date by subsequent additions. At any rate, it does not appear possible that any sane person should have thought of noting down in an official list the paper No. 32 as the pedigree or family-tree of Gopal Singh. His name is not mentioned in it, nor does it refer to the Allahganj family except by a mention of their distant ancestor, Bache Shah. I am driven, therefore, to the conclusion that an important piece of documentary evidence in the case has disappeared or been made away with. The suggestion that the plaintiff has contrived this disappearance because he found the pedigree did not mention his branch of the family, seems in any case a little difficult, and is contradicted by the fact, proved by the Assistant Collector's order in the mutation case, that Jwala Singh was clamouring for the production of this paper during those proceedings in the middle of the year 1906. Of course, no one accuses the Collector of Farrukhabad of wilfully suppressing evidence; the question is whether the subordinates employed in the Court of Wards Department are to be presumed to be above temptation in such a matter, and whether there is not a reasonable basis for the presumption that the disappearance of this paper was contrived early in 1906 in the interests of Musammat Phul Kuar or in those of the daughter and of the daughter's son of that lady, who appear from other evidence in the case to have survived Musammat Tilok Kuar. I am at any rate not prepared to say that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in drawing an inference favourable to the plaintiff, and to the credibility of the oral evidence for the plaintiff, from the disappearance of this pedigree of Gopal Singh.

This oral evidence upon which the plaintiff's case must in the main rest is certainly voluminous. It can scarcely be contended that it is not sufficient, if believed, to establish his case. After all, the issue is a fairly narrow one. The defendant's side of the pedigree, that is to say, the descent of Lekha Singh (grandfather of Kunwar Bahadur Singh and Lal Bahadur Singh) from Bhagwant Rai is proved by abundant evidence. It remains for the plaintiff to show that his donor Gangu Singh was the son of one Tilok Singh, that his donor Madho Singh was the son of one Bhiwani Singh, that the said Bhawani Singh and Tilok Singh were sons of Dunde Singh who was the son of Shahzade Singh, who was the son of Deo Rai, who was the son of Bhagwant Rai. For the lower steps in their pedigree, on ecan surely trust the oral evidence, if only on the ground that the witnesses could so easily have been contradicted if they had deposed contrary to the facts; and up to Shahzade Singh there is some corroboration in the way of documentary evidence. The crux of the whole case really turns on the question whether Shahzade Singh was in fact son of Deo Rai and Deo Rai of Bhagwant Rai. (It is just worth while to note that the translators of the printed record are responsible for the invention of one "Dillu Rai" whose appearance in place of "Deo Rai" at various points in the record gave us a lot of trouble until we satisfied ourselves that he was a pure myth). Now, considering the way in which pedigrees are undoubtely handed down by oral tradition in Thakur families, there is nothing in itself surprising in the supposition that a number of witnesses connected with these Thakurs of Allahganj and Behta by marriage or otherwise are able to depose with confidence to this comparatively short pedigree. Some of them profess to do so on the strength of oral tradition handed down from their ancestors; others rely both upon oral tradition and on the assertion that they have heard Gopal Singh in his life-time read out the family pedigree kept at his house. This is, of course, the document which has disappeared; and if we are right in assuming that there really was such a pedigree and that it has disappeared, it is obvious that it must have contained the name of Bhagwant Rai and must have shown either Dulab Rai as his only son or other sons as well. So that when witnesses depose positively that they have seen this pedigree, or heard it read, and that it gave Deo Rai as a son of Bhagwant Rai, and Shahzade Singh as a son of Deo Rai, their evidence is entitled to weight. As a matter of fact, it seems to me that much of the difficulty we felt in dealing with the oral evidence is due to the unsatisfactory manner in which it has been recorded. Take Raghunath Singh, the first witness on this point. He is a Thakur of the Panwar clan, a landholder, sixty-eight years of age, and resident of the Hardoi district. He claims descent from Rao Sheopal Singh, the founder of the Wazirpur estate. When he has thus explained his own connection with the family, he goes on to give a pedigree of the family to which the parties belong, starting with Bache Shah, great-grandfather of Bhagwant Rai. The record of the lower Court simply says:—The witness stated the following pedigree, and proceeds to give the whole in the form of a regular genealogy. There are fifty-two names in the pedigree, and the mere effort of memory involved in repeating it appears prodigious. One would wish to have the record in narrative form, arranged so as to convey some sort of idea of what the witness actually did say. Moreover, the mere fact of framing the record in narrative form would have been useful to the Court itself which heard the evidence, as helping it to disregard superfluous statements about collateral branches and concentrate its attention on endeavouring to form a correct opinion as to the precise weight to be assigned to the essential points in the witness' evidence. What grounds had he for feeling certain that Bhagwant Rai had a son called Deo Rai, and that this Deo Rai was the father of Shahzade Singh? We have to make the best of the record as it stands, and we are bound to attach due weight to the fact that the oral evidence for the plaintiff, taken as a whole, was found satisfactory and convincing by the Court which heard it. The cross-examination as a rule does not help one much. Raghunath Singh, for example, was chiefly cross-examined with a view to showing that he could remember less about the pedigree of his own family than about that of the plaintiff. To some extent, this contention was made out; indeed, the witness, perhaps because his powers of memory were temporarily exhausted by the strain which had just been put upon them, made an extraordinary blunder when he omitted the name of his own grandfather from the list he was asked to give of his great-grandfather's sons. It does not seem to me, however, that cross-examination on these lines can by itself lead to any decisive result. Personally, I am a good deal less impressed by any of the points supposed to have been made against Raghu-Nath Singh in cross-examination than by the positive assertion extracted from him that he remembered having himself seen the missing pedigree in Gopal Singh's house and that this pedigree gave the names of Dulab Rai and Deo Rai as brothers. Other witnesses who similarly depose at length to the pedigree set up by the plaintiff are Ganga Singh, who is the son of a sister of Madho Singh; Balwant Singh, who is a connexion by marriage of the defendant's branch of the family, Badhi Singh, an aged Thakur who comes from a village in the Shahjehanpore district, and says he is connected by marriage with the same family although he falls into some apparent contradictions in the course of his cross examination as to the nature of that connexion; Madho Singh, a Panwar Thakur from the Farrukhabad district who claims descent from the Wazirpore family, Hanwant Singh, Bhup Singh and Komal Singh, also Panwar Thakurs and claiming the same connexion; Kunjan Singh who is a connexion by marriage of Gangu Singh; Nibha Singh another Panwar Thokur claiming descent from Bharat Shah, grandfather of Bhagwant Rai's grandfather; Budhi Ram, a Brahmin from village Behta, who says that his father was family priest of the Panwar Thakurs both at Allahganj and at Behta, and Narain Singh, another Panwar Thakur, who gives in detail a tremendous pedigree going right back to Rao Sheopal Singh. All these witnesses were subjected to detailed cross-examination and their evidence has been criticised before us on much the same lines as I have already indicated in discussing the cross-examination of Raghu Nath Singh. It would be easy to criticise any one of these depositions upon matters of detail; but it cannot be denied that we have here a large body of respectable evidence, in itself entitled to considerable weight, and not shown to be seriously tainted with partiality which has been accepted without hesitation by the Court before which it was produced.

Over and beyond this, the plaintiff has produced a good deal of other evidence in support of the proposition that the Panwar Thakurs of the village Behta were generally regarded by persons likely to know the truth as a junior branch of the Panwar Thakurs of Allahganj, and were treated as such upon various ceremonial occasions. There is a great deal of evidence that certain observances in token of mourning are carried out by the Behta people in the case of death in the Allahganj family and vice versa. As a specimen of the evidence on this part of the case, I take Naurang Singh, a Panwar Thakur from village Kumbhror, which is another of the villages owned by a branch of the family which has its head-quarters at Wazirgunj. This man deposes generally that the Thakurs of Allahganj and Behta are recognised as belonging to one and the same family, and that they shave their heads and moustaches in token of mourning "on the death of a person in each other's family." He gives instances in which this ceremony was observed. He adds that on the occasion of certain formal assemblies, when the Panwar Thakurs who claim connexion with the family which has its head-quarters at Wazipore come together, the Thakurs from Behta are treated as being connected in a special manner with the Thakurs of Allahganj, though placed in a position of inferiority as a junior branch of the family. I may add that this witness as well as others, who do not profess to repeat the entire pedigree, is prepared to state positively, on the authority of family tradition, that Dulab Rai, the ancestor of the Allahganj Thakurs, had a younger brother named Deo Rai, from whom the Thakurs of Behta were descended. It may be added finally that admissions were obtained from more than one witness for the defendant which go to corroborate the plaintiff's case. The witness Narain Singh admitted that the Thakurs of Behta were at any rate descendants of the eponymous Rao Sheopal Singh. He also admitted that several witnesses who have given evidence for the plaintiff were connexions of the same family. Thanna Singh, a Panwar Thakur of Wazirpore, after giving evidence in favour of the defendant as to Gopal Singh's auction purchase of 1879 having been effected with money which really belonged to Kunwar Bahadur, proceeded in cross-examination to make a number of admissions in favour of the plaintiff on the question of pedigree. He distinctly stated that, according to family tradition derived by him from his ancestors, Bhagwant Rai had in fact two sons, Dulab Rai and Deo Rai, and that Lala Singh and his brothers, who appear in the plaintiff's pedigree as first cousins of Madho Singh, were descended from Deo Rai. Such evidence as was attempted to be produced by the defendant in rebuttal of the plaintiff's case on the question of pedigree is distinctly meagre and of a purely negative character. No attempt was made to produce any witness who professed himself able to carry back the genealogy of Madho Singh and Gangu Singh for four or five generations, and so to demonstrate the precise point at which the pedigree set up by the plaintiff deviates from the truth.

It seems to me useless to discuss the oral evidence in further detail. In a general way, it may be said that the credibility of the witnesses for the plaintiff does not seem to be assailed on the ground that they have any adequate motive for making statements which they know to be false, but rather upon the mere ground that they could not have had adequate and certain knowledge of the facts to which they depose. The pedigree of what may be described as the noble branch of the family, that of the taluqdars of Allahganj, would, I think, be a matter of notoriety amongst members of their clan who claim descent from the same common ancestor, and even amongst Thakurs connected with the family by intermarriage. There seems to me no element of improbability whatever involved in the fact that a large number of witnesses produced for the plaintiff should be able to repeat this part of the pedigree correctly. Indeed, there is no real doubt that they have done so. As regards the Thakurs of Behta, there is this much at any rate to be said, that they seem to have been widely recognised as a junior branch of the Allahganj family and as more closely connected with that family than any other sub-division of the same clan could claim to be. It must, moreover, have been fairly obvious to every one, for a good many years before this litigation opened, that the direct main line of Dulab Rai was coming to an end in the persons of Kunwar Bahadur Singh and Lal Bahadur Singh with the possibility thus opening of the succession to a large estate, having to go into a collateral branch, it is perhaps not surprising that attention should have been drawn to the pedigree of the Behta Thakurs, and that a number of witnesses should now be found who are able to recall the same with confidence on the strength of oral tradition handed down in their family. On a review of the entire case, I am unable to dissent from the finding of the Court below that the plaintiffs have proved their pedigree by reasonable and credible evidence. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Sale by widow to next reversioner—Legal necessity.

A sale by a Hindu widow to the nearest reversioner, living at the time of the sale, is equivalent to a sale with the consent of the said reversioner and is, therefore, sufficient to pass a good title independently of any direct evidence in support of the plea that the sale was for legal necessity.

Mr. Benimadho Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. W. Dillon (with him Mr. Mangal Proshad Bhargava), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal raises a plain question of law. A Hindu widow in possession as such of her late husband's estate sold certain zemindari property which formed a portion of the said estate to the next reversioner, that is to say, to the one person who would have been entitled to succeed to the entire estate if the succession had opened by the death of the widow at the very time of the sale. As a matter of fact, the vendee died before the succession actually opened, and the plaintiff and two other persons (impleaded as pro forma defendants) were the nearest reversioners at that moment. The plaintiff sues to recover from the heirs of the vendee his one-third share in the property sold by the widow. Both Courts below have held that a sale to the nearest reversioner living at the time of the sale is equivalent to a sale with the consent of the said reversioner and was, therefore, sufficient to pass a good title independently of any direct evidence in support of the plea that the sale was for legal necessity. Now, there can be no doubt that if the widow had transferred the whole of her late husband's estate, instead of only a portion of the same, to the next reversioner, the latter would have obtained a clear and indisputable title, independently of any evidence as to legal necessity. Moreover, since the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bajrangi Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (1), it cannot be denied that if the widow had sold the property now in dispute to a stranger, with the consent of the nearest reversioners, the vendee would have acquired a clear title, which the actual reversioners on the death of the widow could not have contested by calling on him to prove by direct evidence that the sale was one for legal necessity. Nevertheless, the appellant contends that on the sale now in dispute the vendee took nothing but the life estate of the widow. He has on his side two decisions of the Madras High Court, Marudamuthu Nadan v. Siniwasa Pillai (2) and Rangappa Naik v. Kamti Naik (3). The former decision, as a whole, can no longer be considered good law since the Privy Council ruling in Bajrangi Singh's case (1). The latter has been adversely criticised by the Calcutta High Court in Pulin Chandra Mandal v. Balai Mandal (4), where it is suggested that the Madras High Court's view is based on a misunderstanding of the Privy Council ruling in the older case of Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (5).

(5) 19 C. 236; 19 I. A. 30.

I agree with the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court. In Behari Lal's case (5), the widow had in fact transferred to the next reversioner the whole of her husband's estate, and not merely a portion of it but she had endeavoured so to frame the transaction as to reserve her own life-interest. It was held that she could not do this, but that to confer a good title, the transfer must be one of such a nature that "the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee." The meaning is that qua the property transferred, the widow must reserve nothing to herself, the idea that she could not execute a complete and valid transfer of a portion only of the estate could not be before the Court in a case in which the transfer, if valid, at all did in fact cover the entire estate.

Moreover, the rule laid down by the Madras High Court would seem to lead to extraordinary and undesirable results in actual working. A Hindu widow feels herself in need of ready-money, she goes to the next reversioner, lays her case before him and asks his permission to sell a portion of the estate. It is now admitted that he can give her permission to sell to a stranger, and that his consent will relieve such stranger vendee from the obligation of hereafter proving legal necessity for the sale otherwise than by pleading the presumption raised by the consent of the next reversioner. According to the Madras High Court, however, if the next reversioner wishes to purchase himself, and so to keep the property in the family, he can only do so subject to the risk that he himself or his heirs after him may be put to proof, perhaps many years later, of the fact that there was legal necessity for the sale. On this view of the law, some curious questions might well arise in case the next reversioner thought fit, as a matter of precaution, to arrange for a sale in favour of a relative of his own.

I prefer, therefore, to follow the Calcutta view, as the learned District Judge has done.

There was a suggestion thrown out in argument that the deed in suit does not purport to convey more than the widow's life-estate. I have examined the document, and I fail to see in what other or clearer terms a complete transfer by way of sale could have been effected. There is no force in this contention.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Abandonment—Notice to Collector, if necessary—Abandonment complete even without such notice—Landlord may prove abandonment without giving notice—Question of intention—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 87 cls. (2) & (3).

A notice to the Collector under clause (2) of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not necessary to make an abandonment complete and effectual. The notice is important for the purpose of the suit which the tenant is allowed to bring under clause (3), but is not essential to complete the abandonment; and a landlord who has not given such notice is still at liberty to prove that an abandonment has in fact taken place. The question of abandonment or no abandonment is one of intention to be determined upon the facts of the particular case in which the question arises.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants were formerly the tenants of the plaintiffs in respect of a non-transferable ryoti holding. In 1897, the defendants mortgaged the holding by way of conditional sale and put the mortgagee in possession. It is clear from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that he has found that the defendants then left the village without making any arrangement for the payment of the rent due to the plaintiff. On the 7th Falgun 1306, that is, in the year 1900 one Nabin Nath executed a kabuliat in the plaintiff's favour for a term of five years, which expired before the present suit was brought. Two days after, he acquired the mortgage interest from mesne assignee and he then entered into possession of the holding. He remained in possession till the year 1904 when the defendants brought a suit against him to redeem the mortgage. In that suit they were successful and upon payment into Court of the sum due upon the mortgage, they were restored to possession. The plaintiff then brought the present suit to recover possession on the footing that the defendants had abondoned the holding and that as against him they had no right to evict Nabin Nath and take possession themselves. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that there had been no abandonment and that the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendants had never ceased and still subsisted. The Subordinate Judge in the Court below came to a different conclusion. He found that the evidence established an abandonment of the holding by the defendants in 1894 and upon that basis he made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The decision before us has turned principally on the effect of clauses (2) and (3) of section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, the provisions contained in those clauses do not help the defendants.

It is true that the plaintiff gave no notice to the Collector under clause (2) of his intention to treat the holding as abandoned but such a notice is not necessary to make an abandonment complete and effectual. The notice is important for the purpose of the suit which the tenant is allowed to bring under clause (3) but is not essential to complete an abandonment; and a landlord who has not given such notice is still at liberty to prove that an abandonment has in fact taken place. As authority, we need only refer to the case of Ram Pershad v. Jawahir (1) where earlier cases are considered. As there pointed out, the question of abandonment or no abandonment is one of intention to be determined upon the facts of the particular case in which the question arises. In the present case, the finding of the Subordinate Judge upon that issue is in the affirmative and as we are unable to say that the Subordinate Judge committed any error of law in ariving at that finding, it is now conclusive. If the payment of the mortgage-debt by the defendant in 1904 or 1905 be, so far as it goes, some evidence as to what their intention was in 1894, the Subordinate Judge regarded it as evidence to which in the circumstances, no great weight could be attached and we cannot say that he was wrong in law in so treating it. If they abandoned the holding in 1894, they were not in a position after the plaintiff had re-entered in 1900 to change their minds or their intention and go back to the original state of things.

The finding on the question of abandonment is sufficient to support the decree which the Subordinate Judge has made. The defendants had no right as against the plaintiff to transfer the holding by sale or mortgage and the plaintiff is not concerned with the mortgage transaction or any of its developments. On the other hand, the holding having been abandoned, the plaintiff had a right to re-enter as he did and to settle the land with another tenant. Whatever right the defendants may have had against Nabin Nath as between the plaintiff and the defendants, the possession of Nabin Nath must be treated as the possession of the plaintiff and not as the possession of the defendants. The plaintiff was entitled to treat Nabin Nath's possession as rightful possession under the kabuliats and cannot be forced to treat it as wrongful possession under the mortgage. As against the plaintiff, the defendants by their own act have deprived themselves of the title which they once had and are in no better position than trespassers. If it be of any importance, it is not the fact that the person now entitled to actual possession is Nabin Nath, because the term for which he engaged has long since expired.

It is idle to say that because the plaintiff gave no notice under clause (2), the defendant had no opportunity to bring a suit under clause (3). What issue could have been tried in such a suit except the issue which has been tried and finally determined between the parties in the present suit, whether or not in 1894 there was a voluntary abandonment of the holding on the part of the defendants? What difference does it make whether that issue was raised in a suit instituted by the defendants or in a suit instituted by the plaintiff?

The payment of the mortgage-debt did not, as is apparently suggested for the defendants, give them any sort of equity against the plaintiff. The transfer by mortgage was an infringement of his rights. He was not bound to recognise the transfer and never did so. He was no party to the suit for redemption and the payment made by the defendants and their recovery of possession was subject to his rights which he was free to assert if he chose, unless the defendants were able to prevail upon him to come to some understanding with them. It is not to be wondered at if the plaintiff considers them bad tenants but it may not even now be too late for them to approach him with a view to arriving at an arrangement.

We have said that the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the question of abandonment is sufficient to support his decree. But, on the face of the record, there is also this observation to be made. As we have shown, the defendants were in effect evicted by the plaintiff in 1900 and two years later their right (assuming that they had any right) to recover possession by suit against the plaintiff became barred under Article 3 of Schedule III of the Tenancy Act [Ram Pershad v. Jowahir (1)]. The result is that in the view we take, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 225 OF 1912.

NAZIMUDDI—ACCUSED—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Practice—Assessors' opinions how to be taken—Cross-examining assessors, contrary to law—Right of private defence—Rioting—Right of private defence, if exceeded—Punishment—Conviction set aside—Re-trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 403, 423.

A trial is altogether vitiated if the assessors are not asked and are apparently not allowed to give an independent opinion on the case.

The cross-examination of the assessors is entirely contrary to law. Section 309 of the Code of Criminal Procedure gives the Judge no power to question the assessors until they have delivered their opinions orally and he has recorded such opinions.

If there is anything obscure in their verdicts, there is no objection to the Judge asking questions to clear up such obscurity; but he is bound to allow the assessors to express their own opinions independently in their own words on the whole case before interfering with them in any way or asking them any question whatever except "what is your opinion."

When a Court finds that an accused had the right of private defence in any case, it ought not to convict any of them of rioting. It is impossible that a man who is acting in the exercise of a legal right can be a member of an unlawful assembly.

Any person who exceeds the right of private defence is liable to be punished for the specific offence of culpable homicide or other crime which he may be found to have committed in excess of that right.

When a conviction is set aside and a re-trial ordered, the whole case is re-opened and the accused must be tried again on all the charges originally framed. Having regard to the provisions of section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the provisions of section 403, in that respect, cannot apply.

Krishna Dhan Mandal v. Queen-Empress, 22 C. 377, relied upon.

Appeal from the conviction and sentence, two years' rigorous imprisonment, passed by the Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj, under section 147, Indian Penal Code, on March 8th, 1912.

Mr. Jasperz, Counsel, with Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the conviction and sentence passed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Backerganj upon one Nazimuddi. The Judge, disagreeing with both the assessors as to the innocence of the accused, though he says he agrees with their findings of fact, has sentenced the appellant Nazimuddi to two years' rigorous imprisonment under section 147, Indian Penal Code.

The trial appears to us to be altogether vitiated by the fact that the assessors were not asked and apparently not allowed to give an independent opinion on the case.

We have pointed out to this learned Judge before and we must do so again that his method of cross-examining the assessors is entirely contrary to law and results in grave miscarriage of justice. The law, section 309 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, gives the Judge a discretion to sum up the evidence for the benefit of the assessors if he thinks necessary but it gives him no power to question them until they have delivered their opinions orally and he has recorded such opinions.

If there is anything obscure in their verdicts, there is no objection to the Judge asking questions to clear up such obscurity; but he is bound to allow the assessors to express their own opinions independently in their own words on the whole case before interfering with them in any way or asking them any question whatever except "what is your opinion." We never get a verdict on the facts from assessors who sit with this learned Judge and we are always greatly embarassed on appeal by his erroneous practice.

But in this case, the conviction cannot stand on the face of the judgment.

The findings are throughout contradictory and it is difficult to understand what the Judge meant to hold, but when he did find that the accused had the right of private defence in any case, he could not convict them or any of them of rioting. It is impossible that a man who is acting in the exercise of a legal right can be a member of an unlawful assembly.

Any person who exceeds the right of private defence is liable to be punished for the specific offence of culpable homicide or other crime which he may be found to have committed in excess of the right.

The conviction under section 147 is, therefore, on the findings of the Judge, untenable and must be set aside. But we think there must be a re-trial in this case since the conclusion that the accused had the right of private defence is erroneous on the Judge's own findings. He nowhere finds that the complainant had no bona fide claim to the paddy he was carrying away. He finds indeed to the contrary that the complainant, as guardian of his step-son, who was the rightful owner of the land left by his father, had been getting land for the boy's maintenance and that lately owing to a quarrel the accused had arbitrarily denied his rights. He finds that complainant married the boy's mother 8 or 9 years before and there had been no dispute hitherto and, therefore, there must have been an amicable arrangement which has recently broken down. But this does not make complainant a thief or a trespasser and there is no right of private defence against a person asserting a bona fide right. Then, again, he finds that the assaults did not take place in the field but outside Afiluddi's house where the complainant says it did, and that the attack was on the back of two defenceless laden coolies who were not committing any offence. He also seems convinced that it is quite likely that Nazimuddi struck the blow which killed Yakutali but he says that the evidence is entirely that of the complainant and his men. Of course, it is. The evidence for the prosecution must be used to prove the prosecution case. Independent persons are not likely to turn up in cases of this kind. He says people living near should have been examined but there is no allegation that any of them saw the occurrence. He does not say he has any reason to disbelieve the complainant and his witnesses. These are only a few examples of contradictory and inconsistent findings which we cannot further enlarge upon for fear of prejudicing the case on re-trial.

When a conviction is set aside and a re-trial ordered, it is settled law that the whole case is re-opened and the accused must be tried again on all the charges originally framed and having regard to the provisions of section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the provisions of section 403 in that respect cannot apply. Krishna Dhan Mandal v. Queen-Empress (1).

We might, following the rule in Queen Empress v. Jabanulla (2), alter the finding ourselves but in that case we should be precluded from interfering with the sentence and, as pointed out by Banerjee, J., this is not one of those cases where such an alteration could be made inasmuch as the accused has been acquitted of the major charge and convicted on a very minor one. He can only be dealt with on the major charge by directing a re-trial which opens the whole case and places it upon the same footing as if there had been no previous trial at all.

We do not think it necessary to refer to our powers in revision under section 439, which we could exercise independently without any reference to section 417 which is a purely enabling section giving the Local Government certain powers and by implication taking them away from private parties but not in any way touching the jurisdiction or revisional powers of this Court in all matters connected with Criminal trials whether there has been a conviction or an acquittal.

Had it been necessary to get over the difficulty raised in Krishna Dhan v. Queen-Empress (1) by the use of our revisional powers, we should have had no hesitation in using them. But the setting aside of a finding of the Sessions Court under section 423 enables this Court to order a re-trial and it is now settled law that that order re-opens the whole case.

The conviction and sentence under section 147 is set aside and a re-trial ordered on the original charges before the learned Sessions Judge of Backerganj, who will approach the case with an open mind.

The appellant will remain on bail to the satisfaction of the Sessions Judge pending the re-trial.

Re-trial ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (6) (7) (a)—Sanction to prosecute—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Sanction granted by Additional District Judge—Power to revoke sanction—Central Provinces Courts Act (II of 1904), ss. 15, 17.

RAMKRISHNAPURI v. MOHANLAL.

Clause (a)of sub-section(7), of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, defines the word 'ordinarily' for all cases where appeals from a lower Court lie to more than one higher Court.

When a Civil Court in practice tries suits of values so different that appeals from some of its decisions lie to one and appeals from other decisions to another higher Court, then the Court authorized to revoke or grant a sanction under sub-section (6) of section 195, is the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction.

Revision against the order of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, dated the 25th November 1911, revoking the sanction granted by the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, on the 11th August 1911.

Messrs. P. S. Kotwal and P. R. Naidu, for the Applicant.

Mr. J. Mittra and Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Divisional Judge, Nagpur Division, on the 25th November 1911, revoking a sanction given by the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, for the applicant Mohanlal's prosecution for an offence punishable under sections 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code.

The proceedings arise out of Suit No. 14 of 1897 instituted in the Court of the Civil Judge, Nagpur, and decided by that officer on the 9th October 1897. The claim was for money and the defendant Sitaram was directed by the decree to pay Rs. 12,029-12-10, costs included. Sitaram died in July 1909 and in the same month, his widow, Deoki Bai, was brought on the record as his legal representative. Later in the same month, a warrant was issued for attachment of certain moveables described in an inventory given as required by rule 12, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. The Nazir himself was sent to carry out the attachment but reported on the 21st July that he had been unable to complete it because he had been obstructed by Mohanlal, brother-in-law of the deceased judgment-debtor. The report was read by the District Judge, Mr. W. R. Dhobley, in the presence of Mohanlal on the 4th September 1909, and the latter was ordered to file a written statement showing cause why he should not be sent for trial for an offence punishable under section 183, Indian Penal Code. This order was complied with on the 11th September and the District Judge then decided to defer decision regarding Mohanlal's prosecution till some objections filed in respect of articles, which the Nazir had succeeded in attaching, should have been disposed of. The last of the objections was settled on the 7th May 1910, and in the following July, the decree-holder moved the then District Judge, Mr. Prem Narayan, to sanction Mohanlal's prosecution under sections 183 and 353, Indian Penal Code In August 1910, the District Judge transferred the application to the Additional District Judge for disposal. Pleadings and evidence on both sides were recorded and the sanction already referred to was accorded on the 11th August 1911.

Mohanlal moved the Divisional Judge to revoke this sanction. At the hearing, the decree-holder took the preliminary objection that the Divisional Judge is not the authority empowered under sub section(6), section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, to revoke a sanction granted by a Judge of a District Court. In August 1911, the Additional District Judge was trying all suits of the Nagpur district over Rs. 3,000 and not over Rs. 25,000 in value besides dealing with all applications arising thereout. The Divisional Judge held that inasmuch as suits over Rs. 3,000 and not over Rs. 5,000 in value are necessarily more numerous than those over Rs. 5,000, appeals from the Additional District Judge would ordinarily lie to his Court. He referred also to section 17 (3), Central Provinces Courts Act, 1904, which makes the District Court and any Additional Judge thereof subordinate to the Divisional Court. On the merits, he considered that sanction to Mohanlal's prosecution should not have been given.

The main question argued here is whether the Divisional Judge had jurisdiction to revoke the sanction accorded by the Additional District Judge. According to the contention on behalf of the decree-holder, the applicant for revision, section 13, Central Provinces Courts Act, shows the intention of the Legislature to be, that ordinarily the District Court shall try only suits beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge, i. e., over Rs. 10,000 in value. The conclusion pressed for is that the expression "Court to which appeals ordinarily lie" in section 195 (7), Criminal Procedure Code, makes the Judicial Commissioner's Court the only one which can revoke a sanction granted by a Judge of a District Court, inasmuch as all appeals from the decisions of such a Judge in suits over Rs. 10,000 in value, lie to the Judicial Commissioner's Court.

It will be convenient to set out here in extenso the provisions of law which have to be construed: they form parts of sub-sections (6) and (7), section 195, in the Code of 1898 and run thus :—

"(6) Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate.....

(7) For the purposes of this section, every Court shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie, that is to say :—

(a) where such appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate."

The corresponding provisions in the Code of 1882 were thus worded :—

"Any sanction given or refused under this section may be revoked or granted by any authority to which the authority giving or refusing it is subordinate.....

For the purposes of this section, every Court, other than a Court of Small Causes, shall be deemed to be subordinate only to the Court to which appeals from the former Court ordinarily lie."

No explanation of the term "ordinarily" was thus vouchsafed in the older Code. It was, however, interpreted in Anant Ramchandra In re (1) and Maduray Pillay v. Elderton (2) to mean "in the majority of cases." This interpretation is convenient enough in connection with Criminal Courts ; for the great majority of decisions passed by such a Court must necessarily be appealable under section 407, 408 or 410, Criminal Procedure Code. But the position is very different when we come to Civil Courts, which exercise jurisdiction without restriction as regards value in ordinary suits and also deal with suits and proceedings under special Acts such as the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, and the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. Can it reasonably be expected that a person dissatisfied with the order of a District Court in the Central Provinces on his application for sanction to prosecute another shall take out statistics of the suits instituted in that Court by values ? How is the period for which statistics should be taken to be determined ? All difficulty on this score has been removed by clause (a) of section 195 (7) of the 1898 Code, which, in perfectly general terms, defines the term under consideration for all cases where appeals from a lower Court lie to more than one higher Court. There is no need for statistics. Owing to the character or amount of its litigation, a particular district may be without enough Munsifs to try all suits not over Rs. 1,000 in value, with the result that a Subordinate Judge or even the District Judge may have to try suits within the jurisdiction of a Munsif's Court. Similarly, the local Court of the Subordinate Judge may be unable to cope with all suits over Rs. 1,000 and not over Rs. 10,000 in value. These positions are expressly contemplated and provided for by clauses (b) and (c) of section 15, Central Provinces Courts Act, 1904, with which may be compared section 17, Central Provinces Civil Courts Act, 1885, section 39, Punjab Courts Act, 1884, and section 21, Bengal, North Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887. That the Legislature had the orders of Civil Courts specially in its contemplation when it enacted clause (a) in sub-section (7) of section 195 in the 1898 Code is further indicated by the fact that in section 405 where the expression "Court to which appeals ordinarily lie" again occurs, no explanation has been inserted : the Courts whose orders are therein dealt with are exclusively Criminal Courts. I hold, then, that clause (a) aforesaid furnishes a complete definition of the term "ordinarily" in the cases which it covers, and, consequently, that when a Civil Court in practice tries suits of values so different that appeals from some of its decisions lie to one and appeals from other decisions to another higher Court, there is no need to consider, for the purpose of applying sub-section (6), section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, which set of values gives it the greater part of its work. It follows that the Divisional Judge had jurisdiction in the present case.

(1) 11 B. 438.

The merits of the case have also been argued. The main point urged is that the Divisional Judge misapprehended the evidence when he worte that the Nazir intended to have the person of the judgment-debtor and her female companions searched. There is certainly room for this contention, but nonetheless I agree with the Divisional Judge that in view of the long delay in applying for sanction, the interests of justice do not require that the application should be allowed. The objections, till the disposal of which Mr. Dhobley postponed decision of the question orally raised by the decree-holder on the 4th September 1909, namely, whether Mohanlal should be put on his trial for unlawfully obstructing the Nazir, could obviously have no connection with property which owing to the alleged obstruction the Nazir refrained from attaching. The delay which has occurred will certainly add greatly to the difficulty of ascertaining the truth as to Mohanlal's conduct and was quite possibly due in some measure to a determination on the decree-holder's part that if the objections failed, he would not press the charge of obstruction. I decline then to interfere with the Divisional Judge's order revoking sanction. The application for revision is dismissed.

Application dismissed.

A. was tried at one trial on two charges; the first charge was under section 408 of the Penal Code for having committed criminal breach of trust as a servant; the second charge was under section 465 for making false documents for the purpose of committing the offence of criminal breach of trust as a servant. There was only one act of criminal breach of trust charged against A. It was contended for A. that the whole trial was illegal and void as he was tried at one trial for two distinct offences:

Held, that the case fell under section 235 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, as there was only one act of criminal breach of trust charged against A., and the falsification of accounts charged was an offence which formed part of the transaction as to the criminal breach of trust, because the accounts alleged to have been falsified related to the act charged under section 408 of the Penal Code. The offences charged were, therefore, all offences connected with one another and arising out of the same transaction.

Application for revision from conviction and sentence, recorded by the Second Additional Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, on appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Sub Divisional Magistrate, First Class, at Viramgaum.

Mr. L. A. Shah, for the Applicant.
Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Complainant.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner Lalji Bhanji was accused No. 1 at the trial before the Magistrate, and the charge against him was, first, under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code, and, secondly, under section 465 of the said Code. The first charge was that he in or about the months of January and February 1911, at Viramgaum, being a clerk of Messrs. Byramji and Ardeshir, and, being entrusted with Rs. 204-4-0 in such capacity, did commit criminal breach of trust punishable under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code. The second charge was that he in or about January, February and March 1911, at Viramgaum, did make false documents, viz., the transhipping register, daily reports and monthly bills (Exhibits E., F. and G.), intending that the documents forged shall be used for the purpose of committing the offence of criminal breach of trust by a servant. He was convicted by the Magistrate of both these offences. But in appeal the learned Sessions Judge confirmed the conviction on the first charge, and reversed that on the second charge upon the ground that the petitioner ought not to have been tried for both these offences because they were not of the same kind. The learned Sessions Judge held that the trial on the second charge was illegal. It is now urged before us by Mr. Shah, the learned Pleader for the petitioner, that the whole trial was illegal and void because the petitioner had been tried for two offences of distinct kinds; and that the illegality, admitted by the learned Sessions Judge as to the second charge, tainted also the trial on the first charge. In support of his contention, Mr. Shah relies upon the decision in Emperor v. Nathalal Bapuji (1), which has been followed by the Madras High Court in Kasi Viswanathan v. Emperor (2). But, in our opinion, those two decisions are distinguishable from the present case. In the Madras case, the accused had been tried and convicted on a charge which alleged three distinct acts of criminal breach of trust under section 409, and three distinct acts of falsification of accounts, which were offences under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code. That is to say, there were six distinct offences in all, and the learned Judges who decided that case held that section 235 did not cover the case because the falsification of accounts connected with one act of criminal breach of trust could not be said to have formed part of the same transaction with the other acts of criminal breach of trust. They proceeded to remark in their judgment as follows:—"Such act of criminal breach of trust may, no doubt, be said to form part of the same transaction with the falsification of accounts made with a view to conceal that act of breach of trust." But with reference to that, they said that the principle could not apply because in the case before them the charge did not form part of the same transaction with the other breaches of trust and falsifications which were committed on altogether different occasions. That was also the principle of the ruling of this Court in Emperor v. Nathalal Bapuji (1). There also, there were several acts of criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts, some of them unconnected with the rest, and charged against the accused.

The present case falls within clause (1) of section 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Here there was only one act of criminal breach of trust charged against the petitioner, and the falsification of accounts charged was an offence which formed part of the transaction as to the criminal breach of trust, because the accounts alleged to have been falsified related to the act charged under section 408, Indian Penal Code. Therefore, they were all offences connected with one another and arising out of the same transaction.

For these reasons, the conviction and sentence must be confirmed and the Rule discharged.

Rule discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 149, 325—Rioting—Charge of grievous hurt by implication under s. 149—Acquittal under rioting—Conviction under substantive offence not allowed.

When a Court draws up a charge under section 325 read with section 149, Penal Code, it clearly intimates to the accused persons that they did not cause grievous hurt to any body themselves but that they are guilty by implication of such offence, inasmuch as some body else, in prosecution of the common object of the riot in which they were engaged, did cause such grievous hurt.

When these persons are acquitted of rioting, all the offences which they are said to have committed by implication disappear, and they cannot be convicted of the substantive offence under section 325.

Section 34 can only come into operation when there is a substantive charge of causing grievous hurt. The considerations which govern section 34 are entirely different and in many respects the opposite of those which govern section 149.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Rangpur, dated April 12th, 1912, convicting the petitioners under sections 147, 325/149, of the Indian Penal Code, and sentencing them each under section 147 to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months and further directing them under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, each to execute a bond of Rs. 100 with two sureties of Rs. 100 each to keep the peace for one year, which order was on appeal modified by the Sessions Judge of Rangpur, on May 13th, 1912.

JUDGMENT.—We are clearly of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute and a re-trial ordered upon the ground on which it was issued. When a Court draws up a charge under section 325 read with section 149, it clearly intimates to the accused persons that they did not cause grievous hurt to anybody themselves, but that they are guilty by implication of such offence, inasmuch as some body else, in prosecution of the common object of the riot in which they were engaged did cause such grievous hurt. Now, when these persons are acquitted of rioting, obviously, all the offences which they are said to have committed by implication disappear, and the defence cannot be called upon to answer to the specific act of causing grievous hurt merely because it may have appeared in the evidence; for the Court having already declared by its charge that they did not commit a specific act and not having given effect to the evidence for the prosecution by framing a fresh charge, the defence would not be justified in wasting the time of the Court in defending themselves on a charge which had never been brought against them. This will be perfectly clear if the offence disclosed by the evidence was the heinous one of murder and the Court framed no charge of murder, but went on with the charge of rioting. Obviously, in that case, the accused could not be called upon to defend themselves on the charge of murder, for it is only in the Sessions Court that the said charge can be tried. The Magistrate appeals to the provisions of section 34, but section 34 can only come into operation when there is a substantive charge of causing grievous hurt. The considerations which govern section 34 are entirely different and in many respects the opposite of those which govern section 149, and it is now settled law that when a person is charged by implication under section 149 he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence.

The present conviction, therefore, is bad and must be set aside and the accused must be re-tried on the substantive charge under section 325. They will remain on the same bail pending their re-trial.

Conviction set aside.

Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890), ss. 57, 58 —Finder, rights of—Finder producing property on Police requisition—Rights not waived—Power of Magistrate to order property to vest in Government.*

Where the finder of property hands it over to the Police on their requisition but does not waive his rights as finder, the Magistrate ought not, under section 58 (2) of the Bombay District Police Act, to order the property to vest in Government.

Reference by the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad.

FACTS.—In this case, a person found a currency note of Rs. 50 on a public road. When the Police came to know of the matter, the finder was required to produce the note and he complied with the requisition.

The matter was reported to the Magistrate

* The sections runs as follows:—

57. The Police shall take temporary charge of all unclaimed property found by or made over to them; and shall deliver all such property to the Police-patel, if any, of the town or village in which the same was found, and take a receipt therefor, from the patel who shall forward such property to the Magistrate to whom such Police-patel is subordinate. If in any such case, there be no Police-patel of such town or village, the Police shall forthwith report to such Magistrate as the Magistrate of the district shall, from time to time, appoint in this behalf, and act thereafter as the said first-mentioned Magistrate shall direct.

58. (1) If the property, regarding which a report is made to a Magistrate under the last preceding section or under section 19 of the Bombay Village Police Act, 1867, appears to such Magistrate to have been left by a person who has died intestate and without known heirs and to be likely, if sold in public auction, to realize more than ten rupees net proceeds, he shall communicate with the District Judge with a view to its being dealt with under the provisions of section 10 of Regulation VIII of 1827, a Regulation to provide for the formal recognition of heirs, etc, or other law in force.

(2) In any other case, the Magistrate shall issue a proclamation specifying the articles of which such property consists, and requiring any person who may have a claim thereto to appear before himself or some other officer whom he appoints in this behalf and establish his claim within six months from the date of such proclamation. If no person within such period establishes his claim to such property, it shall be at the disposal of Government, and may be sold in public auction under the orders of the Magistrate.

(3) The provisions of section 10 of the Regulation aforesaid shall be deemed not to apply to intestate property which is dealt with by a Magistrate under sub-section (2).

who ordered that the note should vest in the Government. The District Magistrate referred the case for the decision of the High Court on the following grounds:—

The law as regards the rights and liabilities of a finder of goods is contained in sections 71, 168 and 169 of the Contract Act. Among other rights, the finder is entitled to the possession of his find as against every one except the true owner (Armorie v. Delamirie, Smith's Leading Cases). Again, Explanation 2 to section 403 of the Indian Panal Code enacts additional rights and liabilities of the finder. The reasons given by the Magistrate for the final order imply that he had on the record, and did consider, the claim of the finder before he passed the order vesting the note in Government and thus there can be no presumption that the finder had waived his rights as such. As a matter of fact, it was on the Police requisition that the note was handed over and the finder did apply to the District Superintendent of Police before the final order was passed. The scope of section 57, District Police Act, is limited to property found by the Police or made over to the Police by the finder suo motu, not under requisition. Under those circumstances, the order vesting the note in Government under section 58 (2) of the District Police Act should be quashed and the note ordered to be returned to the finder.

JUDGMENT.—The Court quashes the order of the First Class Magistrate of Ahmehabad and directs that the currency note of Rs. 50 be returned to the finder Alimia Abasimia.

Order accordingly.

Madras Forest Act (Mad. Act V of 1882), s. 26, rr. 8 & 9—Charge under rule 8—Omission to state that the place from where accused cut tree was "reserved forest"—Material defect.

A charge framed under rule 8, section 26 of the Madras Forest Act, must clearly state that the place from where the accused cut a tree was a 'reserved forest.' The omission to state this is a material defect and vitiates the trial.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the conviction and sentence of the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bellary, in Criminal Appeal No. 20 of 1911, dated 5th September 1911, presented against the sentence of the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate of Adoni, in C. C. No. 252 of 1911.

Messrs. R. Sadagopachariar and V. Vencatachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. L. Rosario, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this case the accused has been convicted of an offence under rules 8 and 15 framed under section 26, Madras Forest Act, V of 1882. The charge runs in these terms:—"You are charged with having committed an offence under rules 8 and 15, framed under section 26 of Act V of 1882, in having got the accused Nos. 3 to 6 to cut without license a Neradu tree worth about Rs. 60 in the Vanka Poramboke Survey No. 162 of Noulakallu village about the month of April 1911."

Although the charge mentions rule 8, it does not state clearly that the Vanka Poramboke Survery No. 162, in which the Neradu tree is said to have stood, was a 'reserved forest,' or 'reserved land'. And, apparently, there is no evidence on record to show that the place in question was 'reserved land.' Without such evidence, a conviction under rule 8 could not be supported.

The learned Public Prosecutor contends that, on the facts found, the accused would be guilty of an offence under rule 9.

That depends on whether the accused had any right to cut the tree in question under rule 7. The accused, no doubt, pleaded that the tree was not cut in the place in question and that it belonged to some one else. But if the fact of its having been cut at the Venka be true, it might be open to the accused to say that it was required by him for an agricultual or domestic purpose. I think it would not be safe to convict the accused, on the facts as they stand, of an offence under rule 9,

I think, in the circumstances, the proper course would be to set aside the conviction and to direct a re-trial for an offence under rule 8 or rule 9 at the option of the prosecution. If the charge be framed under rule 8, it must clearly state that the place where the tree was cut was 'reserved land'. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

The word "purports" in section 73 of the Evidence Act means "alleged". It is not necessary under the section that the writing, which is in dispute, must itself in terms express or indicate that it was written by the person to whom it is attributed.

When an anonymous writing is produced and ascribed by the prosecution to a particular person, then the case for the prosecution must be taken to be that, having regard to the admitted documents, and the comparison between them and the disputed writing, the prosecution alleges that the disputed document purports to have been written or made by the accused.

An anonymous writing ascribed to a particular person may, therefore, be compared under section 73 of the Evidence Act.

Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor, 14 C. W. N. 1114; 37 C. 467, 7 Ind. Cas. 359; 11 Cr. L. J. 453, dissented from.

Criminal appeal from the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge of Thana, on appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Magistrate, first Class, Kolaba.

Mr. G. S. Rao, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Mr. Branson with him Mr. B. V. Desai, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion, the case is a very clear one, and the learned Sessions Judge has fallen into errors both of law and of fact in reversing the careful judgment of the Magistrate, who tried this case and convicted the accused.

First, we have the admitted handwriting of the documents which consist of letters, deeds and post cards. The handwritting on them is admitted to be that of the accused. Now, comparing that handwriting in modi with the modi handwritting on the disputed letter, Exhibit 1A, I have no hesitation whatever in saying that it is the accused's handwriting. The resemblance, in my opinion, is very close, and whoever is familiar with modi handwriting must, I think, come to that conclusion. It is unnecessary for me to detail the reasons which have led me to that conclusion, but I may say in short that the matras, the cast of the writing, and the similarity of most of the letters, all are, in my opinion, a warrant for holding that the writer of Exhibit 1A is the same as the writer of Exhibits J, I, K, and the post-cards (Exhibit G).

Then, there is the evidence of the Post-master. The learned Judge has not disbelieved him, at the same time he does not appear to have applied his mind to the testimony of that witness with the attention it deserved. I think that it is impossible to give any sound reason for setting aside the clear statements of the Post-master, who is positive in affirming that he saw Nadkar post two letters, one of which happens to be Exhibit 1A.

And then there is the evidence of Nadkar himself. I think that on these grounds, we must come to the conclusion that the trying Magistrate was right. The learned Sessions Judge seems to have been influenced in his opinion as to Exhibit 1A by the law laid down in a judgment of the Calcutta High Court [Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (1)], which he has cited, on the construction of section 73 of the Evidence Act. That section says:—"In order to ascertain whether a signature, writing, or seal is that of the person by whom it purports to have been written or made, any signature, writing, or seal admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the Court to have been written or made by that person may be compared with the one which is to be proved although that signature, writing, or seal has not been produced or proved for any other purpose." And in the Calcutta judgment, the words "by whom it purports to have been written or made" have been construed to mean that the writing which is in dispute must itself in terms express or indicate that it was written by the person to whom the writing is attributed. One meaning of the word "purports", as given by Murray in his Dictionary, is "alleged," and, therefore, it is reasonable to construe these words to mean " by whom it is alleged to have been written or made." Or even if we take the word "purports" in the sense which is generally attributed to it, we may say that when an anonymous writing is produced and ascribed by the prosecution to a particular person, then the case for the prosecution must be taken to be that, having regard to the admitted documents, and the comparison between them and the disputed writing, the prosecution alleges that the disputed document purports to have been written or made by the accused. Any other construction would exclude a number of writings and thus enable the offenders to escape from the law. The practice hitherto in this Court, so far as my knowledge goes, is in support of this construction of the section and I am not aware that it was ever objected to till now.

For these reasons, the appeal preferred by Government from the order of acquittal ought to be allowed, and the order of the learned Sessions Judge must be set aside, and the order of the Magistrate convicting and sentencing the accused ought to be restored.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 222, 224, 239—Charges—Misjoinder—Criminal misappropriation or breach of trust—Same parcel of money—More than one accused—Charges how to be framed—Abetment.

In section 222 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the wording refers to a single accused; and this must be so because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriating one and the same parcel of money; section 239, therefore, has no application, because more than one person cannot be charged with the offence of misappropriation.

If two persons are responsible for a misappropriation, the charges against them must be of misappropriation in one case and of abetment in the other. It is, of course, open to the Court to frame charges in the alternative: firstly, that A. misappropriated the money, B. being the abettor; or, secondly, that B. misappropriated and A. was the abettor.

These Rules were obtained by two persons, who were tried together and convicted under section 408 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment by the District Magistrate of Bhagalpore on October 20th, 1911. The conviction and sentence were upheld by the Sessions Judge of Bhagalpore on November 11th, 1911.

FACTS.—The two petitioners and another person, named Shoshi Bhushan, who was acquitted by the Magistrate, were tried together upon the charge that while they were collecting the rents of their master as a Tahsildar, patwari and naib patwari, respectively, they committed criminal breach of trust with respect to a total sum of Rs. 53-11-4½ p. of which Rs. 10 was received from Karu Mandar on April 3, 1910, Rs. 16-10-6 was received from the same tenant on September 27, 1910, Rs. 17-0-10½ was received from Munshi Mandar on September 29, 1910 and Rs. 10 was received from Dwarka Mandar on September 16, 1910. The first two accused were convicted and sentenced as mentioned before.

On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge disposed of the question of misjoinder thus:—

Accused No. 1 urged that separate items could not be included in one charge. But although the charge specified items, it is a charge of a general deficiency under section 222, Code of Criminal Procedure; even though the items can be separately proved, such charge is legal. There is much authority on this. The latest case appears to be of Emperor v. Ibrahim Khan (1). The second contention is that the two appellants ought not to have been tried together. But this depends upon the first point, the contention being that section 234 only applies to a single accused. But this is not a case to which section 234 has application.

The accused obtained the above Rules.

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner should not be set aside on the grounds, firstly, that there has been misjoinder of charges, and, secondly, that the findings on the evidence do not show that there was specific misappropriation of any portion of the money by either of the accused persons, or that there was complicity between them.

We have heard the learned Vakil in showing cause and we have carefully considered the explanation given by the District Magistrate; but we are still of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of section 222, cl. (2), there has been a misjoinder of charges in this case. It is unnecessary to refer, as the learned Judge does, to section 234. It is enough to point out that in section 222 also, the wording of the section refers to a single accused; and it must be so, because it is impossible to hold that two persons can be guilty of misappropriation of the same parcel of money. One may be guilty of misappropriating a portion of it or one may be guilty of abetting the other. The misappropriation of the actual money must be the act of a single person, and, therefore, section 239 has no application, because more than one person could not be charged with this particular offence of misappropriation of a single sum. This really covers the second ground of the Rule, which shows how easily an accused may be prejudiced by a charge drawn up in this vague manner.

As far as the finding that there was complicity between the two petitioners goes, that would only amount to a finding that one of them abetted the other. It is extremely difficult, upon the judgment of either of the Courts below, to discover which of the accused was, in their opinion, the principal and which was the abettor. Ordinarily speaking, the person into whose hands the money came and who was bound to account for it and who has not accounted for it is the person who would be liable to be charged with misappropiation. Now, if the patwari was bound to account to the estate through the Tahsildar for moneys collected by him, and the Tahsildar made false entries and thereby facilitated misappropriation of the money, the Tahsildar would be liable to be charged with abetment, but the specific act of misappropriation in the absence of any evidence that the money passed into the hands of the Tahsildar would lie against the patwari alone. The difficulty in this case is that there is no finding that the actual money passed into the hands of the Tahsildar. If the patwari handed over the money he collected to the Tahsildar and the Tahsildar falsified the accounts, then, of course, the Tahsildar alone would be responsible for the misappropriation and there would then have to be a clear finding on evidence that the patwari abetted him. But, be that as it may, the charges against these two persons must be of misappropriation in one case and of abetment in the other. It is open, of course, to the Court to frame charges in the alternative; firstly, that the patwari received money and misappropriated it, the Tahsildar being the abettor; or, secondly, that the patwari handed over the money to the Tahsildar who misappropriated it and that the patwari abetted him in such misappropriation. But if it is found necessary to draw up such charges in the alternative, clearly the different items will have to be distinguished, because the evidence as regards the receipt and credit of each item is different.

In setting aside the conviction and sentence and directing a new trial, we, therefore, leave it to the District Magistrate to decide which items should be charged as misappropriated by the Tahsildar or by the patwari with or without abetment of the other. But, if these two persons are tried together, the charge against one must be of misappropriating a sum of money and the charge against the other must be of abetting him in so doing. The materials before us are not sufficient to give any more specific directions.

The Rule is made absolute, the conviction and sentence are set aside and there will be a re-trial according to law.

The petitioner will remain on the same bail pending the re-hearing.

This judgment will govern both the Rules.

Rules made absolute.

ORDER OF REFERECE TO A FULL BENCH.

In this case, the petitioner before this Court was the complainant in Calendar Case No. 23 of 1911 on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the Head-Quarter Division, Coimbatore. She charged the two accused with defamation by imputing to her sexual immorality in a statement made by the accused before the District Registrar of Coimbatore in answer to a petition put in by her, asking for the registration of a Will. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate discharged the accused on the ground that their statement was absolutely privileged, and that they were, therefore, not liable to be punished under section 500, Indian Penal Code. The question whether a statement by a defendant in a Civil suit or by one who occupies a similar position is absolutely privileged or not is one on which the decisions of the Indian Courts are not uniform. A Bench of this Court has already made a reference to the Full Bench, in Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (1), on the question whether statements made by an accused person in his defence are absolutely privileged or not. Having regard to the importance of the question and the fact that it is likely to arise for decision frequently, we consider it desirable that the question arising in this case for decision should also be referred to a Full Bench. We, therefore, refer the question whether a defamatory statement, made by a person opposing the registration of a Will in his petition to the Registrar objecting to the registration, is absolutely privileged so as to exempt the party making it from liability to be punished for an offence under section 499, Indian Penal Code.

This case may be heard along with Criminal Revision Case No. 216 of 1911.

N. B.—The petition has not been heard on the merits.

This case coming on for final hearing on Friday, the 29th day of February 1912, upon hearing the arguments of Mr. V. Venkatachariar for Mr. R. Sadagopa Chariar, Vakil for the Petitioner and of Mr. B. Narasimha Rau for Dr. S. Swaminathan, Counsel for the Respondents, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court expressed the following

OPINIONS

WHITE, C. J.—The question referred to us is whether a defamatory statement, made by a person opposing the registration of a Will in his petition to the Registrar objecting to the registration, is absolutely privileged so as to exempt the party making it from liability to be punished for an offence under section 499, Indian Penal Code.

In Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (1), we expressed the opinion that a statement made by a prisoner in his defence was absolutely privileged and we based this opinion upon the ground that the English rule of common law, that anything said in the course of a judicial proceeding before a Court of competent jurisdiction by Counsel, witness or party was absolutely privileged, applied in India. The question put to us is limited to a statement made by a person opposing the registration of a Will. Our answer to this question must, in the first instance, depend on the view we take on the general question as to whether a Registration officer is a Court so as to render proceedings before him absolutely privileged.

What we should look to, in considering this question, as it seems to me, is the general scheme and purpose of the Registration Act and not to the special proceedings under particular sections.

The duties of the Registration officers are, in the main, administrative, though, no doubt, for the purpose of discharging these administrative duties, powers of a judicial or quasi-judicial character have been conferred upon them. The head of the establishment is an officer called the Inspector-General of Registration and he controls the department as an administrative officer.

There is no appeal from the decision of a Registration officer to a Civil Court. If a party deems himself aggrieved by the refusal of the officer to register a document, he must institute a suit (section 77). An order of a Registration officer decides no question of right as between parties, beyond the question of the right of the party who presents the document to have the document registered. The powers conferred by section 39 (compelling the attendance of witneses), section 63 (discretion to administer an oath), section 75 (4) (compelling attendance of witnesses and making orders as to costs),are,no doubt, powers which are exercised by Courts of justice; but the fact that a Registration officer has these powers does not, in my opinion, make him a Court of justice for the purposes of the question we have to consider. The powers are necessary in order to enable him to discharge his administrative functions.

Section 87 protects a Registration officer in the same way as section 77 of the Penal Code protects a Judge; but this does not, in my opinion, make him a Judge. The inference, which I should be disposed to draw from the provision in section 84 (3) of the Registration Act, that in section 228 of the Indian Penal Code, the words "judicial proceeding" should include proceedings under the Registration Act, would be that, for other purposes proceedings before a Registration officer were not "judicial proceedings." Similarly, as it seems to me, the inference to be drawn from section 483 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that a Registration officer is not for ordinary purposes "a Civil Court."

I do not think the definitions of "Court" in the Evidence Act and "Court of Justice" in the Penal Code afford us much assistance. These definitions were framed for the purposes of the Acts in which they are to be found.

In Atchayya v. Gangayya(2), a Full Bench of this Court held that a Registrar, acting under sections 72 to 75 of the Registration Act, was a Court for the purposes of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. A contrary view had been taken in Queen-Empress v. Tulja (3). In Queen-Empress v. Ram Lall (4), Knox, J. declined to follow the Madras Full Bench decision.

In Marudaya Pillai v. Perumal Pillai (5), this Court held that a District Registrar exercising his ordinary functions of registering a document, the execution of which is not denied, is not a Court within the meaning of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In Queen-Empress v. Ramaya Naidu (6), this Court held that a Sub-Registrar acting under sections 34 and 35 of the Indian Registration Act, III of 1877, is not a Court within the meaning of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Since this case was argued before us, Mr. V. Venkatachariar has called our attention to a case, Manavala Goundan v. Kumarappa Reddi (7), where Subramanya Aiyar, J., held that a District Registrar is not a Court within the meaning of section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (1882) and that an order as to costs made by a District Registrar was not subject to revision.

So far as section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is concerned, the matter has now been set at rest by the Legislature. See section 195 (2).

It is not necessary to consider for what (if any) purpose, in the absence of express enactment, a Registration officer is, or is to be deemed to be, a Court. The only question before us is, is he a Court for the purpose of rendering a statement made in an "objection petition" put in in the proceedings referred Rule against the order of the District Magistrate of Howrah, dated December 9th, 1911.

Messrs. K. N. Chaudhuri, S. N. Haldar and Babu Bir Bhushan Dutt, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The present petitioner, in consequence of a complaint made to the District Magistrate of Howrah on the 26th October 1911 by some members of the Criminal Court Bar Association that he was acting as a tout, was called on to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the provisions of section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The learned District Magistrate did not himself conduct the whole of the proceedings against the petitioner but he ordered the Joint Magistrate to inquire into the matter and report to him. The evidence appears to have been taken by the Joint Magistrate but the petitioner does not appear to have been present while the witnesses were examined nor does he appear to have been given an opportunity of cross-examining them. The Joint Magistrate, on the 15th November 1911, reported to the District Magistrate that the petitioner should be called on to show cause why he should not be enlisted as a tout. The learned District Magistrate recorded an order approving of the course suggested by the Joint Magistrate and thereafter it appears that a notice was served by order of the joint Magistrate on the 21st November 1911 on the petitioner calling upon him to show cause why he should not be proclaimed as a tout. On the 27th November, the petitioner showed cause and on the same day, the Joint Magistrate recorded the following order:—"The cause shown is not satisfactory. I think he may be proclaimed as a tout. Forwarded to the District Magistrate." On the 9th December 1911, the District Magistrate recorded the following order.—"I am satisfied from the evidence recorded and the report submitted by the Joint Magistrate that Hari Pada Mukerjee is a tout. The cause shown by him is not satisfactory. He will, therefore, be enlisted as a tout under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act." The petitioner applied to this Court on the 12th February 1912 and obtained this Rule on the District Magistrate to show cause why the order complained against should not be set aside on the ground that it does not appear to have been passed in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

The learned District Magistrate has submitted an explanation to this Court and we have also heard the learned Counsel in support of the Rule and, in our opinion, the Rule must be made absolute. From his explanation, the learned District Magistrate appears not to have been aware of the decisions of this Court determining the procedure to be adopted in proceedings under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Those decisions are in the cases of Chandi Charan Dey, In re (1) and In the matter of Prasanna Kumar Das (2), and lay down distinctly that an inquiry under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act must be made by the District Magistrate himself and that he cannot delegate his powers to any subordinate officer. In In re Siddeshwar Boral (3), it is distinctly laid down that the words "proved to their or his satisfaction" in section 36 of Act XI of 1896 refer to proof by any of the means known to the law of the fact upon which the Court is to exercise its judicial determination and that, in fact, the decision of the Judge determining that a person is a tout must be based on substantial legal evidence. In the present case, the District Magistrate himself does not appear to have recorded the evidence. The evidence which was taken by the Joint Magistrate does not appear to have been taken in accordance with the provisions of the law and the petitioner against whom that evidence is directed does not appear to have had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. We, therefore, make the Rule absolute, set aside the order of the District Magistrate passed under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act and direct that, should the Magistrate think it necessary to take further proceedings against the petitioner, he will do so in strict accordance with the provisions of section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 842.
(2) 12 C. W. N. 843, note.

Rule made absolute.

Hat—Holding hat on one's own property, if unlawful —Whether injunction may issue not to hold hat—Duty of Magistrate in case of establishment of rival hat—Breach of peace—Order not to molest people attending other hat—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144.

The holding of a hat on a man's own property is not in itself a wrongful act and, therefore, any ulterior consequences which may arise from it cannot give rise to any proceeding against the owner of the land for committing an act likely to cause a breach of the peace, unless those ulterior consequences are made the basis of the proceedings.

An injunction cannot be issued to a person restraining him from doing a lawful act upon his own property.

Therefore, an order directing a man not to use his property in a lawful manner, for instance, not to establish a hat on his own land, does not come within the purview of section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

What the Magistrate in this case ought to have ordered the parties to do was not to obstruct or allow their servants to obstruct any person from attending the other market if he wished to do so.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail, dated March 5th, 1912, directing the petitioners to close their hat at Peruli, under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Pugh, for the Crown.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute on the ground upon which it was issued. As a matter of fact, the order expires on its own force in the next three days and, therefore, there is not much occasion to set it aside now. But we wish to emphasise the clear distinction between interfering with the rights of private proprietors with whatever ulterior motive they may do acts which they have a right to do and the perpetration of wrongful acts by such proprietors. The law as regards preservation of public peace is based upon an apprehension that either certain person or persons are likely to commit breach of the peace by their own acts or that they are likely to do wrongful acts which may occasion other people to commit breach of the peace. And the question whether section 144, 107 or 145 should be utilised for the purpose is, a matter within the discretion of the Magistrate. What we want to point out is that holding of a hat on a man's own property is not, in itself, a wrongful act and, therefore, any ulterior consequences which may arise from it cannot give rise to any proceeding against the owner of the land for committing an act likely to cause a breach of the peace unless those ulterior consequences are made the basis of the proceedings. And in the present proceedings, the only ground mentioned for the issue of this injunction was that the Magistrate was satisfied from a report of the Police that by opening a new hat at Peruli only half a mile from the old and long established hat at Gazirhat, the petitioners were about to disturb the public ranquility. Now an order in that form is, in our opinion, without jurisdiction. Under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate is empowered to direct the parties to take such order with their property as may be necessary to prevent obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury to any person lawfully empolyed, or danger to human life, health or safety or a disturbance of the public tranquility, or a riot or an affray. Now, directing a man not to use his property in a lawful manner (for the establishment of a hat is a perfectly lawful act) cannot, in our opinion, come within the purview of this section. What the Magistrate ought to have ordered these people to do is not to obstruct or allow their servants in any way to obstruct the public or any other person from crossing the khal from their side in order to attend the Gazirhat market if he wished to do so. That is really what the Magistrate finds and tells us in his explanation is the cause of the present proceedings. It is not that the petitioners are not entitled to hold a hat but that its promoters did not shrink from using threats, and, if necessary, force to compel the public to go to their hat and to prevent them from going to the Gazirhat market. The strongest measures should be taken by the local authorities to put down any such lawless acts; and the powers which are vested in the Magistrate are, in our opinion, ample enough to prevent any such interference with the liberties of the subjects. But an injunction cannot be issued not to do a lawful act upon a man's own property. It is, therefore, necessary to set aside these proceedings and to make the Rule absolute.

Rule made absoulte.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 406, 417—Criminal breach of trust—Cheating—Landlord sending for tenant—Payment of rent by tenant—Illegal demand by landlord—Detention of money paid—Criminal offence.

A tenant was sent for by his landlord to whom the tenant paid Rs. 90 as rent. The landlord deducted Rs. 25 towards a subscription and refused to grant a dakhila or return the money until Rs. 25 more was paid:

Held, that the landlord did not commit any criminal offence.

Khoda Bux v. Backaya; 32 C. 941; 9 C. W. N. 1006; 2 Cr. L. J. 764, distinguished.

Rule against the order of the Sessions Judge of Midnapore, dated July 17th, 1911, confirming that of the Deputy Magistrate of that place, dated June 13th, 1911, convicting the petitioner under sections 406 and 417 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing to pay a fine of Rs. 300.

FACTS.—The accused was the landlord of the complainant. Litigation has been going on between them for some years. On the day of occurrence, the tenant was sent for for payment of rent. The tenant paid Rs. 90. The landlord took Rs. 25 as a swadeshi subscription out of the amount and said that until Rs. 25 more was paid, he would neither grant a dakhila nor return the money.

The tenant thereupon brought this charge against his landlord, the petitioner, who has been convicted and sentenced as mentioned above.

The accused then obtained this Rule.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukerjee, for the Petitioner.

Babu Sris Chandra Chowdhury, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that the Rule in this case must be made absolute. The case of Khoda Bux v. Backaya (1) goes as far as the law could possibly be taken in the direction of misrepresentation by conduct. In that case, there was, however, positive conduct subsequent to the receiving of the mortgage-money to show fraudulent intention, viz., the return of a bogus unstamped bond to an illiterate messenger. Here the transaction was between the principals and there was no subsequent misrepresentation, only an illegal demand. The case does not, in our opinion, come within the purview of the criminal law.

The conviction and sentence we set aside, and the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Suit for declaration of right—Defence on ground of special custom—Suit decreed—Second suit by plaintiff for partition—Same defence taken by son of previous defendant.

G., the father of the present defendant, was recorded as a jagirdar in the Collector's Register. A suit was brought by the present plaintiff for declaration of his rights against G., which seems to have been almost identical in nature with the present suit. The plaintiff claimed under the ordinary law, but G. contested the suit on the ground that he was entitled to the jagir under a custom of primogeniture. The Court held in that case that the special custom was not proved and that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The plaintiff then brought this suit for partition. Defendant was not made a party to the previous suit. He contested the suit on the ground of primogeniture:

Held, that the matter was now res judicata, and the defendant could not take up the same defence which his father had taken in the former suit.

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Palamau, dated May 23rd, 1908.

Babus Tara Kishore Choudhury, Nagendra Nath Ghose and Mr. J. W. Chippendale, for the Appellant.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy, Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Harihar Prosad Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for partition of property which was admittedly at one time a jagir of one Dhurup Singh, the common ancestor of the plaintiff and the defendants. It apparently descended to his eldest son, Bhukan Singh, but in Bhukan Singh's time was resumed, and after that was again granted in the name of Pahalwan Singh, the third son of Dhurup Singh, and not in the name of Baiju Singh, the second son, who was the plaintiff's ancestor. It is a matter of controversy in this case whether the jagir was given exclusively to Pahalwan Singh or given to him as the representative of the whole family.

Only one name is recorded as jagirdar in the Collector's Register. After Pahalwan Singh, Jhao Singh was recorded, after him, Odit Singh, after him, Ghinu Singh and after Ghinu, the present defendant No. 3, Nursing Dyal Singh. In the time of Ghinu Singh, a suit was brought by the present plaintiff for declaration of his rights, which seems to have been almost identical in nature with the present suit except that partition was not sought. The plaintiff succeeded and obtained a decree which was affirmed on appeal by this Court.

In the present case, the learned Subordinate Judge has found that this decision was wrong, that the jagir belonged to Nursing Dyal Singh alone and that the plaintiff was not in possession and not entitled to succeed. The plaintiff appeals to this Court.

It appears to us that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be sustained. In our opinion, the matter is now a res judicata.

The issues in the former suit, as we gather from the decision of this Court, were as follows:— Firstly, is the plaintiff in possession of the property in suit? If not, can the suit proceed? Secondly, does the rule of primogeniture prevail in the family of the parties? Thirdly, was the property in suit granted in jagir to Pahalwan as alleged by the defendants? On the first point, the learned Judges observed that it was contended on behalf of the defendants that the Court below was wrong in holding that the possession of the plaintiff was made out so as to entitle him to maintain his suit for a declaratory decree. But they agreed with the Court below in the conclusion arrived at, namely, that the possession of the plaintiff was made out. On the second point, they held that it lay upon the defendants to prove that there was any special custom governing the succession to this jagir as against the ordinary Hindu Law of succession and that the defendants had failed to discharge that burden, or, in other words, that the rule of primogeniture was not proved to prevail in the family of the parties. On the third point, they held that the plaintiff's ancestor along with other members of the family had been in possession of the lands of the jagir by virtue of their right by inheritance and that the grant of the jagir was not to Pahalwan Singh alone.

These findings seem to us completely to dispose of the present suit in which these identical questions are raised. It is no body's case that the plaintiff has been dispossessed since the decision of the former suit.

The only reason given for holding that the suit is not concluded by the rule of res judicata is that if, as is alleged by the plaintiff, the family is governed by the ordinary Mitakshara law, it must be held that the defendants obtained an interest in the property at birth and did not derive their rights from Ghinu. It would follow, therefore, that as they were not parties to the former suit though they were alive at the time, they are not bound by the decision.

With this question, we are only concerned in so far as it affects the defendant No. 3. The contesting defendants are defendants Nos. 1 to 10. Of these, defendants Nos. 1, 2, 9 and 10 were parties to the former suit while defendants Nos. 4 to 8 disclaim all title to the property. As regards defendant No. 3. we find, on reference to his written statement, that he states distinctly that the property is impartible and governed by the rule of primogeniture. In that case, it is perfectly clear from the decision in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1) that he obtained no right at birth at all and could not properly have been made a party to the former suit during his father's life-time. In these circumstances, it appears to us that he must be regarded as claiming under Ghinu.

It does not appear to us to be of any importance what the plaintiff's case is. A reference to section 11, Civil Procedure Code, shows that what has to be considered in these cases is what the defendant himself claims, and, as we have said above, on the allegations in his written statement, he must be regarded as claiming under Ghinu.

Reference has been made to an alternative claim put forward by the defendants Nos. 4 to 8. If they had put forward the alternative case that even though the rule of primogeniture did not apply, yet the jagir was granted to Pahalwan Singh alone, something might have been said for it. But the only alternative prayer they put forward is that if the plaintiff succeeds in getting a decree for partition, that is to say, if it is found that others besides Pahalwan Singh's descendants are interested in the jagir, the share of these defendants also may be separated. To this prayer, the plaintiff has no objection.

We have been invited to go into the merits of the case, but we think that it is not proper for us to consider the correctness of a former decision of this Court based on the same materials with regard to the same matters in controversy and between persons whom we regard as the same parties.

It appears to us, therefore, that the appeal must be allowed with costs and a preliminary decree given to the plaintiff for partition.

Appeal allowed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 344 OF 1912.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE OF DELHI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

MAMAN CHAND AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Municipal Act (XX of 1891), s. 94 cls. (a) and (c)—Superstructure built on an old chhatta—Material alteration—Security of building affected.

The re-placing of an old by a new superstructure, upon an old chhatta or bridge over a lane is a material, alteration within the meaning of clause (a) of section 94 of the Punjab Municipal Act and affects the security of the old building within the meaning of clause (c) of the same section. Therefore, the Committee acts intra vires if it requires the removal of such new superstructure erected without its permission.

Second appeal from the order of the Additional Divisional Judge, Delhi Division, dated 27th October 1911, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st class, Delhi, dated 29th June 1911, decreeing plaintiffs' claim in part.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Oertel, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is only an application for revision, but the case is important and I think the lower Courts have misunderstood the law, and the position.

It is quite clear from the finding of the first Court which is not traversed that the plaintiff has in fact built a new superstructure upon an old chatta or bridge over a lane. The new structure may be quite safe per se but its position upon the chatta may very well render that dangerous. The old chatta can only bear a certain amount of weight—it is clear that the structure now built on it is not identical with what was there before and it is quite clear that the re-placing of the old by a new superstructure "affects the security." It is not for the owner but for the Committee in such a case to judge how it affects that security. It may, no doubt, increase the security, in which case no objection could be raised, but even a change which increases security certainly affects it, and must, under section 94, be approved by the Committee. A private individual may very well take a different view on that point from an expert, and the Committee are the custodians of the public safety in such matters, and must decide in what manner the security is affected. I agree that the Committee cannot order the removal of such portions of the chatta as existed before, but they are perfectly competent to order the removal of the whole of the new superstructure as it was undoubtedly a material alteration [vide the additions of arches found by the first Court, section 94 (a)] and it certainly affected the security; section 94 (e). The evidence of the Municipal Engineer makes this quite clear. I, therefore, hold that the Committee were acting intra vires in calling on the plaintiff to remove the new superstructure erected without permission. The old part of the chatta, of course, cannot be ordered to be removed. The application for revision is so far accepted as to restrict the injunction to that part of the chatta which has not been re-built; the order for the removal of the superstructure cannot be interfered with. Costs against the respondents in this Court.

Revision partly accepted.

APPEAL FROM THE HIGH COURT AT CALCUTTA.

versus

Maharani JANKI KOER—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Pre-emption—Right of Hindus in Behar—Ceremonies to demand pre-emption, if may be performed by manager of disqualified proprietor—Co-sharers—Payment of Government revenue jointly, whether constitutes co-parcenary to give rise to right of pre-emption.

A right or custom of pre-emption is recognised as prevailing among Hindus in Behar.

Fakir Rawot v. Sheikh Emambuksh, B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 35; W. R. (F. B.) 143, followed.

The manager of an estate, in charge of the Court of Wards of a disqualified proprietor under the Court of Wards Act, 1879, is competent, independently of the provisions of section 40 of the Act, to observe on behalf of the proprietor the formalities to demand the right of pre-emption in accordance with the prescriptions of the law.

The claim to co-parcenary, on which a pre-emptor's right of pre-emption is based, may arise out of the fact that the vendor and pre-emptor are jointly liable for the payment of the Government revenue assessed on the property, because that joint liability arises from the fact that they own undivided interests.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 31st January 1908, reported at 35 Calcutta 575, which affirmed a judgment and decree of the Second Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpur, dated the 17th September 1906

The plaintiff (first respondent) was the widow of the late Maharajah of Bettiah, whose estate was being administered by the Court of Wards; she was represented in the suit by her next friend, Mr. J. R. Lowis, the Manager of the estate under the Court of Wards. The suit was brought to establish the plaintiff's right of pre-emption in respect of certain property situated in the Champaran District in Behar, in which the plaintiff, the first defendant (second respondent) and defendants Nos. 12 to 25 (respondents Nos. 3 to 16) were co-sharers.

The first defendant was the vendor of the property in dispute, the purchasers being defendants Nos. 2 to 11, here inafterreferred to as the purchasers. Defendant No. 3 died during the pendency of the case, and defendants Nos 2 and 4 to 11 are the present appellants. Defendants Nos. 12 to 25 were joined as pro forma defendants, no relief being sought against them.

The property in dispute was the share of the first defendant in Mahal Motihari, which she had sold to the purchasers by a deed, dated 28th July 1904. The consideration was stated in the deed to be Rs. 39,967. The plaintiff and the first defendant claimed that the deed did not include part of the first defendant's share in Tolah Begampur, which formed part of Mahal Motihari. That was sold by first defendant to the plaintiff by a deed dated 24th February 1905.

JADU LAL SAHU v. JANKI KOER.

Mr. Lowis, the Manager of the Raj, first became aware on the 13th August 1904 that the sale had been completed. The information was conveyed to him by a letter from Mr. Leslie, the Solicitor to the Raj. Mr. Lowis immediately, upon receipt of Mr. Leslie's letter, performed the ceremony of Talab Mawasibat, and on the 15th August proceeded to Motihari, where he performed the ceremony of Talab Istishad, first at the Raj office and then at the Collectorate.

The suit was instituted on the 9th March 1905. The plaint, in addition to setting out the facts as above, further alleged that the consideration for the sale was falsely stated in the deed of 28th July 1904, being, in fact, only Rs. 26,000, and not Rs. 39,967. The plaintiff prayed for a declaration that she had a right of pre-emption in respect of the first defendant's share in Mahal Motihari, save and except the share in Tolah Begampur already referred to, but that if it was held that, that share passed by the conveyance, then that she had a right of pre-emption in respect of that also, for an inquiry as to the actual consideration paid, and for an order that the purchasers should convey to her the property bought by them, on her paying them the actual consideration found on such inquiry to have been paid.

The defendants Nos. 12 to 25 did not appear. The first defendant filed a written statement in which she admitted the sale, but alleged that the consideration was in fact only Rs. 26,000.

The purchasers, in their written statement, denied that plaintiff had any cause of action. They alleged that the ceremonies of Talab Mawasibat and Talab Istishad had not been duly performed, and pleaded that those ceremonies could not be performed for the plaintiff by her Manager. They also alleged that the real consideration was Rs. 39,969; that the share in Tolah Begampur passed by their conveyance; and that by her subsequent purchase of that share, the plaintiff had lost her right of pre-emption. They further pleaded that the plaintiff's Manager had information of the negotiations for sale long before the execution of the deed of sale, that he refused to pay adequate consideration, and that they on such refusal themselves completed the transaction.

The following issues were settled :—

1. Has plaintiff a cause of action for the suit?

2. Could the plaintiff perform the preliminary ceremonies of Talab Mawasibat and Talab Istishad through her Manager and were these ceremonies duly performed?

3. Was there any talk of sale of the disputed property with the plaintiff's Manager, and did he decline to purchase the same?

4. Was the plaintiff or her Manager aware of the proposal for sale to defendants Nos. 2 to 11? Did that take away the plaintiff's right of pre-emption?

5. Whether Tolah Begampur was purchased by defendants Nos. 2 to 11 prior to plaintiff's purchase?

6. Is the subsequent purchase of Tolah Begampur by the plaintiff invalid, and did that purchase extinguish plaintiff's right of pre-emption?

7. What is the real consideration of the property sold?

8. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

On the 11th July 1906, the purchasers filed a petition praying that the first issue might be disposed of before going to trial of the remaining issues, on the ground that the pre-emptor and purchasers not being Muhammadans, the right of pre-emption could only been based on a local custom, which had not be alleged in the plaint. The Subordinate Judge, on the 14th July 1906, delivered a preliminary judgment on that issue. He held that the purchasers' petition was an attempt to raise a fresh issue, which had not been raised in the written statement, namely, whether such a custom did, in fact, exist, and that that issue could not be raised at the stage which the suit had then reached. He further held on the authorities that the adoption of the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption by the Hindus in Behar had been judicially recognized, and decided the issue in plaintiff's favour.

The Subordinate Judge delivered his final judgment on the remaining issues on the 12th September 1906. On the second issue, he held that the ceremonies of Talab Mawasibat and Talab Istishad could be performed for plaintiff by her Manager, and that they had in fact been duly performed, and in each case without unnecessary delay. On the third and fourth issues, he found that there was no prior offer of the property to Mr. Lowis and refusal by him to buy, that he first knew of the sale on 13th August 1904, and that he had not, by his conduct prior to that date, done anything to relinquish his right of pre-emption. On the fifth issue, he held that the portion of Tolah Begampur subsequently sold to plaintiff was not included in the purchaser's conveyance, and on the sixth issue, that such subsequent purchase did not extinguish plaintiff's right of pre-emption. On the seventh issue, he held that the true consideration for the sale was Rs. 26,000. In the result, the suit was decreed with costs, and it was ordered that, on payment by plaintiff to the purchasers of Rs. 26,000 within two months from the date of the judgment, she should get possession of the property in dispute.

Against that decree, the purchasers appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and on the 31st January 1908, the High Court delivered its judgment affirming the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge on all the issues. For report of the judgment of the High Court, see Jalu Lal Sahu v. Janki Koer (1).

Against the decree of the High Court, the purchasers appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. K. Brown, for the Appellants: The plaintiff has no right of pre-emption as it is not alleged and proved that there is any custom among the Hindus in this part of Behar giving them such a right. The High Court has erred in taking judicial notice of the existence of the custom, which was not established by evidence. The High Court relied on Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 3rd Edition, p. 376, Article 351, where, on the authority of Fakir Rawot v. Sheikh Emambaksh (2), it is said that the custom of pre-emption is recognised as prevailing among Hindus of Behar. But that case is considered in Kanti Ram v. Wali Sahu (3), where it is laid down that there is no judicial finding to the effect that the custom of pre-emption is recognised among the Hindus of Behar. The right of pre-emption in this case could only exist, if its existence is proved by custom. Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, by Wilson; 3rd Edition, p. 378, Article 354. The Muhammadan Law of Pre-emption and text of the Hidaya relating to it are not to be applied to a case between a Hindu and a Muhammadan in the British territories. Even if the plaintiff and the first defendant were co sharers in the mahal and in the villages comprised therein, they ceased to be such when proceedings were instituted under Act V of 1897 (B. C.) and partition took place. Any right of pre-emption, if it existed, was destroyed by reason of those proceedings and partition: Govind Chundar Goopto v. Raj Kishore Sein (4) and Wahed Ali Khan v. Hunuman Prasad (5).

The Manager appointed by the Court of Wards has no power to perform the first ceremony. The lower Court said that his power would depend upon the statute under which he was appointed. But the Court of Wards Act, (iX of 1879, B. C.), gives him no such power: See sections 12, 14, 15, 18, 38, 39, 40, 41, 49, 50 and 80. The Manager has no power to bind the ward or the ward's estate by a contract for the purchase of immoveable property: Mir Sarwar Jan v. Fakhruddin Mahommad Chowdhuri (6). The evidence shows that there was delay in asserting the right and the plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to succeed; Nundo Pershad Thakur v. Gopal Thakur (7). The Manager's acts ought to have been ratified at once as the right could only be exercised without delay, and the plaintiff should not succeed for want of immediate ratification. Cunningham and Shephard's Contract Act, 10th Edition, section 200, p. 438; Dibbins v Dibbins (8); Bird v. Brown (9); Lyell v. Kennedy (10). Lastly, if the plaintiff has a right of pre-emption as a co-sharer in respect of any of the villages in question, such right does not extend to more than 16 villages, in which the plaintiff and the 1st defendant were co-sharers. Their joint liability to pay the land revenue assessed on the villages respectively owned by them, did not make them co-parceners under the Muhammadan Law. In the absence of such a co-parcenary, there is no right of pre-emption.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C. (E. U. Eddis with him), for the Respondents.

[LORD SHAW:—We want you to explain the point rela'ing to a "co sharer."]

[LORD ROBSON:—We will not trouble you about the powers of a "Manager."]

A co-sharer is the same as a co-partner. The essential condition is that the person claiming the right of pre-emption must be a co-sharer in the property sold. The unit of area for revenue purposes is a mahal, which has fixed, definite boundaries. A mahal is divided into putties which are again divided into smaller divisions. All persons whose lands are within the boundaries of a mahal, are co-sharers, and the right of pre-emption exists, if they are co-owners. See Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 3rd Edition, pp. 378 and 379; Hidaya, Book XXXVIII, Ch. 1, p. 548; The Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), section 9; Jeobraj Singh v. Tookun Singh (11); Mahadeo Singh v. Musammat Zeenut-un-nissa (12), Munna Lal v. Hajira Jan (13).

[Lord Shaw: It is not necessary to trouble you further.]

Mr. Broun: In that case, I will say nothing more.

JUDGMENT.

AMEER ALI, J.—The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was brought by the plaintiff-respondent to establish her right of pre-emption in respect of certain undivided shares in a number of villages comprised in Mahal Motihari, situated in the district of Champaran.

The shares in question belonged to a Muhammadan lady named Barkatunnissa, the first defendant to this action, who sold the same to the Sahu defendants by a deed of sale, dated the 28th of July 1904. Barkatunnissa owned an interest in 24 out of the 31 villages comprised in the mahal, whilst the plaintiff possesses shares in 18. The vendors had admittedly no proprietary interest in Mahal Motihari prior to their purchase from Barkatunnissa.

The plaintiff claims that as a co-sharer in the mahal, she is entitled to the right of pre-emption in respect of the shares sold to the Sahus by the first defendant.

Champaran appears to have been part of the Civil Division of Saran until sometime after the institution of the suit. The action was accordingly brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saran, but owing to the subsequent amalgamation of Champaran with Tirhoot, it was tried before the Subordinate Judge of Mozzufferpur (the Suddar station of Tirhoot), who decreed the plaintiff's claim. This decree has been affirmed by the High Court of Bengal.

It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that as the right claimed is a creation of the Mussulman Law, and it is not proved that the Mussulman Law of pre-emption is in force among the Hindus of the district of Champaran, both the pre-emptor and the vendees being Hindus, the action must fail.

The suit was instituted on the 7th of March 1905, the Sahu defendants filed their defence on the 16th of June, and issues for trial were settled on the 27th of September 1905. It was not, however, until the 11th of July 1906, when, as the learned Judges of the High Court observe, " the suit was ripe for hearing," that the Sahu defendants for the first time raised a question as to the existence of the right of pre-emption among the Hindus of Champaran. Both the Courts in India have, in their Lordships' judgment rightly, overruled the defendants' objection.

The law of pre emption, under which the plaintiff claims the right, was introduced into India with the Muhammadan Government. The Province of Behar, to which the district of Champaran appertains, was an integral part of the Muhammadan Empire and consequently it would not be surprising to find that in Behar the right of pre-emption is enforcible irrespective of the persuasion of the parties concerned.

In the case of Fakir Rawot v. Sheikh Emambuksh (2), a Full Bench of the High Court of Bengal gave judicial recognition to the existence of the right of pre emption among the Hindus of Behar. In delivering the judgment, the Chief Justice (Sir Barness Peacock) reviewed the earlier cases bearing on the subject, and held that:—" . . . . a right or custom of pre emption is recognised as prevailing among Hindus in Behar, and some other Provinces of Western India; that in districts where its existence has not been judicially noticed, the custom will be a matter to be proved; that such custom, when it exists, must be presumed to be founded on and co-extensive with the Muhammadan Law upon that subject, unless the contrary be shown; that the Court may, as between Hindus, administer a modification of that law as to the circumstances under which the right may be claimed, when it is shown that the custom in that respect does not go the whole length of the Muhammadan Law of pre-emption, but that the assertion of the right by suit must always be preceded by an observance of the preliminary forms prescribed in the Muhammadan Law, which forms appear to have been invariably observed and insisted on through the whole of the cases from the earliest time of which we have record."

In their Lordships' judgment, the decision in Fakir Rawot's case (2) is conclusive on the point raised on behalf of the defendants. Their abstention from taking the objection in a definite and distinct form at the earliest stage of the case was, it may fairly be presumed, due to the explicit enunciation of the law in the ruling referred to.

It has also been contended that the formalities insisted upon by the Mussulman Law as essential preliminaries to the assertion of the right, could not be performed by the Manager of the plaintiff's estate appointed by the Court of Wards.

It appears that the plaintiff is a "disqualified proprietor" under the Court of Wards Act (Bengal Act IX of 1879), having been declared to be incompetent to manage her property and her estate is in the charge of the Court of Wards. Section 40 of the Act, which defines the general duty of Managers appointed by the Court of Wards, provides that he shall manage the property committed to him diligently and faithfully for benefit of the proprietor, and shall in every respect act to the best of his judgment for the ward's interest as if the property were his own."

The Mussulman Law insists that the first formality technically called "the immediate demand" should be observed by the pre-emptor or some one on his behalf immediately on receipt of the news of the sale, otherwise the right of pre-emption falls to the ground. The second formality consists in the repetition of the "demand", with as little delay as possible under the circumstances, in the presence of witnesses either before the vendor or the vendee or on the premises. The Courts in India have found that the ceremonies were duly performed by the Manager in accordance with the prescriptions of the law. Had he failed in performing either of the ceremonies, he would have caused irreparable loss to the plaintiff, as her right would have been absolutely defeated by his laches. In their Lordships' opinion, Mr. Lowis, as Manager of the plaintiff's estate, was competent, independently of the provisions of section 40 of the Court of Wards Act, to observe the formalities on her behalf. The section, however, which defines his duties appears to their Lordships to fully clothe him with authority to act as he did; the validity of his action, therefore, did not depend on its subsequent adoption by the Court of Wards. In this view, the English cases cited at the Bar have no application to the present case.

It was also urged that the claim to co-parcenary, on which the plaintiff's right of pre-emption was based, arose out of the fact that the vendor and pre-emptor were jointly liable for the payment of the Government revenue assessed on the villages comprised in the mahal, and that this joint liability does not constitute the co-parcenary contemplated by the Muhammadan Law. This argument seems to proceed on a misconception of the land system of India. A mahal is a unit of property; it may consist of one village or of several villages: it may be owned by one or several proprietors who may have an interest in all or some of the villages comprised in the estate. Their joint liability for the Government revenue arises from the fact that they own undivided interests in the property; and that joint liability does not cease in the case of any co-sharer until his particular share has been partitioned by the Revenue Authorities, when the share so partitioned becomes a separate unit of property.

On the whole, their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the High Court should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question in controversy in this appeal is, whether an application for execution of a decree is barred by limitation. The decree was made ex parte on the 12th August 1902, in favour of two persons, of whom, one Mohabir Das was an infant represented by Ajodhya Singh and Daulat Singh and the other Siaram Das, was sui juris. The present application for execution was presented on the 4th February 1910. The judgment-debtors, now appellants before us, objected to the execution on the ground that a previous application presented on the 5th July 1906 was barred by limitation. The learned Judge has held that as one of the execution creditors was an infant, the application of the 5th July 1906 was saved by the operation of section 8 of the Limitation Act of 1877. That section provides that when one of several joint creditors or claimants is under any such disability as is mentioned in section 7 and when a discharge can be given without the concurrence of such person, time will run against them all, but where no such discharge can be given, time will not run as against any of them until one of them becomes capable of giving such discharge without the concurrence of the others. Two questions, therefore, require consideration, first, whether an execution-creditor is a creditor within the meaning of section 8 of the Limitation Act of 1877, and secondly, whether in the case before us, the adult decree-holder was competent to give a discharge without the concurrence of the infant execution-creditor.

In so far as the first question is concerned, it is not disputed that the cases of Surja Kumar v. Arunchunder Roy(1); Bholanand Jha v. Padmanund Singh (2) and Sheikh Jamir v. Srimati Lal Bibi (3), support the view that a joint execution creditor is a joint creditor within the meaning of section 8 of the Limitation Act of 1877. The learned Vakil for the appellant has, however, placed reliance upon the decisions in Anando Kishore Das Bakshi v. Anando Kishore Bose (4) and Periasami v. Krishna Ayyan (5). The case of Ananado v. Ananado (4) is, in our opinion, distinguishable. There the application with which the Court had to deal was not an application for execution of a decree but an application for assessment of mesne profits which is an application in a pending suit. [Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen (6).] It is not necessary for us to consider whether the case was correctly decided even from the latter point of view. It is sufficient for us to state that as in the present case the application is for execution of a joint decree, the principle of the decision in Anando v. Anando (4) can have no application.

(1) 28 C. 465; 5 C. W. N. 767.
(2) 6 C. W. N. 348.
(3) 7 C. L. J. 308.

In so far as the decision in Periasami v. Krishna Ayyar (5) is concerned, we have only to observe that it is not binding upon us, and it is well known that the Madras High Court took a view in relation to this question which was not adopted by any of the other High Courts, see for instance the cases of Govindram v. Tatia (7) and Zamir Hasan v. Sundar (8). It is further worthy of note that the Legislature has in the Limitation Act of 1908 altered the language of section 8 so as to make the principle of that section explicitly applicable to applications for execution of decrees. This, therefore, is a legislative affirmance of the rule adopted by the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad High Courts and legislative reversal of the view adopted in Madras. In our opinion, the first contention of the appellant cannot be supported.

As regards the second question, reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in the case of Bholanand Jha v. Padmanand Singh (2), where the learned Judges appear to have held that an execution creditor can give a valid discharge in respect of not only his own interest in the decree but also the interest of his joint execution creditors. That decision, however, must be taken to have been based on the special facts of the litigation before the Court, and it is not necessary for us to examine whether the case was correctly decided upon its own special facts. It is clear, however, in view of the provisions of section 461 of the Code of 1882, that no valid discharge could have been given in the present case by the next friend of the infant execution creditor in so far as his interest in the decree was concerned. No doubt, under section 231, an application for execution of a joint decree may be presented by one of the several joint decree-holders but section 461 provides that where, as here, there is a decree for money or other moveable property for the benefit of a minor, the next friend for the suit, who is other than a statutory guardian, cannot receive the money unless the Court grants him leave to receive the property, and, in the latter event security is required from him and directions are given by the Court for the protection of the property from waste and to ensure its proper application. It is plain that the provisions of this section were not brought to the notice of the Court in the case of Bhola Nand Jha v. Padmanand Singh (2). It is further clear from the cases already mentioned that the view has uniformly been followed that a joint execution creditor is not competent in the case of the description now before us to grant a valid discharge so as to bind the interest of the other execution creditors.

The result is that as the case is completely covered by section 8 of the Limitation Act of 1877, the order of the District Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Suit for possession—Finding that property belongs to plaintiff and another—Decree for joint possession—Whether can be passed.

Where plaintiff sues for exclusive possession of property and it is found that plaintiff is entitled only to joint possession with the defendants, it is open to the Court to give plaintiff a decree for joint possession, but plaintiff cannot claim it as a matter of right.

Second appeal against the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, in A. S. No. 917 of 1910, preferred against the decree of the District Munsif of Tirupati, in O. S. No. 224 of 1907.

Mr. C. Narasimhachari, for the Appellant.

This second appeal coming on for orders as to admission under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 11 of Act V of 1908, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The finding of the Appellate Court is that the land claimed by the plaintiff did not belong to the 2nd defendant alone but to him and to his cousin, the 1st defendant, jointly. The lower Appellate Court holds that the lands belonging to the family in the villages of Panore, in which the plaint land is situate and Kalayambakam, were both left undivided. It is contended in second appeal that the lower Appellate Court ought to have given the plaintiff a decree at least for joint possession along with the 1st defendant. It would, no doubt, be open to the Court to give a decree for joint possession where the plaintiff in his plaint asks for his exclusive possession. But it cannot be said that the plaintiff is entitled to this as a matter of right. Whether joint possession should be given or not would depend on the circumstances of each case. Here the lands are in the possession of lessees and not of either of the defendants. It might be inconvenient in such a case to award joint possession to the plaintiff. He did not ask for it in his plaint and does not seem to have asked for it in the lower Courts. There is nothing to prevent him from enforcing his right to the 2nd defendant's share of the lands by a fresh suit.

I reject this second appeal.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed a mortgage-bond in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant No. 2 wrote the bond and signed as an executant and also as the writer and one of the two attesting witnesses. The first Court held that the bond did not create a valid mortgage as there was only one attesting witness but that it created a charge under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiff did not appeal, but the defendants did. The lower Appellate Court held that no charge was created but that the bond could be taken as a mortgage against defendant No. 1 because it was possible to treat defendant No. 2 not as one of the executants but as the writer and one of the two attesting witnesses. A decree was made against defendant No. 1 for one-half of the amount to be recovered by sale of one-half of the mortgaged property:

Held (1) that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in re-opening the question as to the validity of the document as a mortgage, for the Court of first instance had decided against its validity and there was no appeal against that finding by the plaintiff;

(2) that a party to a document cannot, under any circumstances, be allowed to sign it both as an attesting witness and as an executant;

(3) that, therefore, the bond could not be held to be valid as against defendant No. 1 as a mortgage;

(4) that as the document, if valid, amounted to a mortgage, no charge was created by it on the property.

JUDGMENT.—The present appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents to recover a sum of Rs. 522-8 on a registered mortage-bond. The bond in question purported to have been executed by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In the Court of first instance, an objection was taken to the bond on the ground that it did not create a valid mortgage as there was only one attesting witness to the document. It appears that the defendant No. 2 wrote the bond and that, after writing it, he signed his name as an executant of the bond and afterwards as the writer and as one of the attesting witnesses. The Court of first instance held that this objection was valid and that the document could not have effect as a mortgage. The Munsif, however, was of opinion that, under the provisions of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, the bond could take effect as creating a charge on the property covered by it for the realization of the debt and he, therefore, gave a decree to the plaintiffs for the recovery of the amount claimed by sale of the property, on which he held a charge had been created.

The defendants appealed to the lower Appellate Court but the plaintiffs did not file a cross-appeal nor did they put in any cross-objection. On the hearing of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court, however, that Court, after first arriving at a conclusion that the Munsif was wrong in holding that any charge could be held to be created under the provisions of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act and after setting aside the finding of the Munsif on that ground, took up the question which had, in fact, been decided against the plaintiffs and in respect of which there was no appeal to that Court and decided that though the mortgage-bond could not be taken to be valid and operative as against both the executants, still it could be taken as a mortage-bond binding, so far as one-half of the amount of the mortgage-debt was concerned, against the defendant No. 1 because it was possible to treat the defendant No. 2 not as one of the executants of the bond but as the writer and one of the attesting witnesses to it. On that finding, the lower Appellate Court gave the plaintiffs a decree in modification of the decree of the Court of first instance for the recovery of one-half of the mortgage-money by sale of one-half of mortgaged property.

The defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court and, in support of the appeal, it has been argued, first, that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in re opening, in appeal the question as to the validity of the document as a mortgage, the Court of first instance having decided against its validity and there having been no appeal against that finding of the first Court and, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court was entirely wrong in the view which it took with regard to that document and in holding that it could be treated as a valid mortgage against the defendant No. 1 by regarding the defendant No. 2, one of the executants, not as an executant but as the writer and one of the attesting witnesses to the document. In our opinion, both these grounds are sound. The Subordinate Judge certainly ought not to have re-opened the question which had been decided by the Court of first instance and in respect of which there was no appeal. We also hold that the view which the learned Judge has taken with regard to the document is incorrect. The authorities are clear that a party to a document cannot, under any circumstances, be allowed to sign a document as an attesting witness and a person, who has once signed as an executant and as in the present case as one of the persons who were borrowing the money on the bond cannot be allowed to have his position altered from an executant of the bond to that of a witness for the purpose of rendering the document valid as a mortgage against the other executant. The authorities in support of this view are to be found in the cases of Seal v. Claridge (1), Prannath Sarkar v. Jadunath Saha (2) and Royzuddi Sheikh v. Kalinath Mookerjee (3). Disagreeing, therefore, with the finding of the lower Appellate Court, we hold that the document on which the suit was brought cannot be held to be valid as against the defendant No. 1 as mortgage. The lower Appellate Court held, and we think rightly, that the Court of first instance was wrong in holding that any charge on the property described in the document could be held to be created by the document. Section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act expressly states that where immoveable property of one person is by act of parties or by operation of law made security for the payment of money to another and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property; and, in this case, there can be no doubt that the document, if valid, amounted to a mortgage. In these circumstances, it is impossible to hold that any charge by it was created on the property. This is indeed the view which was taken by this Court in the case of Royzuddi Sheikh v. Kalinath Mookerjee (3). The only benefit which the plaintiffs could derive from the document would be to bring a suit against the presons who had executed it on the basis of the personal covenant contained in the bond. This is in accordance with the view taken by this Court in the case of Tofaluddi Peada v. Mahar Ali Shaha (4). Such a suit, however, ought to have been brought within three years from the date when the money was borrowed and, as in the present case, it appears that the present suit was not brought till more than five years after the execution of the document and the date when the loan was taken, the plaintiff's claim to recover on the personal covenant is clearly barred. The result, therefore, is that we decree the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and direct that the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

JOGENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE—DECREE-HOLDER—AUCTION-PURCHASER—PETITIONER

Sale in execution—Application to set aside sale—Person who had attached property sold, before judgment—Whether entitled to apply to set aside sale—Present interest—Difference between attachment before judgment and attachment after judgment—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90 and O. XXXVIII, r. 5.

An attachment before judgment does not by itself create any interest in the property attached.

Sewdut Roy v. Sree Canto Maity, 33 C. 639, 10 C. W. N. 634 and Basiran Malo v. Katyani Debi, 10 Ind. Cas. 305; 38 C. 448; 15 C. W. N. 795, followed.

Therefore, a person, who has obtained an attachment of property before judgment under Order XXXVIII, rule 5 of the Code of 1908, is not a person whose interest is affected by the sale of that property at the instance of a decree-holder against the defendant in suit, within the meaning of rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code, and, consequently, he cannot apply to set aside the sale under rule 90.

Rule in the matter of Miscellaneous Appeal No. 27 of 1911 of the second Sub-Judge's Court, Burdwan, and Miscellaneous Suit No. 103 of 1911 of the Munsif's Court at Asansole.

Babu Shiba Prosanna Bhattacharya, for the Petitioner.

Babu Baidya Nath Dutt, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law which requires decision in this Rule is one of first impression; namely, whether a person, who has obtained an attachment of property before judgment under Order XXXVIII, rule 5 of the Code of 1908, is a person whose interest is affected by the sale of that property at the instance of a decree-holder against the defendant in the suit within the meaing of rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code. It appears that the petitioner, Jogendra Nath Chatterjee, in execution of a decree for money which he held against his judgment-debtor, Basanta Kumar Chatterjee, purchased the disputed property at the execution sale on the 21st April 1911. On the 31st March 1911, the property had been attached at the instance of the opposite party, Monmatha Nath Ghose, during the pendency of a suit which he had instituted. On the 20th May following, Monmatha Nath Ghose applied for reversal of the sale under rule 90 of Order XXI of the Code. The application was resisted by Jogendra Nath Chatterjee on the ground that Monmatha Nath Ghose had no locus standi to make the application under rule 90. Effect was given to this contention and the application was refused. Upon appeal, that order has been discharged and the original Court has been directed to consider the matter on the merits. The Subordinate Judge has held that Monmatha Nath Ghose is entitled to apply under rule 90 as his interest has been affected by the sale. The question for consideration is, whether this view of the scope ef rule 90 is well founded.

On behalf of the petitioner, it has been contended that an attachment before judgment does not by itself create any interest in the property attached; and in support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Sewdut Roy v. Sree Canto Matiy (1) and

(1) 33 C. 639; 10 C. W. N. 634.

Basiran Malo v. Katayani Debi (2). On behalf of the opposite party the contrary view has been maintained, and reliance has been placed upon the cases of Moti Lal v. Karrabuldin (3) and Sankarlinga Reldi v. Kundasami Teven (4). In our opinion, the petitioner is entitled to succeed.

As was pointed out by Mr. Justice Woodroffe in the case of Sewdut Roy v. Sree Cant Maity (1), the object of an attachment before judgment is simply to safeguard the property, so as to enable the plaintiff to realise the amount of his decree if he should get one. He has, however, no lien or charge on the property which remains that of the defendant. He has a security; but this does not import present property or even beneficial interest. Substantially the same view was taken in the case of Basiran Malo v. Kattayani Debi (2), where the distinction between the two kinds of attachment, namely, attachment before judgment and attachment in execution, was explained, and it was pointed out that the objects for which the two kinds of attachment are made are entirely different. An attachment prior to decree is not an attachment for the enforcement of the decree; but it is a step taken merely for the purpose of preventing the debtor from delaying or obstructing such enforcement when the decree subsequently passed shall be sought to be executed. An attachment after decree, on the other hand, is an attachment made for the immediate purpose of carrying the decree into execution, and it pre-supposes an application on the part of the decree-holder to have his decree executed. The cases of Motilal v. Karrabuldin (3) and Sankaralinga Reldi v. Kandaswami Tevan (4) are not opposed to this view. In those cases, there was an attachment after judgment, and it was pointed out that even such an attachment in execution merely prevents alienation. It is further worthy of note that rule 90 requires that the applicant should be either the decree-holder or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets or whose interests are affected by the sale; in other words, such person must have an existing interest which is affected by the sale. The position of a person who has obtained an attachment before judgment and has not yet obtained a judgment, is that he has a chance of obtaining a judgment for the satisfaction whereof he is entitled to proceed against the property given to the Court by way of security. He had undoubtedly no present interest which is affected by the sale. We are, therefore, of opinion that the applicant under rule 90 had no locus standi and that his application was rightly rejected by the Court of first instance.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the order of the Subordinate Judge discharged and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of appeal below. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 153 (b)—Rent suit valued at less than Rs. 50—Trial by Munsif—Appeal—Jurisdiction of Appellate Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Two decrees of first Court—Decision of Appellate Court by one judgment—One rule on single petition—High Court's power to interfere—Question of jurisdiction not taken before Appellate Court—High Court's power to entertain objection.

Two rent suits were tried by a Munsif who was invested with powers under section 153 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In both the suits, the amount claimed was less than fifty rupees. The Munsif decreed them and the defendants appealed. The Sub-Judge decreed the appeals in one judgment. A Rule was granted by the High Court on a single petition in both the cases:

Held, (1) that no appeal lay to the Sub-Judge, and that, although the point was not taken before the lower Appellate Court, the High Court could entertain the objection as it was a question of jurisdiction.

(2) that it was competent to the High Court to grant a Rule on a single petition which would have the effect of setting aside two decrees which were made the matter of a single appeal.

of the Sub-Judge of Chittagong, (Rent Suits Nos. 685 and 687 of 1910 of the Court of the Munsif of Hathazari).

Babu Khitish Chandra Sen, for the Petitioner.

Babu Protodh Kumar Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, it appears that two rent suits were tried by a Munsif who was invested with powers under section 153 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In one suit, the amount claimed was Rs. 40-2, in the other it was Rs. 19-7. The Munsif decreed both the suits in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants then lodged appeals in both cases before the Subordinate Judge, who decreed the appeals in one judgment. A Rule was granted to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside. On the merits, the ground put forward by the petitioner is that under the circumstances, the decrees of the Munsif were final and that no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge. This appears to us to be so. The point was not taken before the lower Appellate Court, but it is a question of jurisdiction. On the merits, therefore, this Rule is made absolute and the petitioner is entitled to his costs, the hearing fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

A preliminary objection, however, was raised before us, that it is not competent to this Court to grant a Rule on a single petition which would have the effect of setting aside two decrees, although these two decrees were made the matter of a single appeal. We are not inclined to agree that the powers of this Court are so limited. But in any case, it makes no practical difference because we have power to act under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, in either of the cases. Therefore, either taking the Rule as it stands or acting under the provisions of section 115 in one of these appeals, we see no reason to modify the order which we have just made.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 25—Remission of issue— Direction to take further evidence, whether necessary—Discretion of Court.

Where an Appellate Court remands a case under Order XLI, rule 25, with the object of obtaining from the lower Court a finding on a specific issue, after a reconsideration of the whole of somewhat complicated evidence in the case, with special reference to the pleas urged on behalf of the plaintiff, it is in the discretion of the Appellate Court not to direct additional evidence to be taken, if it is of opinion that it is not required.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Allahabad, dated 18th March 1911.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The essential facts of this case are given in my remand order, dated the 26th of April 1912. I may so far recapitulate them as to point out that a share of $10\frac{1}{2}$ pies in an undivided patti of $4\frac{1}{2}$ annas was mortgaged by one Musammat Jitan, the recorded owner of the same and was eventually brought to sale under a mortgage decree and purchased by the ancestor of Debi Prasad, defendant No. 5, on the 20th of October 1897. The twelfth paragraph of the plaint distinctly admits that the auction-purchaser has been in adverse possession, so far as this share is concerned, since the 20th of October 1897. The plaintiff is himself a co-sharer, apparently of a share of one-anna in the same undivided patti and has been receiving and enjoying the profits of this share. He claims that he is entitled to the same rateable proportion in the share of a $10\frac{1}{2}$ pies put up to sale as the property of Musammat Jitan and that his cause of action for a suit to recover possession of the said share accrued to him on the 20th of August 1897, when he was dispossessed by reason of the auction sale. Amongst other pleas raised in defence, was the plea that the plaintiff had never been in possession within limitation. This point was decided against the plaintiff by both the Courts below and the plaintiff came to this Court in second appeal. There had been in the Court of first instance a specific issue in the following terms:—"Whether the plaintiff has been in possession of the property in suit within twelve years of the institution of the suit or is the claim time-barred?" When the case was argued before me on the 26th of April 1912, it seemed to me that the Courts below, and more particularly the lower Appellate Court, had not considered the question of limitation in such a manner as to do justice to the plaintiff's case. The suit was instituted on the 12th of October 1909, and the mere adverse possession of the auction-purchaser from the 20th of October 1897 onwards, was not sufficient to put the case outside limitation. Moreover, it seemed to me that the question had not been fully considered whether prior to the auction sale, the plaintiff might not have been in constructive possession of the share claimed by him, either as a member of a joint Hindu family or as one of a body of co-sharers receiving and enjoying the entire profits of the patti jointly in spite of the specification of shares recorded in the village papers. I, therefore, remitted an issue to the lower Appellate Court on this point. The record has now been returned with a finding against the appellant and to this finding objections have been filed by the said plaintiff-appellant. I do not think there is any force in the contention that the finding returned does not cover the whole grounds taken by the remanded issue. The finding is first of all, that, except as a member of a joint Hindu family, the plaintiff had made out no case for constructive possession on his part during the period covered by the remanded issue; and secondly, that the family was not joint during the period referred to. I do not think this finding can be contested on any of the grounds taken in the memorandum of objections unless there be force in the contention that the lower Appellate Court erred in not admitting evidence on the remanded issue. Now I am, perhaps, to a slight extent, to blame for the difficulty which has arisen on this point. When I passed my remand order I was clearly of opinion that the plaintiff, having been put to proof of his possession within limitation by the fourth issue as framed in the Court of first instance and having nowhere pleaded in first or second appeal that he had been in any way misled by the frame of the issues, or that any evidence which he might otherwise have produced had been kept back by him in consequence of the form in which the issues were framed, had no right to produce further evidence upon my order of remand. I framed my issue on this assumption but I was, perhaps, in error in not laying down explicitly that the issue was to be tried on the evidence already on the record. The lower Appellate Court has, however, carried out my intention by declining to admit additional evidence. It is contended, however, that by reason of the wording of Order XLI, rule 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an Appellate Court remanding an issue under that rule is bound to direct additional evidence to be taken. I certainly think that the rule in question is framed on the assumption that where a Court has omitted to frame or try an issue or to determine any question of fact essential to the right determination of the suit, an issue remitted by the Appellate Court will ordinarily require to be tried on fresh evidence. In the present case, an issue had been framed which sufficiently covered the ground and my only object was to obtain from the lower Appellate Court a finding upon a narrower and more specific issue after a re-consideration of the whole of somewhat complicated evidence in the case with special reference to the pleas urged on behalf of the plaintiff. I think that the words "additional evidence required" in Order XLI, rule 25, aforesaid are at least sufficient to leave the Appellate Court discretion not to direct additional evidence to be taken if it is of opinion that it is not required. There remains only one point in the case and that is a contention embodied in the plaintiff's memorandum of appeal to this Court which is more or less independent of the particular issue remitted by me in my former order. The plaintiff contends that as he has all along been a co-sharer in this undivided patti, it does not really lie on him to prove possession within limitation but on the defendants to prove adverse possession based upon some definite assertion of adverse title. The plea was supported in argument by various rulings which either deal with the case of a recorded co-sharer claiming profits from a lambardar or otherwise appeared to me more or less distinguishable from the particular case before me. I think, however, that this particular question does not arise in this case. The frame of suit excludes it. The suit is in ejectment against the defendants who, according to the plaint, have been excluding the plaintiff from the enjoyment of profits since the 20th of October 1897. To such a suit, it is Article 142, and not Article 144, of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908), which applies and the defendants are entitled to put the plaintiff to proof of his possession within limitation. I quite admit that such possession may be actual or constructive and the remanded issue was framed on this assumption. Accepting the finding on the remanded issue, I hold that this appeal must fail. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23—Market-value—Award based on speculations as to future development of the land.

An award of compensation under the Land Acquisition Act cannot be made on speculations and hypothetical schemes of the future development of the land.

Where a Land Acquisition Judge took the market-value of the land at Rs. 1-8-0 per square yard, but on the ground that the plot was a large one and the claimant could not dispose of it in 9 years, made a deduction of 25 per cent. and made further deductions on account of roads which would have to be made to sell the land as a building site:

Held, that this method of awarding compensation was improper.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. S. Sivaswami Aiyar, Advocate-General, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Government has acquired a site measuring 24,103 1/5 square yards near Bezwada Railway station. The District Judge has awarded Rs. 23,797 as the proper price of the land, including the compensation at 15 per cent. This works out at the rate of between 13 and 14 annas a square yard. This sum is somewhat in excess of what was awarded by the Collector. The claimant claimed at the rate of Rs. 2 per square yard and that is the claim he has put forward in the appeal. The learned Judge, in arriving at the award, has, in our opinion, proceeded on a wrong basis. He takes the market-value of land at Rs. 1-8; he then says, the plot is a very large one and the claimant would not be able to dispose of it in less than 9 years and for that reason he makes a deduction of 25 per cent. He makes a further deduction on account of roads which, according to him, will have to be made in order to sell the land as a building site, and he also deducts a certain amount for expenses of plan making etc. There is no evidence whatever to support this hypothetical scheme of development of the land. The learned District Judge appears to have proceeded on a ruling in The Trustees for the Improvement of the City of Bombay v. Karsandas (1), but that case has no application here. The land there was in a large commercial town and the scheme for development so far as it appears, was supported by evidence on record. In this case, the whole thing seems to be based on mere conjecture. Rejecting the process by which the Land Acquisition Judge arrived at his figure, we have, however, evidence on the record upon which, though it is not quite as satisfactory and conclusive evidence as might be expected, it is possible to arrive at a safe conclusion. There is evidence to show that certain plots very near the land in question have been sold in recent times at different rates varying from 15 annas to Rs. 2 a square yard. But these are all small plots of land. There is also evidence of two offers made to the claimant, one with respect to 1,000 square yards which a man proposed to buy at Rs. 1 8-0 a square yard and another with respect to a plot of 800 square yards for which the claimant was offered a rate of Rs. 1-4 per square yard. These offers the claimant refused; it appears that, since the date of those offers, he had no other offers giving him a higher price for any large quantity of land. There is also evidence to show that from certain feeding houses on the claimant's land, he gets a rent of about Rs. 50 or 60 a month. No doubt, income of that character is not a very certain basis to be proved upon, but it ought to be considered along with the other evidence in the case. Taking at 20 years' purchase, that would amount to about Rs. 12,000 for a very small portion of the land acquired. The learned Advocate-General has argued that there is no clear evidence of any demand for such a large plot of land of 24,000 square yards, that, if there had been any real demand for it, the claimant would have been able to dispose of it by this time. He, therefore, suggests that the 14-annas per square yard which has been allowed by the District Judge is more than ample value for the land acquired. It is true that beyond the offer with respect to the plot of 1,000 square yards and another plot of 800 square yards already mentioned, there is no sufficiently reliable evidence to show that there has been a demand for any large plot of land in the acquired area. But there may be one explanation as to why there has been no further offer, since the date of Exhibits G & H, which refer to the two plots already referred to. The facts that the claimant refused to accept these offers apparently expecting a higher price might well be a reason why he did not get further offers afterwards on any large scale. The fact that he did not get any higher offers does not show that there was no demand for the land at the rate mentioned in Exhibits G & H. There is also the evidence of sale of small plots in the neighbourhood and of the income from the feeding houses. We may also mention the fact that the Tahsildar, who was examined on Commission in this case, has reported that the value of a plot of land of 2,000 square yards which the Government proposed to acquire in 1904 was Rs. 1-8-0 a square yard. As against all this evidence, two witnesses were examined on behalf of the Collector besides the Tahsildar. These men own two small plots of land not far from the land which has been acquired, but in a less favourable locality. They bought them at the rate of about 4-annas but their evidence shows that the price of those lands at the time they gave their evidence, that is in 1909, was at least one rupee a square yard. On considering the whole of the evidence, the conclusion we have come to is that one rupee a square yard for the entire plot would be a proper price. The decree of the District Judge will, therefore, be varied by increasing the amount awarded to Rs. 27,718 including the 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition. Interest will be allowed on the excess amount at 6 per cent. per annum from 24th May 1907 when the Collector took possession of the land until payment. Each party will pay and receive proportionate costs.

Decree varied.

BALWANT SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Widow—Authority to adopt—Power "to adopt another boy should the one adopted under authority die," meaning of—Widow making adoption, whether competent to question validity—Estoppel.

After the death of her husband, the plaintiff adopted a boy in 1877 declaring by deed that she did so in accordance with the Will of her husband. The boy died and in 1883, she adopted another boy still purporting to act in accordance with her husband's Will. This boy also died, so in 1890 she adopted the defendant. At that time she executed a deed with full appreciation of its contents. In the deed she said: "My husband made this Will—'I strictly order you to adopt some boy to me. * * If the son who might be adopted should die, you will have power to adopt another boy.'"

In the following year, one B., claiming as reversionary heir, instituted a suit against the plaintiff and the defendant for a declaration that the adoption of the defendant was invalid. In her defence, the plaintiff informed the Court that she had full oral authority from her husband, and that he had not limited her to one, two, three, or four sons. That suit failed.

The plaintiff and the defendant having since quarrelled, the present suit was brought in order to get rid of the adoption altogether:

Held, on a consideration of all the facts, that the defendant was duly adopted.

Held, also, that, as the plaintiff asserted her authority in the most solemn manner, she could not now be allowed to change her story without causing grave injustice to those who have acted in reliance upon her representations, and that she must, therefore, be held to her word and to the results of her conduct.

Appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 4th August, 1908, of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces at Allahabad, affirming a judgment and decree, dated the 26th February 1906, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur, in whose Court the appellant, as plaintiff, sued the respondent to obtain a declaration that she had no power to adopt the respondent, that, in fact, she never did adopt him, and that a document, called a deed of adoption dated the 13th January 1899, was null and void. Both Courts in India dismissed the suit. For a report of the judgment of the High Court see Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (1).

The facts of the case are stated in the judgment of their Lordships.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., and Mr. G. E. A. Ross, for the Appellant:—The law of estoppel in India, as laid down in section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, is the same as it is in England: Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (2). The appellant is not estopped from raising the question of the validity of the adoption of the respondent on the ground that she had no authority from her husband to adopt him. The fact that the adoption in question took place on her representation does not estop her from saying that that adoption is invalid: Omrao Singh v. Mehtab Koonwer (3); Parvatibayamma v Ramakrishna Row (4); Gurulingaswami v. Ramalakshmamma (5) and Gopee Lall v. Musammat Sree Chundraolee Buhoojee (6). It is submitted that the cases of Sukhbasi Lal v. Guman Singh (7) and Durga v. Khushalo (8) relied on by the High Court are erroneous. The case of Ravji Vinayakrav Jaggannath Shankarsett v. Lakshmibai (9) was distinguished.

If it is decided that the appellant was not estopped as held by the Courts below, the question arises whether she had any authority from her deceased husband to adopt the respondent. It is submitted that even assuming that she had his authority as alleged, such authority will not extend to the adoption in question.

[Mr. AMEER ALI. Suppose the husband gave authority to adopt a son to perform his funeral rites, would that not be sufficient authority to adopt another boy in case one adopted died?]

[Mr. De Gruyther referred to Kannepalli Suryanarayana v. Pucha Vankata Ramana (10), where it is decided that it would be sufficient.]

There must be an express authority and an adoption actually made without such an authority is illegal and invalid: Tulshi Ram v. Behari Lal (11).

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., and Mr. B. Dube, for the Respondent, were not called upon, but Mr. De Gruyther referred to Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (2).

JUDGMENT.

LORD ROBSON.—The appellant is the widow of one Raja Raghubir Singh, and she sued the defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur to obtain a declaration that she had not adopted him as a son to her deceased husband, and that if, in fact, any ceremony of adoption had been performed, it was invalid owing to the absence of authority on her part from her husband to make such adoption. She further prayed that a document purporting to be a deed of adoption, dated the 13th January 1899, should be declared void as being executed by her without such authority as aforesaid.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit with costs and the High Court of Allahabad confirmed his decree.

Raja Raghubir Singh was the owner of the extensive Landhaura Estate or Raj in the District of Saharanpur, in the United Provinces. He died on the 23rd April 1868, at the age of 20 years leaving the appellant, the Rani, his widow and sole heir. She was then only 14 years old, and enciente. Raghubir Singh was a religious man and was desirous of leaving behind him a son who should perform his shradh ceremonies and transmit to future generations the name and prestige of the Raj. When, during his last illness, he became hopeless of recovery, recognising the possibility that the child about to be born to his wife might be a girl, or might not survive, he gave formal and emphatic directions to his wife in regard to the adoption of a son. The Rani herself has pledged her word as to the nature and scope of those directions on more than one public and important occasion. She did so particularly in the deed of the 13th January 1899 and in her defence to the action of one Baldeo Singh, which will be hereafter referred to. In the deed, which she undoubtedly executed with full appreciation of its contents, she says:—

"He made this Will to me by way of precaution. If God forbid, you give birth to a daughter, or if a son be born but die after his birth, I strictly order you to adopt some boy to me so that he might perform my shradh ceremony and yours, and perpetuate my name, and after your death become the absolute owner and possessor of the whole of my estate. If (God forbid) the son who might be adopted under this authority should die in your life-time, you will have power to adopt another boy."

In her defence to Baldeo Singh's action, she informed the Court that she had full oral authority from her husband, and that he had not limited her to one, two, three, or four sons.

The Rani gave birth to a son on the 16th December 1868. He died on the 31st August 1870, leaving the Rani owner of the Raj. In 1877, she adopted a boy named Tohfa Singh, declaring by deed that she did so in accordance with the Will of her husband. Tohfa Singh died two years after and the Rani, thereupon, in 1883, adopted a boy named Ram Sarup, still purporting to act in accordance with her husband's Will. Ram Sarup died in 1885, and in 1893 the Rani made arrangements with a view to adopting a third boy. She executed an agreement in 1893 with one Lada Singh whereby he agreed to give her his son "to comply with the Will of her husband," but before the adoption was formally carried out, this boy unfortunately died in 1896.

These successive deaths seriously impressed the mind of the Rani, and she consulted her priests as to how the evil spirits might best be propitiated and appeased. Acting on priestly advice, she went on pilgrimages to Gaya and other places, and after making religious sacrifices, she proceeded to arrange for another adoption. On the 2nd June 1893 she entered into a written agreement with Ram Niwaz, the father of the respondent, whereby he made over to her his two sons, Balwant Singh (respondent) aged 14 years, and Tungal Singh, aged 12 years:—

"In order that she may adopt any one of them she pleases having regard to their capability and her choice. Now the sons of me, the executant, shall live under the protection and custody of the said Rani Sahiba, subject to the fulfilment of the further conditions necessary for the validity of the adoption, the enforcement of which depends upon a particular time which may be considered suitable according to the rules of astrology. I shall have no claim as to their protection and guardianship."

The Rani ultimately selected the respondent, Balwant Singh, and preparations were made for his adoption on an imposing scale. The 13th January 1899 was appointed for the ceremony, and on that day, a great entertainment was given by the Rani. The European and Indian officials of the district, together with hundreds of friends, relations and caste-fellows, were present at the invitation of the Rani, and were hospitably regaled by her. The religious ceremonies proper to an adoption were all carried out and the newly adopted son was conducted to the gaddi, or throne, where he was formally installed.

The Rani next proceeded to bring about the marriage of the respondent and that ceremony was celebrated at her expense and in a manner befitting his new rank. In fact, the respondent was thenceforth treated as a member of the Rani's family and cut off altogether from the family of his natural father.

In the following year, Baldeo Singh, claiming as reversionary heir, instituted a suit against the Rani and the respondent, in which he sought to have it declared that he was entitled to the property on the death of the Rani, and that the adoption of Balwant Singh was invalid. The Rani defended that suit, and, acting upon her instructions, her Pleader made the statement as to her authority before mentioned, and she herself executed and filed a written statement alleging that she had in fact adopted the respondent, and that the adoption was valid in every respect. Baldeo Singh failed in that suit on the ground that he was not a reversioner and had no locus standi to impeach the adoption in question, but the allegations of fact by the Rani in regard to the adoption are now very properly pressed against her.

The adopted son and the Rani have since quarrelled, and in this action, she seeks to get rid of the adoption altogether.

At one time, she stated that the seal affixed to the deed of adoption was not her seal but she did not attempt to support this allegation by production of the seal regularly used by her, saying that she had mislaid it somewhere. However, documents admittedly executed by her and bearing seal impressions identical with that in dispute were produced and the genuineness of the seal on the deed of adoption was placed beyond doubt.

The learned Subordinate Judge stated the issues or questions arising in the case as follows:—

"1. Whether the plaintiff had knowledge of the contents of the deed of adoption when she executed it and got it registered, or whether she had no knowledge of them?

"2. Was or was not the defendant adopted by the plaintiff?

"3. Had or had not the plaintiff any authority from her husband to adopt the defendant?

"4. If the first and second issues be decided against the plaintiff, how will it affect the claim?"

With regard to the first of these questions, the Rani pleaded that she was a pardanashin lady, and never understood the contents of the document, or had even known what it was; but the learned Subordinate Judge formed the opinion that the long examinations to which she had, on different occasions, been subjected, and the extreme shrewdness which she displayed in dealing with the questions showed that she was an acute and intelligent lady, and that her only difficulties arose from the impossibilty of making her statements fit with undoubted facts. The deed was executed by her under circumstances of the greatest publicity, and with the assistance of competent and independent advice from many quarters. It was attested by no less than 28 witnesses. It was subsequently registered (on her own admission of execution) and was frequently and openly referred to by the Rani as a deed of adoption. The Trial Judge, therefore, found that she executed the deed with full knowledge and understanding of its contents, and the High Court agreed with him.

The Rani next denies that the adoption was in fact carried out. The great entertainment of the 13th January 1899 was, according to her, only an intimation to the public that she meant at some future time to carry the adoption into effect. On this point, except for the allegations of the Rani herself, the only evidence worth considering was practically all one way, and as to the Rani's testimony, the learned Judge says, in plain terms, that she had made so many untrue statements that it was impossible to believe her, while the evidence produced on her behalf was utterly unreliable and untrue. The High Court agree with this finding as to the justice of which there can be no doubt.

The third question, viz., as to whether the Rani had authority from her husband to adopt the defendant, gives rise to the point which has been argued before their Lordships. The Rani contends that the authority conferred upon her by her husband did not extend, according to its strict wording, beyond the adoption of a second boy in case the first adopted son should die, and that such authority was, therefore, exhausted by the adoption of Ram Sarup. Their Lordships are of opinion that this was not the true effect of the authority, in fact, conferred upon the Rani. She may not have remembered with precision the words used by her husband on his death-bed, but whatever the exact words may have been, undoubtedly the effect they then produced on her mind, and on the minds of those about her was that which she set forth in her statement in Baldeo Singh's action, viz., "that her husband had not limited the authority to make such adoption to one, two, three, or four sons."

That is the meaning on which she has consistently acted until her quarrel with the respondent, and the words ascribed to her husband, according to her recollection, in the deed of adoption, have always, until this litigation, been regarded by her and her advisers as intended to express a general authority. What the deceased Raja intended was that, if necessary, "some boy" should be adopted to him "so that he might perform my shradh ceremony, and yours, and perpetuate my name, and after your death become the absolute owner and possessor of the whole of my estate," but in expressing this intention, he saw that it might be defeated by death if construed in a restrictive sense as meaning some "one" boy, so he went on to deal with that contingency by directing, in substance, that effect was, in any event, to be given to the general intention, and if one boy died, another boy was to be adopted. The Trial Judge did not expressly decide this question of fact. He found, as did the High Court, that, in the circumstances of this case, the Rani was estopped from alleging want of authority.

Their Lordships, in reviewing the facts of the case, are of opinion that the question may well be decided as one of fact on the Rani's own statements without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel. In their view, she was speaking the truth in Baldeo Singh's action when she was pleading as to her authority. Their Lordships, however, do not differ from the Courts below in the view they have taken as to the applicability of the doctrine of estoppel in this case. Of course, the estoppel pleaded against the Rani must be taken as purely personal. It does not bind anyone who claims by an independent title, but, in view of the decision now given, that the respondent was, in fact, duly adopted, further litigation on the point may be taken as happily out of the question. So far as the Rani herself is concerned, it would indeed be difficult to have a stronger case of estoppel. She has asserted her authority in the most solemn manner under her hand and seal, and her conduct both before and after that assertion has been of a like unequivocal character. She could not now be allowed to change her story without grave injustice ensuing to those who have acted in reliance upon her deliberate and repeated representations. The respondent is now severed from his natural family; he has undergone a change of social status which may or may not be beneficial to him, but which has certainly so altered his mode of life as to make a relapse into his former condition a grievous hardship upon him. He and his friends have been driven to expenses in the maintenance of the privileges with which the Rani purported to endow him. He married on the faith of his adoptive mother's word, and, no doubt, has creditors who have sold him goods or lent him money in like reliance on her good faith.

Under these circumstances, the Rani's argument that the doctrine of estoppel does not apply because the defendant could show no loss or detriment, is without any substance whatever and she must be held to her word and to the results of her conduct.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—Khub Chand owed Rs. 500 to Musammat Girnari. Mitra Sen and Niadar Mal had decrees against her. The amount of the decree of Mitra Sen (No. 599 of 1908) was Rs. 724 including costs and the amount of two decrees of Niadar Mal was Rs. 379-1. Mitra Sen, in execution of his decree No. 599 of 1908, attached the sum of Rs 500 in the hands of Khub Chand on the 5th of February 1909. Niadar Mal on the 25th of March 1909 put his decrees into execution and applied for rateable distribution. On the 8th of September 1909, the assets of Girnari save the sum of Rs 500 were distributed. Mitra Sen got Rs. 161-12 and a balance of Rs. 562-4 remained due to him. The execution proceedings started by Mitra Sen were struck off. The order is silent as to the raising of the attachment of Rs. 500 which was effected on the 5th of February 1909. Mitra Sen, on the 5th of January 1910, certified to the Court the payment of Rs. 500 to him by Khub Chand in satisfaction of his decree, No. 599 of 1908, against Girnari. The result of this payment was that Rs. 62-4 remained due to him and that his decree was not wholly satisfied. On the 18th of March 1911, the plaintiff Niadar Mal, in executing his decrees, applied for the attachment of Rs. 500 in the hands of Khub Chand, who pleaded payment to Mitra Sen. The Court on the 8th of April 1911 directed him to seek the remedy that may be open to him. Niadar Mal, therefore, brought an action for a declaration that he was entitled to attach the Rs. 500. One of the pleas in defence was that the money was paid by Khub Chand to Mitra Sen while there was no subsisting attachment and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no cause of action against Khub Chand. The Court of first instance decreed the claim and the decree was upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

The contention in second appeal is, that the attachment of Rs. 500 came to an end as soon as the execution proceedings were struck off on the 8th of September 1909 on the satisfaction of the decree in part.

The contention has no force. Under section 64, Civil Procedure Code, "where an attactment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached—shall be void as against all claims enforcible under the attachment", and for the purposes of section 64, Civil Procedure Code, "Claims enforcible under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets. Niadar Mal had applied for rateable distribution and he would be entitled to the benefit of the attachment of Rs. 500 so long as the attachment thereof subsisted. Now, let us see when an attachment once made comes to an end. Order XXI, rule 55 is,—

"Where—

(a) the amount decreed with costs and all charges and expenses resulting from the attachment of any property are paid into Court, or

(b) satisfaction of the decree is otherwise made through the Court or certified to the Court, or

(c) the decree is set aside or reversed, the attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn". . . . .

The language of the rule leads me to infer that the attachment of a property cannot be deemed to be withdrawn when satisfaction of the decree in part only is certified to the Court especially when the satisfaction in part is due to the payment of the money attached. In my opinion, the attachment of Rs. 500 was not withdrawn on the 8th of September 1909 when the execution proceedings were struck off on satisfaction of the decree in part nor was it withdrawn on the 5th of January 1910 when Mitra Sen certified to the Court that he, in satisfaction of his decree received Rs. 500 out of Rs. 562-4 0 from Khub Chand. As the attachment of Rs. 500 was not withdrawn and as the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of the attachment, his suit was rightly decreed.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. T. Subramania Aiyar, for Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, a minor, is the son of one Peria Goundan deceased. Peria Gounden had executed a mortgage to one Ramaswami Reddi in the year 1891. Subsequent to his death, his widow, the first defendant, the step-mother of the plaintiff, executed a fresh mortgage to Ramaswamy in 1897 in discharge of the debt due under Exhibit 1 and in consideration of the receipt of another sum of Rs. 50. Then in June 1903, the mortgaged property was sold by first defendant to second and third defendants to discharge Ramasawmy's mortgage: and the second and third defendant sold the property a few months afterwards to the fourth defendant in November 1903. The plaintiff sues to recover the property from the fourth defendant on the ground that the mortgage and the sale made by the first defendant are not binding on him. The lower Courts have given the plaintiff a decree conditional on his paying the sum of Rs. 300 due on the mortgage executed by the first defendant in renewal of the original mortgage executed by Peria Goundan.

It is contended in second appeal that the sale ought to have been held to be binding on the minor. The Subordinate Judge says that no attempt was made to show that the sale was for the minor's benefit. It is argued that, as the object of the sale was to discharge the mortgage-bond of 1897, it must be held to have been justified by necessity. On the mortgage-bond only the mortaged property could have been proceeded against so far as the minor was concerned. If there was any covenant for payment in the document, that would not bind the minor. Nothing, therefore, was gained for the minor by the sale of the property without the receipt of any additional consideration on his behalf. His position would not have become worse by the sale not taking place. It was quite open to the fourth defendant to show, if he could, that the minor would have suffered detriment in some way, if the sale had not been made by his step-mother to discharge the debt due to Ramasawmy. No attempt was made to prove this. I am, therefore, of opinion that the lower Courts were right in holding that the sale would not bind the minor. I may observe that the 1st defendant did not as a fact purport to execute the sale-deed as guardian of the plaintiff. The plaintiff was not living with her or under her protection. It is stated that she was dealing with the property in question and the lower Courts have proceeded on the footing that the mortgage-deed executed by her for discharging the original executed by her husband would be binding on her step-son, the argument being that because she chose to cultivate the lands of her husband, that fact gave her the powers of a guardian. It is unnecessary to deal with this proposition, though I would find considerable difficulty in accepting it if I had to do so. I reject the second appeal.

Second Appeal—Application to set aside execution sale on ground of fraud—Difference between old and new Codes—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104, sub-s. (2), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 90 and O. XLIII, cl. (j)—Sale held under old Code—Decision of lower Appellate Court under new Code—Whether second appeal lies—Revision—Limitation—Erroneous decision on point of limitation, no ground for interference in revision by High Court.

Under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, a sale in execution could be impeached for fraud under section 244 thereof, and, therefore, a second appeal lay. But under the present Code of 1908, fraud is put on the same footing as material irregularity by Order XXI, rule 90, and section 104, sub-section (2) read with Order XLIII, clause (j), makes it clear that there is now no second appeal in such a case.

A sale was held in execution under the old Code. The first application to set it aside on the ground of fraud was made and allowed by the first Court under the old Code. The order was set aside on appeal and the case remanded under the old Code. On remand, the application was dismissed by the first Court on June 12, 1909, that is, when the new Code had come into operation. There was an appeal and the original order was once more set aside and the case again remanded. A second appeal was preferred against the remand order:

Held, that this order having been made under the new Code, the appeal was incompetent.

An error in applying the law of limitation is not an error which can be corrected in revision; for it cannot be held that a Court, which has jurisdiction to decide a case, has acted without jurisdiction, or illegally, or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, where it makes a mistake in law through failure to appreciate the whole of the law on the subject.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an appellate order, which reversed an order of the Court of first instance, setting aside a sale in execution on the ground of fraud and material irregularity in publishing and conducting it, and remanded the case for further consideration.

A preliminary objection is taken that no such appeal lies under the present Code of Civil Procedure. This objection undoubtedly must prevail if the present Code applies; for under it fraud is put on the same footing as material irregularity by Order XXI, rule 90, and section 104, sub-section (2), read with Order XLIII, clause (j), makes it clear that there is now no second appeal in a case such as this.

Under the Code of 1882, a sale could be impeached for fraud under section 244 thereof, and, therefore, a second appeal lay. The sale, with which we are here concerned, was held on the 17th September 1900, that is to say, under the old Code. The first application for setting it aside was made on the 23rd July 1907, and allowed by the first Court on the 6th July 1908; but the order was set aside on appeal and the case remanded on the 6th November 1908. On remand the application was dismissed by the Court of first instance on the 12th June 1909. There was an appeal, and on the 29th January 1910, the original order was once more set aside and the case, again, remanded. The present second appeal is against the remand.

The new Code came into force on the 1st January 1909, and, therefore, both the original order and the appellate order with which we are now dealing, were made under it. The question is whether the matter of appeal is governed by it or by the old Code.

The learned Vakil, who appears on behalf of the appellant, relies on section 6, clause (c) of the General Clauses Act of 1897, and on the decision of the Judicial Committee in The Colonial Sugar Refining Company Limited v. Irving (1).

The case referred to is, no doubt, the highest authority for holding that the disturbance of an existing right of appeal is not a mere alteration of procedure, and that litigants have from the time they came into Court a vested right to any appeal then provided by law. Consequently, the general rule against the retrospective operation of a repealing Act applies, and unless it is otherwise expressly provided, the repealed provisions relating to appeals continue to govern the pending cases. Now, the law in India against the retrospective construction of a repealing enactment is to be found in section 6 of the General Clauses Act above referred to and that section (we quote only so much as is necessary) provides that where an Act repeals any enactment, then, "unless a different intention appears, the repeal shall not affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under any enactment so repealed, or affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation or liability as aforesaid; and any such investigation, legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced as if the repealing Act had not been passed." If the matter stood there, we are inclined to think that we should be constrained by the decision of the Privy Council to overrule the preliminary objection. But we must not overlook the words "unless a different intention appears," which control section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, and the provisions of section 154 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which provides that nothing in the new Code "shall affect any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement." It seems to us that a "present right of appeal" can mean only a right existing on the 1st January 1909, to appeal against a particular order passed under the former Code and subsisting on that date. The words "present right" are well understood. The meaning to be placed upon them is clear, and in this connection we need only refer to the remarks of Lord Esher M. R. in Hornsey Local Board v. Monarch Investment Building Society (2). Having regard, then, to the express term of section 154 of the new Code, we are of opinion that there is here evidenced a distinct intention to limit the operation of the provisions of section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, quoted above.

The preliminary objection, therefore, prevails and this appeal must be dismissed with costs as being incompetent. We assess the hearing-fee at 2 gold mohurs.

RULE No. 3036 OF 1910.

There remains an application that we should move in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or section 15 of the Charter Act.

The first Court took all the appellant's evidence and dismissed the application on the ground of limitation, and also on the merits. The lower Appellate Court pointed out, however, that the applicant was a minor, and that, therefore, he was entitled to the benefit of section 7 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877, which corresponds with section 6 of the present Indian Limitation Act of 1908. The order was consequently set aside, and, as we have said in dealing with the appeal, the case was remanded for fresh consideration. The contention on behalf of the petitioner before us is that the learned Subordinate Judge was clearly wrong in his decision on the point of limitation, the error being caused by his having obviously overlooked the provisions of section 9 of the Limitation Act, under which when once limitation has begun to run, no subsequent disability can stop it.

It appears that the original judgment-debtor, the father of the opposite party, died some time after the sale, and, therefore, time began to run. That being so, the learned Subordinate Judge does seem to have made a mistake; but the question is whether the mistake is one which can be put right by us in revision. The learned Vakil's argument is this that if a suit or an application is really barred by limitation, then section 4 of the Limitation Act lays it down that the Court is bound to dismiss it. If then the Court makes a mistake and fails to dismiss a suit which is in fact out of time, then it may be said to have acted without jurisdiction. This, no doubt, was the view expressed by Oldfield and Mahmood, JJ., in Har Prasad v. Jafar Ali (3), but precisely the contrary view was taken by Edge, C J., and Benerjee, J., in Sundar Singh v. Doru Shankar (4). We find it exceedingly difficult to hold that a Court, which has jurisdiction to decide a case, can be said to have acted without jurisdiction, or illegally, or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, where it makes a mistake in law through failure to appreciate the whole of the law on the subject, and we are inclined to follow the opinion recently expressed on the original side of this Court in Ram Gopal Jhoonjhoonwalla v. Joharmal Khemka (5) to the effect that an error in applying the law of limitation is not an error which can be corrected on revision.

We have been pressed with a number of other decisions of this Court, and particularly with that of Bhagwan Ramanuj v. Khetther Moni Dassi (6), where the learned Judges expressed the opinion that section 622 of the Code of 1882, with which section 115 of the present Code corrosponds, is evidently intended to authorize the High Court to interfere, and correct gross and palpable errors on the part of the Subordinate Courts so as to prevent injustice in non-appealable cases. We have no desire to say anything which might tend to limit by defining our powers under the section; but we hesitate to accept this ruling in so far as it draws a distinction between gross and palpable errors and other errors. All that we need say is, that the fact that the lower Court seems to have overlooked section 9 of the Limitation Act is not, in our opinoin, sufficient to justify us in exercising our revisional powers.

We have assumed so far that section 9 of the Limitation Act does apply; but that section has been the subject of not a few decisions, and its applicability is not always obvious, so that, for aught we know, the learned Subordinate Judge may have noticed it, but come to the conclusion that it was not applicable, and he may possibly be right, although on facts, so far as they appear now, he would seem to have been wrong.

The result is that the Rule also must be discharged. We make no separate order as to costs.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17 cl. (d) proviso—Rent in kind.

The proviso to section 17, clause (d) of the Registration Act, is not confined to cases where the rent is payable in money; it applies also where the rent is wholly, or partly payable in grain.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Godavary, at Rajahmundry, in A. S. No. 9 of 1908, persented against that of the Court of the District Munsif of Rajahmundry, in O. S. No. 942 of 1906.

FACTS.—The facts in this case are briefly as follows:

The plaintiff sued to recover from the defendants Rs. 552 8, being the value of grain rent due under an unregistered lease deed (Exhibit D) for five years.

The defendants denied that the plaintiff had any lands in the village, and alleged that they did not execute the Exhibit D, and that they were not the lessees.

The District Munsif held that Exhibit D was genuine, and gave a decree to plaintiff for Rs. 184-2-8, being the rent for one fasli because it was based on a contract in Exhibit D, consideration for which was help and loans given by the plaintiff, and disallowed the rest of the claim for damages for use and occupation because the plaintiff did not establish his title to the suit lands.

In appeal before the District Judge of Godavary, at Rajahmundry, it was contended for the defendants that the deed (Exhibit D.) was invalid for want of registration. The District Judge held that the document did not require registration because the term granted by the lease did not exceed five years and there was no money rent reserved.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the 2nd Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Both Courts have found Exhibit D to be genuine. The first question argued before us on behalf of the appellants is that the District Judge's view that Exhibit D did not require registration because the rent reserved is payable in grain is erroneous. The District Judge has based his opinion on an unreported judgment of this Court in S. A. No. 1524 of 190?. But upon reading the proviso to section 17 clause (d) of the Registration Act, we are, with all deference to the learned Judges who decided the second appeal referred to above, unable to hold that the proviso only refers to rent payable in money. The enactment in question is in these words: "Provided that the Local Government may, by order published in the local official Gazette, exempt from the operation of this sub-section any leases executed in any district, or part of a district, the terms granted by which do not exceed five years and the annual rents reserved by which do not exceed fifty rupees." There seems to be nothing in that language to confine its operation to money rent and we do not perceive any reason why any such narrow construction should be placed upon the words as to exclude rent payable in grain as is the case here. Suppose the rent reserved was payable in so much gold or silver exceeding Rs. 50, should that make any difference? We should think not. Or, suppose the rent reserved was Rs. 50 and a certain quantity of grain, would not that be rent exceeding Rs. 50? We are clearly of opinion that the rent mentioned in the proviso under discussion was not intended to be limited to rent payable in money.

Then, it has not been found by the lower Courts whether the value of the grain rent reserved exceeded Rs. 50 at the time of the execution of Exhibit D. But the onus of showing that it did not exceed that amount lay on the plaintiff who must contend that Exhibit D on which he relies was exempted from the operation of clause (d) of section 17 of the Registration Act by virtue of the proviso. We have not been referred to any evidence to show that the value of the grain payable was less than Rs. 50. On the other hand, the evidence of the plaintiff himself is that the value exceeded Rs. 50.

But it is contended on behalf of the respondent that he is entitled to compensation for use and occupation of the land. The learned District Judge has not considered this question at all, and before we decide it, it is necessary that we should have the finding of the District Judge both as to the plaintiff's title to the land and the amount of compensation he would be entitled to for its use and occupation by the 1st defendant during the years in dispute in the appeal.

We, therefore, request the District Judge to return findings on the following questions:—

1. Whether the plaintiff had valid title to the land in dispute at the date of Exhibit D?

2. If so, what would be the reasonable compensation for use and occupation of the land by the defendants during the year 1903?

Both the parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence. The findings should be returned within two months from the date of this order and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

[The finding was returned that the plaintiff had no valid title at the date of Exhibit D.

Accepting the finding, the High Court reversed the judgment of the lower Court].

The decree-holder attached his judgment-debtor's house. Thereupon the mother of the judgment-debtor preferred a claim under Order XXI, rule 58 of the Civil Procedure Code. Held, that the order of dismissal of the claim was, under Order XXI, rule 63, final till a regular suit was instituted and successfully prosecuted; and that consequently the claimant could not now be allowed to practically re-iterate the claim which she had preferred and which was dismissed without investigation by reason of her own default.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order under rule 99 of Order XXI of the Code of 1908. The petitioners in execution of a decree against their judgment-debtor, one Bejoy Krishna Mukherjee, attached his house and the adjoining lands. Thereupon, one Ambica Debi, the mother of the judgment-debtor and the opposite party in this Rule, preferred a claim under rule 58 of Order XXI of the Code on the 10th December 1909. Her allegation at the time was that the house and the land belonged to her and that she was in possession thereof in her own right. She did not, however, prosecute her claim, with the result that it was dismissed on the 9th April 1910. Execution thereupon proceeded on the basis of the decree, and on the 11th June 1910, the decree-holders purchased the property at the execution sale. They subsequently applied for delivery of possession, and on the 20th November 1911, symbolical possession was delivered to them. Later on, they applied for delivery of actual possession. The peon, who went to execute the writ, reported that he had been obstructed, and on the 13th January 1912, the mother of the judgment-debtor put in an application under rule 97 of Order XXI of the Code. The Court did not investigate whether the objector was bona fide in possession of the property; but made an order the effect of which was denial of all assistance to the auction-purchasers in their endeavour to obtain possession of the property purchased by them. The order of the Court below clearly cannot be supported.

Even if it be assumed that the application of the objector could have been entertained, the Court could not make an order under rule 99 without an investigation as to whether she was in possession of the property in good faith and on her own account. This position has not been controverted on behalf of the opposite party and it has been suggested that the case should be remitted to the Court below in order that the requisite inquiry may be made. We are not, however, prepared to accede to this prayer. The application clearly ought not to have been entertained. The objector, as we have already stated, made an application under rule 58 on the 10th December 1909. Her claim was dismissed on the 9th April 1910. It is true that there was no investigation on the merits but that was entirely by reason of her own default; she wilfully deprived herself of the opportunity open to her at that stage. Rule 63 shows that where a claim of this character has been preferred, the party against whom the order has been made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order is conclusive. It has been contended, however, on behalf of the opposite party, on the authority of the decision in the case of Kunj Behari Lal v. Kaudh Prashad Narain Singh (1), that as there was no investigation on the merits, she is in the same position as if she had never made an application under rule 58. We are of opinion that this position cannot be supported. No doubt, in relation to the question of limitation applicable to a suit of the description mentioned in rule 63, it has been held that Article 11 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act does not apply if the application has been refused without an investigation on the merits. [Kallar Singh v. Toril Mahton (2)]. Upon this point, however, there is a divergence of judicial opinion and there is weighty authority in support of the view that where an application has been dismissed, with or without investigation, a regular suit, if instituted, must be commenced within one year from the date of such order. Gooroo Das v. Sona Monee (3), Sreemunto Hajrah v. Tajoodeen (4), Tripoora Soonduri Debia v. Ijjutoonnissa (5), Sadut Ali v. Ramdhone (6). But it is not necessary for our present purpose to express any opinion upon this question. It is sufficient to hold that, on the face of rule 63, the order of refusal is plainly final till a regular suit has been instituted and successfully prosecuted. Consequently, the objector cannot now be allowed topractically re-iterate theclaim which she preferred on the 10th December 1909, and which was disallowed without investigation by reason of her own default. The petition of objection filed on the 13th January 1912, in this view, ought not to have been entertained. This conclusion is supported by the decision in Sankar Nath Pandit v. Modan Mohan Das (7).

The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below set aside. That Court is directed to place the auction-purchasers in actual possession of the property and to render such assistance to the peon as may be necessary to carry out the order of the Court. The petitioners are entitled to their costs in this Court. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional Judge of Saharanpur, dated 18th December 1911.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hamilton, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage alleged to have been made by one Imam Baksh in 1859. The plaintiffs are the grand-children and great-grand-children of Imam Baksh. Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are the sons and grandsons of one of the three original mortgagees and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 are the other two original mortgagees. Defendants Nos. 8 to 11 are purchasers of the equity of redemption in two-thirds of the mortgaged property, who, according to the plaintiffs, declined to join in the suit.

The suit has been thrown out by the Courts below on the ground that it is barred by section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act, 1901.

The facts have not been ascertained but they must, for the purposes of this appeal, be assumed to be as follows. Imam Bukhsh was recorded at the Settlement of 1872 as the owner of 80 bighas, 9 biswas of land, the correct area of which, according to the settlement of 1890, was 77 bighas, 17 biswas. He mortgaged the land to defendants Nos. 6 and 7 and the ancestor of defendants Nos. 1 to 5. Previous to a partition, which took place in 1312 Fasli, the defendants had ceased to be recorded as mortgagees of the land. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were recorded as owners of one-third of the land and the plaintiffs, other than the present appellants, were recorded as the owners of the remaining two-thirds. They, the plaintiffs who were recorded as owners, objected to the partition but their objections were overruled, the partition proceeded and part of the land which had been included in the mortgage was assigned to defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The plaintiffs laid no claim to the land purchased by defendants Nos. 8 to 11 and conceded that if they are entitled to maintain this suit, it must be as owners of the land which was assigned at the partition to defendants Nos. 1 to 3. So far as the plaintiffs other than the present appellants are concerned, it is clear that the suit cannot be maintained for they were recorded proprietors, their objections were heard and were over-ruled, and the question of their title is as held by the Courts below res judicata against them [see Muhammad Sidiq v. Lute Ram(1)]. When a Muhammadan landowner dies, it often happens that the names of his sons are entered on the records and the names of his widow, and daughters are not recorded though they may be entitled to shares in the property. This is what seems to have happened in the present case. It is conceded on behalf of the appellants that the case is in terms covered by section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act, 1901, but it is urged that the case is governed by the ruling in Khasay v. Jugla (2), that the prohibition contained in section 233 (k) applies only to suits with respect to partitions in which the plaintiff has had an opportunity of having his objections considered under section 111 of the Act and has not availed himself of it. There is a clear distinction between that case and the case before me. In that case, the plaintiffs were recorded proprietors and it was the failure of the Assistant Collector to follow the procedure prescribed, which deprived them of an opportunity of urging their objections. In the present case it is not suggested that the procedure of the Revenue Court was irregular and we know that the relations of the appellants did have an opportunity of urging their objections. The appellants not being recorded proprietors were not entitled to be heard. But it was their fault and not the fault of the Revenue Court that their names were not on the record. When the inheritance devolved upon them, it was their business, if they obtained possession of their shares, to make a report to the Revenue Authorities and ask to have their names entered on the village records and if they did not obtain possession of their shares, they should have sued for possession. The ruling in Khasay v. Jugla(2) has engrafted an exception on to the prohibition contained in section 233 of the Land Revenue Act which has far reaching consequences. It does not cover the present case and in the absence of authority, I feel bound to hold that the present case is covered by the prohibition.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

REGULAR CIVIL APPEAL NO. 16.

This appeal arises out of an application by the respondents for the revocation of the grant of Letters of Administration, with a copy of the Will annexed, to the estate of Behari Lal Shaha. Behari Lal Shaha died on 17th March 1901, leaving three sons, Sakhi Lal, Lakshmi Narain and Hari Narain, a widow and two daughters. Sakhi Lal had attained majority at the date of his father's death, while the other two sons were minors. Hari Narain died a minor and unmarried. Sakhi Lal carried on his father's business and became very heavily involved in debts. The respondents, whose firm name is Multan Chand Doga, obtained a decree against him on the original side of this Court for Rs. 5,270 and costs, and applied for execution. It does not appear that any property has been actually attached. On 27th March 1909, the appellant Lakshmi Narain alleging that he had recently come of age applied for Letters of Administration to the estate of his deceased father, and propounded a Will said to have been executed by Behari Lal Shaha on 15th March 1901, two days before he died. That Will, if genuine, would have the effect of depriving Sakhi Lal of a very large share of his inheritance. A grant of Letters of Administration with a copy of the Will annexed was made to the appellant on 26th June 1909, and on 20th September 1909, the respondents applied for a revocation of that grant on the ground that the appellant was still a minor when it was made, and that the Will was a forgery, put forward solely to defraud the creditors of Sakhi Lal. On 14th December 1909 the District Judge held that the respondents had a locus standi to contest the Will, and against that order, this appeal is preferred. A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lies against such an order, which is merely interlocutory. We are inclined to think that that objection is well founded. Section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, provides that: "Every order made by a District Judge or District Delegate by virtue of the powers hereby conferred upon him shall be subject to appeal to the High Court under the rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure applicable to appeals." Had the decision been the other way, it would have amounted to a dismissal of the respondents' petition and would have been equivalent to a decree, in which case an appeal would lie [see Sheikh Azim v. Chandra Nath Namdas (1)]. In Abhiram Dass v. Gopal Dass (2), it was held that an appeal would lie under section 588 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, against an order admitting a person as caveator under section 69 of the Probate and Administration Act. But section 588 (2) has not been re-produced in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, and we cannot find any provision for an appeal which would meet this case. It is, however, unnecessary to discuss the question further as we are of opinion that the appeal must fail on other grounds. In Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Uma Nath Mukhejee (3), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, after commenting on the earlier cases, remarked, at page 27: "Assuming that a purchaser (from the heir) can oppose the grant of Probate or apply to have it revoked (which their Lordships do not decide), they entertain grave doubts whether an attaching creditor can do so, at least in a case which is not founded on the ground that the Probate has been obtained in fraud of creditors." That is precisely the ground on which the respondents base their present application, as it was in the cases of Sheikh Azim v. Chandra Nath Namdas (1) above cited, and Kishen Dai v. Satyendra Nath Dutt (4). This last case was very similar in its facts to the one before us, but here we have the additional circumstance that the alleged Will was not put forward until eight years after the death of the appellant's father. It is only right that the creditors of Sakhi Lal should be heard in the matter of this grant, as their interests are so largely affected by it. We accordingly dismiss this appeal. The respondents must have their costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs. The record should be sent down at once, in order that the proceedings before the District Judge should be continued without further delay.

This judgment will govern Appeals Nos. 3, 14 and 15 of 1910, which are also dismissed, but as the respondents in these appeals have not appeared, it is unnecessary to make any order as to costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated 11th May 1911.

Mr. Muhammad Ishaq, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ibn i-Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the appellant for recovery of his share in the property of one Masitullah Khan who died in January 1902. One of the defendants to the suit was the respondent Saidunnisa. Her defence was that the property had been transferred to her by Masitullah in lieu of her dower-debt. The Munsif held that the alleged transfer of the property amounted to a sale and inasmuch as the value of the property exceeds Rs. 100, the transfer could not be effected except by a registered instrument. Accordingly, he decreed the claim. The present respondent appealed to the lower Appellate Court challenging the decision of the Munsif with regard to the validity of the transfer and pleading also that the appellant was not entitled to possession of his share in the estate of Masitullah until the dower-debt due to the respondent was paid. The Subordinate Judge held that the transfer was valid and that even if it was invalid, the respondent was in possession of the property and was entitled to retain it until her dower debt was paid. On the question of the validity of the transfer the Subordinate Judge has referred to a decision of this Court in Ram Bakhsh v. Mughlani Khanam (1). If it were necessary in the present appeal to decide the question of the validity of the transfer to the respondent, I should have referred this appeal to a Bench of two Judges, for I doubt whether this Court intended to hold in the case which I have mentioned that a transfer of the kind now in question is not governed by section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Calcutta High Court has held that such a transfer is governed by section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act [see Abbas Ali Shikdar v. Karim Baksh Shikdar(2)]. But it seems to me that the Subordinate Judge was clearly right in holding that the respondent is entitled to retain possession of the property until her dower-debt is paid. She got into possession of the property peacefully and quietly and it must be taken that her dower-debt has not been paid if the transfer of the property to her is held to be invalid. It seems to me that the decisions of this Court in Ali Baksh v. Allah Dad Khan (3) and in Ramzan Ali Khan v. Asghari Begum (4) show that the respondent is entitled, in the circumstances of the present case, to retain possession of the property until her dower-debt is paid. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

After I had delivered judgment, Mr. Muhammad Ishaq suggested that I should send the case back in order that the amount of dower may be determined. I declined to recall my judgment. The suggestion now made should have been made in the lower Appellate Court or at the latest during the arguments in this Court. If the appellant is really anxious to pay off the dower-debt, which I doubt, it would appear that not only must the amount of the dower-debt be determined but the amount of rents and profits received by the respondent since she has been in possession. In the circumstances, the appellant should be left to bring another suit.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Family necessity—Sale—Discharge of family debts—Provision for adjusting shares in partition.

Where a sale of family property is effected mostly for raising money to discharge family debts, a comparatively small balance being required to conveniently adjust the shares in a contemplated family partition, the latter object also comes under family necessity and the sale is valid.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 244 of 1907, presented against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevelly, in O. S. No. 84 of 1906.

Mr. A. Krishnasawmi Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the facts found by the lower Court are that the sale in dispute was effected mostly for raising money to discharge family debts, the comparatively small balance being required to conveniently adjust the shares in a contemplated family partition which took place two days afterwards. We think that, in this state of the facts, the latter object was also come under the expression "family necessity" which would justify a sale by the managing member.

We think the lower Appellate Court's conclusion is, therefore, correct and we dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), s. 178 sub-ss. (2), (3)—Enlargement of time—Application made after execution—Power of Court to grant time.

Certain landlords obtained a decree against their tenant in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. The tenants made default in the payment of the decretal amount within the time fixed by the decree, and the decree-holders applied for execution by way of ejectment. The judgment-debtors then applied for extension of time under sub-section (3). That application was granted and the decretal amount as directed by the Court was deposited:

Held, (1) that the Court executing the decree, being the Court which had tried the suit and made the decree, had power to grant an extension of time and thus in a manner alter the decree:

(2) that it was competent to the Court to entertain an application for enlargement of time under sub-section (3) of section 178 of the Act, even after the expiry of the period prescribed in the decree in conformity with sub-section (2) and even after the decree-holder had applied for execution

Appeal from the order of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated February 23rd, 1910, affirming that of the Munsif of Hazaribagh, dated August 3rd, 1909.

Babu Lalit Mohan Mukherjee, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law raised in this appeal depends for its solution upon the true construction of sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. Sub section (2) provides that in all cases of suits for the ejectment of a non-occupancy ryot for non-payment of arrears of rent or for the cancelment of a lease for non-payment of arrears of rent, the decree shall specify the amount of the arrears and if such amount together with interest and costs of the suit be paid into Court within thirty days from the date of the final decree, the decree shall not be executed. Sub-section (3) provides that the Deputy Commissioner may, for special reasons to be recorded in writing, extend the period of thirty days mentioned in sub-section (2). The appellants, who were the plaintiffs landlords in the Court below, obtained a decree against the respondents on the 14th May 1909, which was drawn up in accordance with the provisions of sub-section 2 of section 178. The tenants made default in the payment of the decretal amount and the result was that on the 29th June 1909, the decree-holders applied for execution by way of ejectment. On the 3rd August following, the judgment-debtors applied for extension of time under sub-section (3). That application was granted and the decretal amount as directed by the Court was deposited. The amount was subsequently received by the decree-holders under protest. On behalf of the appellants the validity of the order has been challenged on three grounds, namely, first, that the application for extension of time could not be entertained by the Court executing the decree; secondly, that it could not be entertained after the expiry of the time prescribed by the decree for payment of the arrears; in any event it could not be entertained after the application for execution had been made by the decree-holder, and, thirdly, that time was extended by the Court for reasons not sufficient in law.

With reference to the first ground, it has been urged that a Court executing a decree is bound to execute it as it stands and can in no way alter or interfere with its terms. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Ishwaragar v. Chudasama (1), Patloji v. Ganu (2); Bhagwandas v. Abu Ahmed (3) and Mahapershad Singh v. Surendra Mohan Singh (4). This contention is clearly well founded, and the proposition admits of no dispute that a Court of execution cannot alter the terms of the decree. In fact, this view was adopted by this Court in the case of Sunkur Singh v. Huree Mohun (5), which turned upon the construction of section 52 of Act VIII of 1869 (B. C.) corresponding to section 173 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. But although the argument is well founded,

(1) 13 B. 105.
(2) 15 B. 370.
(3) 16 B. 263.
(4) 9 C. L. J. 288; 4 Ind. Cas. 56.
(5) 22 W. R. 469.

it is, in our opinion, wholly unsubstantial. The Court executing the decree was the Court which had tried the suit and made the decree. It has not been disputed, and in view of the provisions of sub-section 3 of section 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, it cannot be disputed, that the application could have been entertained by this very Judicial officer if it had been described as an application in the suit. It would, therefore, serve no useful purpose to hold that the application was improperly entertained and it would be an idle formality to send back the case for consideration by the same officer in the course of the suit he had tried. The decision in Thakur Madan Mohan Nath Sahi Deo v. Bhikhar Sahu (6) is distinguishable, as there the decree was altered in execution by a Court of appeal by consent of some of the parties and in the absence of other parties prejudiced by the variation. No doubt, as pointed out by this Court in the cases of Rao Bineeram v. Ram Nath Shaha (7) and Pureshnath Ghose v. Krishto Lall Dutt (8); a matter of this description ought to be considered by the Court which has tried the suit, because whether or not the order for extension of time should be made in favour of the tenant depends upon the circumstances of the litigation, that is, upon the circumstances disclosed at the original trial and the events subsequent. It is thus fairly obvious that the order can be made only by the Trial Court. But, as a matter of fact, in the case before us, the order has been made by that Court; only, it has been recorded in the order sheet not of the original suit but of the execution case. We are, therefore, of opinion that effect ought not to be given to the first contention of the appellants.

With reference to the second ground, it has been argued that an application for extension of time under sub-section (3) of section 178 must be made before the time has expired, and, in any event, before an application for execution has been presented. The learned Vakil for the appellants, who has addressed to the Court a very able and forcible argument on this part of the case, has contended that upon the expiry of the time prescribed by the decree, the tenancy is forfeited and a valuable right accrues to the landlord to re-enter upon the premises. That right, it has been suggested, ought not to be taken away for the benefit of the defendant who has failed to carry out the order of the Court and has not been diligent enough to make an application for extension before expiry of the prescribed time. But we are of opinion that a narrow construction ought not to be placed upon the terms of sub-section 3 of section 178. It may be observed that the sub-section does not specifically prescribe the limit of time within which an application for extension of time may be made, in fact, the sub-section authorizes the Deputy Commissioner to extend the time even without an application As was explained by Mr. Justice Banerji in the case of Bodh Narain v. Mahomed Moosa (9), where a question arose as to the interpretation of section 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which corresponds to section 178 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, as ejectment for non-payment of rent is in the nature of a penalty of forfeiture, the provision for extension of time for payment to avoid the penalty of forfeiture is a remedial provision and should be construed liberally so as not to restrict the remedy and make it inapplicable to cases to which it ought obviously to extend. It was further pointed out by the same learned Judge that the section authorises the Court for special reasons to extend the period, and there is no reason why we should interpolate words so as to limit the power of the Court to make an order for enlargement of time. It is, indeed, conceivable that needless hardship may be caused to litigants if the contention of the appellant were to prevail. For instance, if the defendant, by reason of accidental circumstances over which he has no control, finds it impossible, in spite of his diligence, to deposit the decretal amount on the last day of the prescribed period, he may be driven to make an application for extension of time on the day following by reason of adverse events which he had not foreseen and which made it impossible for him to carry out the direction of the Court. There is no good reason why the section should be narrowly interpreted so as to exclude relief in such a case. We are not prepared to accept the contention of the appellants; and, in the view we take, we are supported by the principle which underlies the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Rajab Ali v. Amir Hosssin (10) and Budri Narain v. Sheo Koer (11), which were applied by this Court in the case of Golab Chand v. Bahuria Rim Murat Koer (12). We hold, therefore, that it was competent to the Court to entertain an application for enlargement of time under sub-section 3 of section 173 after the expiry of the period prescribed in the decree in conformity with sub-section 2 and even after the decree-holder had applied for execution. The second contention of the appellants must consequently be overruled.

With regard to the third contention, we are unable to hold that the Court of first instance exercised its judicial discretion improperly. The Court pointed out that the defendant was a permanent tenure-holder and had offered to the Pleader for the decree-holder to pay the money on the 23rd June 1909, some days before the application for execution was made. In view of this circumstance, the Court held that an order for extension might properly be made under sub section (3) and that view has been affirmed by the Judicial Commissioner on appeal. It is impossible for us to hold that there has been such a flagrant abuse of judicial discretion as to justify the interference of this Court, as a Court of Appeal.

The result is that the order of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Munshi KALI SANKAR SAHAI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Maharajah PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Title—Evidence—Admission of defendant—Mulki papers filed by ekkadars—Regulation VIII, of 1800, para. III—Admissibility of admissions—Road cess returns.

The plaintiff sued for resumption of certain villages on the allegation that they were held as a maintenance jagir for life in joint tenancy by certain ladies and that defendant No. 1 had been holding the villages under a mokarari deed from them and had subsequently purchased the right, title and interest of the ladies in a sale under section 124, Act I (B. C.) of 1879.

The defence was that the jagir was not one for life for maintenance of the ladies, but an absolute jagir granted to the ancestors of their husbands, which the ladies had been holding under the ordinary Hindu Law.

Owing to lapse of time, the plaintiff's evidence as to the grant to the ladies was not very strong, but, such as it was, it was strongly corroborated by the conduct of the ladies themselves and by the admissions of defendant No. 1:

Held, that the question of title need not be positively proved by the plaintiff, but that he could avail himself of the defendant's admissions.

Mulki papers filed by the ekakdars under Regulation VIII of 1800, para. III, containing statements made by the plaintiff's predecessor at a time when there was no dispute against his own interest, are admissible in evidence.

Admissions of the ladies made in a road cess return filed by their muktear could be used against defendant No. 1. If they were not admissions, they were positive evidence of plaintiff's title.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi, dated the 31st of January, 1908.

Mr. B. Chakravarti, Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy, Joy Gopal Ghosha, Provish Chandra Mitter and Girija Prosonna Roy Chowdhuri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Donogh, A. Choudhuri and Babu Jogesh Chandra Dey, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur for resumption of three villages, Koinjara, Dodhra and Kudarkon, on the allegation that the villages were held as a maintenance jagir for life in joint tenancy by three ladies Deokali Koer, Badam Koer and Khetrani Koer, of whom the last surviving, Khetrani Koer, died on the 19th August 1901; that the defendant No. 1, Kali Sankar Sahai, had been holding these mouzas under a registered moakarari deed, dated 18th December 1867, from Badam Koer and Khetrani Koer and on the 19th November 1895 had purchased the right, title and interest of the ladies in a sale under section 124, Act I, B. C., of 1879, in the names of himself and his wife and sons, defendants Nos. 2 to 6. Mesne profits from 1958S. were also claimed. The defence was that the jagir of the three villages was not a life jagir for maintenance of the three ladies but was an absolute jagir granted to the ancestors of their husbands which the ladies had been holding under the ordinary Hindu Law; that even if the tenure was terminable on failure of male issue in the line of the original grantees, as the husbands of these ladies died much more than 12 years ago, the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. It was also urged that the plaintiff had, in execution proceedings, through his Karpardaj Basant Lal, described the villages as ancestral jagir of the ladies and is, therefore, estopped from asserting the contrary. It was also urged that the plaintiff is not entitled to resume without sanction of Government, and that the suit is barred by limitation against the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 7 and 8 who were made parties more than three years after the order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, passed on the 10th February 1902. The Subordinate Judge held that the estate of the ladies was a life-tenure for maintenance carved out of a larger putra putradi grant of 12 villages given to their husbands' ancestors and resumable at the death of the last male representative.

He further held that there was no estoppel in the execution proceedings; that what was sold was the right, title and interest of the ladies in their life-tenure; that that tenure came to an end at the death of Khetrani Koer and it was not necessary to set the auction-sale aside. On the point of limitation he held that there was no satisfactory evidence to show that the Maharaja had ever denied the ladies' life-interest or tried to oust them, but even if he had, the relationship of landlord and tenant had never ceased and the ladies had never asserted any adverse rights and had paid in the road cess and filed road-cess returns which was the only act of tenancy they had to perform.

He also found that there was no special limitation in respect of the section 145 (Criminal Procedure Code) proceedings inasmuch as the minor defendants were not parties to the section 145 (Criminal Procedure Code) proceedings and defendants Nos. 7 and 8 were not parties to the auction-sale and defendant No. 8 was made a party within three years of his birth. They were made parties at the request of defendants on 25th February 1905, to avoid future litigation. He further held that the lands not being lakheraj, the sanction of Government to the resumption was not necessary.

He, therefore, gave a decree to the plaintiff for all the reliefs he claimed, i.e., for khas possession by ejecting the defendants with mesne profits from 1958S. to delivery of possession in execution of the decree, to be determined in execution, with costs and interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

The defendants appeal and their main contention is that the learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the principal question in this suit, viz., Is the plaintiff entitled to resume and if so when did his right to resume accrue? The plaint is founded on a life-grant and we have to see if the evidence bears this out. If the life-tenancy is proved, the defendants are admittedly out of Court. No question of custom arises and none is alleged in the plaint.

It is strongly urged that the question of title must be positively proved by the plaintiff, that he cannot avail himself of the defendant's admissions. If no life-grant to the ladies is proved, their possession becomes adverse as resumption ought to have been made on the death of Deodhari, the last male incumbent in 1839. The appeal was in effect argued solely on these points, though great efforts were made to whittle away the effect of the admissions made by the ladies and the defendant No. 1 himself.

One minor point was argued, viz., that the suit is barred by section 37 (5), Act I of 1879, because the lease or grant was liable to be cancelled. But we find no such point arises, as there is no document on the record to be set aside and a grant made by sanad for life would lapse of its own force by the death of the life-tenant and with it any lease granted by the life-tenants. Besides, section 37 has no application to a title suit of this nature. We have, therefore, to consider only two main questions:—Firstly, whether the plaintiff has prima facie established his title and the factum of a life-grant to the ladies? Secondly, what is the effect of the defendant's admissions and those of the ladies as evidence bearing on the plaintiff's case? It may be conceded at the outset that owing to lapse of time, the plaintiff's evidence as to the grant to the ladies is not very strong, but such as it is, it is unrebutted except by the affidavit of Basant Lal, Exhibt H, page 110A, and it is strongly corroborated by the conduct of the ladies themselves and by the admissions of the defendant No. 1.

The principal evidence on the side of the plaintiff is that of certain mulki papers of the year 1842, copies of which, Exhibits 14 and 15, have been produced from the office of the Deputy Commissioner and Exhibits 40, 41, duplicates apparently from the office of the Commissioner. Now, these documents appear to have been returns filed by the then Maharajah in respect of his zemindari in Chota Nagpur under orders of the Court, filed by the elakadars under Regulation VIII of 1800, para. III. They are not the registers prepared under that Regulation which would be authenticated by the Collector and have not, therefore, the very high evidential value placed upon them by the learned Subordinate Judge. They require proof of origin and authentication by the Maharajah and this is furnished by the signature of his mukhtear Jubraj Lal and by a monogram forming the word "Sahi" which is identified by the record-keeper as being the authentic mark of the former Maharaja found upon all his papers filed in the Government Record Room.

Similar papers were admitted and used as evidence by the High Court in their judgment in R. A. No. 6 of 1880, dated the 24th November 1881, which will be found on page 15 of Paper Book C. It was held that it was a statement made on the requisition of a public officer regarding matters connected with the estate of the Maharajah which were well known to him and long before any adverse claim had been set up, but still it was open to the objection that it is not necessarily the best evidence that was procurable and there is nothing to show the source of the information on which the history of the grant was supplied. Prinsep, J., therefore, said that if the plaintiff's case depended on this evidence, he should not be inclined to accept it as conclusive. Cunningham, J., the other learned Judge, appears to have placed a much higher evidentiary value upon it and to have treated it as a register under the Regulations.

It is strongly criticized here on the ground that in this case it appears that a dispute had already commenced as to the nature of the grant, and that the notes on the nature and history of the grant are in a different handwriting and ink in columns 7 and 13 to the rest of the return. Further, it is stated as regards Kadarkan that a copy of the sanad was filed with the return and no such copy is produced though it is contended that such a copy must exist in the Maharajah's sanad register. Now it clearly appears from a judgment of the Personal Assistant to the Agent to the Governor-General, Lohardagga, dated 3rd May 1842, that one Panday Ganpat Rao, who had charge of the Maharajah's papers as hereditary Panda, had wrongfully detained them and he was put in the Civil Jail for a month in consequence and is said to have died there. The judgment further shows that the Maharajah had been unable to supply his mulki forms on the 2nd February 1842, owing to this man's conduct. From a petition Exhibit 19 on page 44A, it appears that the papers had been ordered to be filed on the 9th December 1839 and that the Maharajah submitted a list (first), the very word used in the heading of Exhibits 40 and 41 showing the names of the elakadars, the names of the villages and the amount of rent, but was unable to fill in the gross produce and the area of cultivated and uncultivated lands owing to the absence of the tenants. It was ordered that a copy of the forms be sent to the Maharajah on the 28th August 1840 to fill in the form in respect of his zemindari within one month under heavy penalties and if the Maharajah be ignorant of the particulars of the sanads of elakadars, the column in which the specifications of the sanads are to be given should be left blank, a remark being made in the remark column to the effect that particulars of the sanad are not known. Now this is what appears to have been done and is the explanation of the notes appearing in a different handwriting. We can have no doubt, however, that that handwriting is contemporary and of the same age as the rest of the document. There is no sign of subsequent interpolation and the other entries which are of a similar character throughout the books are not disputed. There is absolutely no reason to suppose that these entires were not made in 1842 and authenticated by the Maharajah.

The rubikari of the Commissioner; on which a judgment of the Assistant Agent in 1843 is based, that these papers are not rulings or documents in respect of civil suits and that they will be of no use in the case, is in no sense a declaration that they have no evidentiary value, for no such declaration could be made by the agent of the Governor-General who had executive charge of them, and in 1858 Colonel Dalton, the Commissioner, ruled that there could be no objection to any party getting copies of them but that the meaning of the Agent in 1843 was that they were books to be bound and carefully preserved as estate records and the Agent could not allow the originals to be used as evidence in any Court. This order which in itself appears to be ultra vires is certainly nothing more than an assertion of privilege for the documents on the part of the Agent who held their custody, and adds to rather than detracts from their evidentiary value. This fully explains the rubakari, dated 29th January 1844, Exhibit F. F., on which great stress has been laid by the defendants, it being nothing more than a note handing on the orders of the Agent to Assistant Executive Officers for communication to mukhtears who are forbidden to use these papers as documents in any matter. It is clear that there was not and could not be any objection to their contents being used as evidence, but the authorities objected to the originals being bandied about in the Courts so as to run the risk of being tampered with. The original order of the Agent states that they had not then been bound and asks for their immediate return for that purpose. All this goes to show that they were very carefully kept and it is not at all likely that any interpolations were made. We have seen that Colonel Dalton found them intact in 1858, and from 1862 onwards we have the sworn testimony of the old retired Record-keeper, Baikantha Nath Ray, that they were in his custody and he had them re-bound and labelled. It is sought to show that this witness was on bad terms with Mewa Lal and Kali Sankar, but that was at a later date than 1862, and both Mewa Lal and Kali Sankar had made admissions consistent with the entries in these papers and there is no suggestion nor on the face of the papers is there any possibility that the notes were added after 1862. They are, as we have said, clearly contemporaneous with the filling up of the forms in 1842.

Then as to the copy of the sanad said to have been filed in regard to Kodarkan, there seems to be no reason why such a copy should not have been filed but the sanad book is shown to have been removed by Ganpat Rao. The original sanad must have been with the ladies and the plaintiff cannot be said on any evidence to be holding back any copy of the sanad now in his hands.

As regards the contention that the dispute about this tenure had already begun in 1842, there is not a particle of evidence to show that there was any dispute. The contention rests on an assumption that the ladies were holding on as Hindu widows after the death of Deodhar and claimed an absolute estate. There is nothing to show this and if the story of the sanad be true, it was obviously granted before 1842.

We find the mulki papers of 1842 authentic, sufficiently proved, and to contain statements made by the Maharajah at a time when there was no dispute against his own proprietary interest. The Maharjah's case clearly is that the ladies' husbands had 12 villages in putra putradik tenure and it is proved that this is the customary form of tenure in the Raj and in the absence of any evidence whatever of a permanent grant, the statement of the ladies themselves clearly made in 1889 must be accepted. Exhibit 4 is a Road-Cess Return filed by the mukhtears of the ladies, Ramdhari Pershad, on the 9th November 1859. It recites the whole history of the taluk and is undoubtedly genuine. On page 60 (Paper Book A), Musammat Badam Koer admitted the signatures on oath. She gives the usual lame explanation of blank papers being given. But to whom were they given? To the defendant No. 1 himself who was her nephew, son of her brother and Vakil and himself holding a mokarari of the villages under her, which it would be to his interest to show was a mokarari of a permanent and not of a resumable tenure. The genuineness of the singnature is clearly shown by the fact that Badam Koer swears to her signature on the vakalatnama given to Mewa Lal to file the Road-Cess Return of 1882, Exhibit 9; while the signatures of the ladies appearing on the document itself are obviously in the handwriting of a scribe and not of the ladies. We have satisfied ourselves that the signatures of Badam Koer on the vaklatnama of 1882, and on the Road-Cess Return of 1889, Exhibit 4, are of the same person and that person a lady of only moderate penmanship. That this Exhibit 4 is the work of Kali Sankar, defendant No. 1, himself is shown by the fact that Part I of the return, of which Exhibit 4 is Part III, was filed by Kali Sankar himself, (Exhibit 22, page 47A) as mokararidar of the ladies. When he intervened in the rent suits in 1891, he filed copies of these returns of 1882 and 1889 in Court, and he admits that he filed Part III of the return for 1899 himself as mokararidar. Against these papers, it is conterded that the history of the tenure set out in the preamble is surplusage and unnecessary. We find it is the universal practice in all Road-Cess Returns filed in this case and as far as we can gather in all cases.

Then it is said that the admissions of the ladies cannot be used against the defendant No. 1 as he is now claiming as auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of road-cess and not as their mokararidar. But the very fact that the ladies had to pay road-cess shows that they were still tenants of the Maharajah and not holding adversely to him and his own evidence shows that the statements made are his own statements entered, as Badam Koer says, on blank papers signed by her and given to him. The writing of the return Exhibit 4 is proved by the writer Iswar Dayal P. W. No. 4 and he says he wrote at the request of the ladies. He proves that Ramdhari Pershad was the mukhtear and he gave him the mukhtearnama signed by the ladies. The ladies were living in Kali Sankar's house and were then on good terms with him. He himself had been a servant of Kali Sankar Sahai. Ramdhari Pershad, the mukhtear, himself proves the return Exhibit 4 and the due execution of his mukhtearnama. He acted as mukhtear for defendant No. 1 and is P. W. No. 6.

If the statements are not admissions, we think they are positive evidence of the plaintiff's title coming from the ladies themselves and authenticated on oath. No better evidence for the plaintiff could be imagined and it is futile to contend that the plaintiff cannot use them as evidence of his title but only as admissions after he has proved his title affirmatively.

Both Exhibit 4 and Exhibit 9 were used by Kali Sankar in litigation for his own purposes and he is bound by them.

Accepting these documents as evidence, the plaintiff's case is proved up to the hilt. But there are a long series of admissions by Kali Sankar himself. Among these, we may mention Exhibits 17, 16, 44, 46, 10, 11, 13 and 20.

Exhibit 17 is a petition filed by Kali Sankar in the Maharajah's office on the 24th May 1890. It is dated 29th March 1890, but it is proved that it was filed on the later date by an entry made at the time in the Maharajah's petition register where it is numbered 2592, which number appears on the face of the document. In this, he applies for registration in the landlord's sherista as mokararidar of the ladies khorposhdars, as long as their right and title will be enforceable.

Madho Prakas, mohurrir of the Maharajah since 1889, proves the filing and entry in the petition register. He fixes the date but could not be said to establish affirmatively that Kali Sankar himself filed it. This, however, is established by Lal Iswar Nath Sah Deo, a respectable talukdar and a relative of the Maharajah, who was Naib Manager for him in 1890.

He is clear as to the presence of Kali Sankar and that the order on it was written by him and initialled by Mr. Peppe, now deceased, on the very same day. The initial is undoubtedly that of Mr. A. Peppe which cannot be mistaken. In addition to this Kali Sankar's own mohurrir who wrote the petition at his orders deposes to it though he says this is the only paper of Kali Sankar's that he knows of that does not bear his seal and signature. That Mr. Peppe or Lal Iswar Nath Sah Deo forged this document, as they must have done on 24th May 1890, there is no possible reason to imagine. Nothing then turned on it.

Exhibit 16 is the mokarari pattah to Mewa Lal which both Mewa Lal and Kali Sankar acted upon. It clearly recites that the tenure is khorposhi.

Defendant No. 1 now asserts that this was a colourable document as he discovered after his father's death, and was only given to enable Mewa Lal the better to manage the property for his sisters. But Kali Sankar's own conduct puts him out of Court on this point. It is true that Mewa Lal was always good to the ladies and appears never to have stinted them for money, but Kali Sankar acting on this pattah confined them strictly to the Rs. 24 rent due under it and used the property as his own. This is proved by his intervention in the rent suit brought by the ladies in 1891 against some tenants in which he claimed absolute mokarari right as vested in his father and himself and denied their right to collect rent. This is Exhibit 10, dated 19th January 1891. Exhibit 11 is a petition of objection, dated 17th March 1892, in pursuance of this intervention and may be read with it as emphasizing the previous petition. Exhibit 20 is a petition by Mewa on behalf of his sisters, dated 13th June 1884, in which they clearly admit the khorposh grant. The takalatnama, Exhibit No. 21, dated 6th June 1884, to Mewa Lal by the ladies was admittedly signed by them.

It is urged that Mewa Lal was a servant and friend of the Maharajah and deliberately gave the ladies away in this transaction. When a defendant has to make such criminal aspersions on the memory of his own father against whom nothing appears on the record, his case must be indeed a bad one.

Exhibit 46 is a petition of Kali Sankar, dated 15th August 1893, which by comparison of handwriting clearly appears to be entirely in his hand and is proved to have been personally filed by him. The handwriting is proved by a Pleader, Dinesh Prasad, P. W. No. 13, who was engaged in most of his cases and against whom nothing is shown; also by Lal Iswar Nath Sah Deo who knew his handwriting well. Kali Sankar denies this document on oath but he admits Exhibit 44 which clearly shows his handwriting as well as other colourless documents referring to the same matters but not containing admissions. It is clear that Kali Sankar did make a petition on 15th August, though in Exhibit 44 he gives the date 14th August, and Exhibit 46 is that petition. It is said that the word "orally" is not in accordance with facts but there is nothing on the record to show this.

Exhibits 12 and 13, dated 10th July 1889 and the 20th February 1892, respectively, clearly show that Kali Sankar filed copies of Exhibits 4 and 9 in Court as documents in support of his case and got them returned. There are numerous other admissions but they were not of such importance. We confess that we are unable to understand the contention that these documents which are filed and proved by the plaintiff and are part of his case are of no avail to him in discharging the onus of proof of title which lies upon him.

Surely, if the defendant goes into the witness-box and admits plaintiff's title, there is no further onus upon him to prove it as against such defendant. The proved dealings of the defendant No. 1 and his father with the property are as much positive evidence of plaintiff's title as sworn testimony thereto would be.

In the lower Court the contention was that these admissions were used as secondary evidence of a restricted grant to the ladies without sufficient foundation for not producing primary evidence of the grant. The Subordinate Judge has fully dealt with this technical question which was not pressed before us. It is sufficient for us to say that if they were only to be treated as secondary evidence, it is clearly shown that the original sanad could not be with the Maharajah and that his sanad book had been stolen. The existence of a casual copy of one sanad in his office would not throw any further burden upon him especially as that copy is shown to have been filed in the Deputy Commissioner's office.

The documents are direct evidence of the nature of the ladies' tenure which is the point in issue and if, as is contended, the existence of a sanad is not proved, they would be unanswerable evidence of plaintiff's title. On the other hand, the defendants have completely failed to adduce any evidence whatever of a permanent grant to the ancestors of the ladies' husbands and the plaintiff's case stands unrebutted.

The only point they make is in regard to an affidavit of one Basant Lal in 1895 in execution proceedings stating that the villages were the putra putradik jagir of Musammats Badam Koer and Khetrani Koer. This was affirmed on the 8th July 1895.

But this witness had sworn on the 30th March 1895, Exhibit P. P., that the ladies were jagirdars and it is in this indefinite form that the decree and sale certificate are drawn up. The Maharajah did not go to sale on this specific allegation. He went to sale on the allegation that it was his milkiyat and gave the value of that milkiyat as the basis for the valuation in execution which was for arrears of Road-cess. What is important is what was sold, and we do not think that this affidavit is any evidence of that.

If the sale was under section 124, Act I of 1879, B. C., what passed was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors. If it was not, the sale was either under the general law by virtue of section 129 of the Act or it was no sale at all and the defendants acquired nothing. If it was under the general law, the same right, title and interest would pass. We have never heard that an error of fact in an affidavit, which was never acted upon and which could not affect the character of the property sold, confers a right on the purchaser which he could not obtain by the actual sale. Basant Lal deposes that he filed the affidavit as a routine matter without personal knowledge, but the plaint in the suit signed by the manager described the property in suit as life-tenure for maintenance and the decree could not and did not go beyond the prayer in the plaint.

The decision in Mookhya Hurnckraj Joshee v. Ram Lal Gomastha (1), with which we entirely agree, does not touch this case. The authority of Basant Lal is not shown and we do not find the Maharajah bound by his statement. As regards the alleged attempts by the Maharajah to dispossess the ladies, which are urged as a ground for holding that their possession was adverse, we cannot find that the Maharajah was in any way responsible for the acts of Bhuka Singh or Kapil Nath Lal, while Mewa Lal's conduct as brother and Pleader of the ladies certainly cannot be saddled on him. The non-production of the registers of leases granted by the Maharajah has been made much of. But the order-sheet, though not so precise as it ought to be, seems to show that the Maharajah made full disclosure of all papers he had in the office. See order 69, dated 6th January 1908. The Subordinate Judge was right not to issue further process on Bhuka Singh; vide order No 84, dated 10th January 1908. We have looked at the Road-cess papers filed in 1889 by the manager wherein an interpolation appears against the ladies' names "in wrongful possession" and we find that these papers are full of subsequent additions and interpolations, many being made in pencil.

The entry in question is obviously in different ink of a later date, and in the same hand as numerous other emendations apparently made by clerks in the Road-cess office. The returns in their present state are worthless as evidence of anything. On all other minor issues, which are not pressed before us, we agree with the Subordinate Judge. The defendants have elected to stand or fall on the proved nature of the grant and we find that it was a maintenance life-grant to the ladies. On this footing, no question of limitation arises. As regards the remarks of Jenkins, C. J., in Lakhamgauda v. Keshav Annaji (2), we may say we fully agree with them but they have no bearing on this case in which the evidence appears to be ample and one-sided and in which there is no combination of circumstances to be proved but a simple fact which is in itself probable and consistent with the history of the tenture, namely, that the ladies held a life-grant.

We find that the decision of the lower Court is correct and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The burden of proving the payment of consideration for a hiba-bil-iwaz, is upon the person who relies upon it as the foundation of his title.

Mere registration of a deed of gift by a Muhammadan is not equivalent to possession. It is essential that the donor should give either actual or constructive possession of the property to the donee.

Ismal v. Ramji, 23 B. 682, relied upon.

Where two parties claim an occupancy-holding under the original owner, the plaintiff by right of inheritance and the defendant under a deed of transfer, it is not open to the plaintiff to contend that the deed did not take effect in respect of the occupancy-holding because it was not transferable by custom. That is a question which only the landlord or his representative-in-interest is competent to raise.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The properties in dispute admittedly belonged to one Dapu, the father of the plaintiff and of the defendant. On the 7th September 1907, Dapu executed a hiba-bil-iwaz in favour of the defendant and had the document registered seven days later. He died shortly after on the 23rd November 907. The case for the plaintiff is that this hiba-bil-iwaz is inoperative and did not create any valid title in the defendant. The validity of the instrument was attacked explicitly on the ground that it had been obtained by undue influence; it was also described somewhat vaguely as illegal and inoperative.

In this Court, as in the Courts below, the document has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that, as there is no proof of payment of the consideration mentioned in the deed, it cannot take effect as a hiba-bil-iwaz, and secondly, that if it be treated as a deed of gift without consideration, it cannot take effect, as there is no evidence that the properties covered thereby were delivered to the donee. The Courts below have found concurrently that the case of undue influence has completely failed: but upon the two other grounds upon which the deed is assailed, the Courts below have taken divergent views. The primary Court held that as there was no proof of payment of the consideration mentioned in the deed, it was inoperative as a hiba-bil-iwaz, nor could it take effect as a deed of gift as there was no evidence of delivery of possession to the donee. The Subordinate Judge, on the one hand, has held that those questions ought not to be allowed to be raised inasmuch as they are not explicitly mentioned in the pleadings and are not covered by any of the issues as framed. He has, however, discussed both the questions and has held with regard to the first that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to establish that there was no consideration for the hiba-bil-iwaz; and with regard to the second, that as the defendant is now in possession of the properties covered by the instrument and was also practically in possession thereof during the life-time of his father, the gift was operative under the provisions of the Muhammadan Law.

On behalf of the plaintiff, the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been challenged principally on two grounds, first, that the burden of proof of the payment of consideration for the hiba-bil-iwaz was upon the defendant who relies upon it as the foundation of his title and that as he has failed to prove that the consideration passed as alleged, the deed ought to be deemed inoperative; and secondly, that treated as a deed of gift without consideration, it is equally ineffectual, because there is no proof that there was any delivery either of the title-deeds or of the property to the donee. The decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed also on two subordinate grounds; namely, first, that even if the hiba-bil-iwaz be treated as a valid document, it did not vest in the donee a good title; and secondly, that it was not effectual to vest any title in the raiyati-holdings which are not transferable by custom or local usage. These subordinate questions require consideration only if the substantial points in the appeal are decided against the appellant, for if the deed is found to be inoperative, it does not take effect as to any of the properties covered by the instrument, inclusive of the huts and the holding.

In so far as the first ground, upon which the hiba-bil-iwaz is attacked, is concerned, it is urged that payment of the consideration mentioned in the deed has not been proved. In our opinion, there is no room for controversy, in view of the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the cases of Khajoorooniss v. Roushan Jahan (1) and Choudhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (2), that the burden of proof was clearly upon the defendant to establish that the consideration for the hiba-bil iwaz was paid as described in the instrument. In the case last mentioned, their Lordships observed that by the Muhammadan Law, a holder of property may in his life-time give away the whole or a part of his property, if he complies with certain forms; but it is incumbent upon those, who seek to set up such a transaction, to show very clearly that those forms have been complied with. It may be by a deed of gift simply or by a deed of gift coupled with consideration. If the former, unless accompanied by delivery of the thing given, so far as it is capable of delivery, it is invalid. If the latter (in which case delivery of possession is not necessary), actual payment of the consideration must be proved, and the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in præsenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee must also be proved. The learned Vakil for the respondent has argued that the deed in question ought not to be treated as a hiba-bil-iwaz but as a deed of sale, and that, consequently, notwithstanding the provisions of section 129 of the Transfer of Property Act, the validity of the instrument ought to be tested with reference to the provisions of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act which provides that there may be a valid sale by delivery of the property. In our opinion, there is no force in this contention. The document in this case cannot be treated as a deed of sale. The case of Abbas Ali Shikdar v. Karim Baksh Shikdar (3), where the transfer was for a substantial consideration, was a case of sale. Here the transaction was intended to be a gift for consideration. If it were treated as a sale for consideration, the question would at once arise, in view of the assertion of the plaintiff that the transaction was obtained by undue influence, whether the consideration was adequate. In fact, the inadequacy of the consideration, if the instrument is treated as a deed of sale, would be a very important element affecting its validity. We must, therefore, treat the document as a hiba-bil-iwaz; in fact, regard it as an instrument clothed with the character it professes. The burden, therefore, was upon the defendant to prove the payment of consideration mentioned in the deed. The first ground upon which the validity of the deed is assailed must, in this view, succeed.

We may add that it has been faintly suggested by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the recital of the payment of consideration in the deed was good evidence against the plaintiff, and that the burden was thus thrown upon the plaintiff to prove that the recital was false. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Kaleepershad Tewaree v. Rajah Sahib Pershad Seth (4). That case, however, as also the subsequent decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ali Khan Bahadur v. Indur Pershad (5), is clearly distinguish-able because in each of those cases, the accuracy of the recital was challenged by the maker of the deed and the burden was rightly thrown upon him to explain how that false recital came to be inserted in the document executed by him. On the other hand, the decisions in the cases of Brajeshware v. Budhanuddi (6) and Bisheswar v. Harbans (7) show that the recital is not evidence as against a stranger to the document. The burden, therefore, must be thrown on the defendant to establish strictly that the consideration was paid as mentioned in the deed.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it has been argued by the learned Vakil for the respondent, upon the authority of the cases of Shaik Ibrahim v. Shaik Suleman (8); Bibi Khaver v. Bibi Rukhia (9); Humera Bibi v. Nojmunnissa Bibi(10) Danoo Dariee v. Momtajaddi Bhuiya (11), that there was sufficient delivery of possession, inasmuch as the deed was registered and delivered to the donee. Reference has also been made to the cases of Alubi Koya v. Mussa Koya(12), Hassarat Bibi v. Golam Jaffar(13) and Kandath v. Musaliam (14) to show that registration has sometimes been regarded as equivalent to delivery. But, as pointed out in Ismal v. Ramji (15), mere registration is not equivalent to possession. It is essential that the donor should give either actual or constructive possession of the property to the donee. As observed by Baillie in his Treatise on the Muhammadan Law (page 514) "being enabled to take possession is like taking it and that if the donee has been placed in a position which enables him to take effective possession of the property, the gift must be treated as valid". [See also the authorities mentioned in Jahed-unnessa Bibi v. Najibul Islam(16)]. Here, however, the facts found do not show that the deed was delivered to the donee. It is clear from the endorsements on the deed that up to the time of presentation for registration, it was in the custody of the donor. There is no evidence to show when it came into the possession of the donee. It has been suggested that possession of the deed was obtained by him immediately after the registration On the other hand, possession might possibly have been obtained by the defendant after the death of his father. No evidence has been directed to this point, and in view of this fact, it is impossible for us to hold that there was sufficent delivery either of the deed or of the properties covered by the deed to the donee so as to effectuate the transfer. The second ground on which the deed is assailed must, therefore, succeed.

The question next arises, what course should be pursued at this stage. The learned Vakil for the appellant asks that the deed of gift should be treated as inoperative and the decree of the primary Court restored. But we are of opinion that the ends of justice require that the case should be further investigated. No doubt, the fourth issue was framed in very general terms; but it is clear from the proceedings in the Court of first instance that its scope was narrowed down by the allegations in the fourth paragraph of the plaint. We are satisfied that the question of the invalidity of the deed on the two grounds mentioned in this Court was not considered at the trial in the primary Court; it was possibly raised for the first time in the course of argument in that Court; it was plainly considered by the lower Appellate Court. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and the case remitted to the Court of first instance in order that the question of the invalidity of the deed on the two grounds mentioned may be considered on evidence to be adduced by the parties. The parties will be at liberty to adduce evidence to show when and how the defendant obtained possession of the deed and of the properties covered thereby. If it is held upon the evidence that the deed is inoperative either as a hiba-bil-iwaz or as a deed of gift, the two subordinate questions argued on behalf of the appellant will require consideration. The first of these, as we have already explained, relates to huts with regard to which it has been contended that, even if the deed be treated as operative, the title thereto was not transfered to the donee. The Subordinate Judge has decided this point in favour of the plaintiff; but he has not referred to any specific clause in the deed to support his conclusion. We are, therefore, of opinion that this question must be left open for consideration after the main point has been decided. As regards the second subordinate point, we are of opinion that there is no substance in the contention of the appellant. The appellant as well as the respondent both claim under the original owner, one by right of inheritance, the other under a deed of transfer. It is not open to the plaintiff to contend that if the deed was operative in law, it did not take effect in respect of the occupancy-holdings because they were not transferable by custom. That is a question which the landlord or his representative-in-interest is competent to raise.

The costs of this litigation incurred up to the present stage will abide the result.

April 18, 1912.

RUTNESSUR SEN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KALI KUMAR BIDYABHUSAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Onus—Suit for possession by purchaser at revenue sale—Defence—Protected interest—Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), s. 37.

In a suit for recovery of possession of an undivided half share of certain land on the allegation that the share was included within a taluq which the plaintiff purchased at a revenue sale, the defence was that the land fell within a certain howla which was a protected interest.

The lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the defendants had failed to prove that the disputed land appertained to the howla, and gave a decree to the plaintiff.

On appeal, Coxe, J., held that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the lands in dispute were not in the howla, and remanded the suit:

Held, that there was a finding of fact by the lower Appellate Court vitiated by no error of law and that the case was concluded by that finding.

Judgment of Cox. J. reversed.

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated May 25th, 1911, passed in Second Appeal No. 2416 of 1909 from the decree of the Sub-Judge of Dacca, dated August 9, 1909, reversing that of the Munsif of Munshigunge, dated March 20th, 1909.

The judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe was as follows:—

COXE, J.—This was a suit for recovery of possession of an undivided half share of certain land, on the ground that this share was included within the taluk, Ram Ram Sen, of which the plaintiff was a purchaser at a revenue sale.

The defence was that the land fell within a certain howla, named Ram Mohan De, which was a protected interest.

The lower Appellate Court held, firstly, that it was incumbent on the defendants to prove that the land in suit lay within their howla; and, secondly, that even if it did lie within the howla, the defendants had no title to it and could not successfully resist the plaintiff's suit.

It appears to me that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be sustained on either of these points.

It has been found that the howla Ram Mohan De is a protected interest and the only question that arose was, whether the land in suit fell within that howla or not. That being so, the burden of proof rested upon the plaintiff in accordance with the law as explained in the case of Rajendra Kumar Bose v. Mohun Chandra Ghosh (1). No doubt, when the defendants plead that they have a protected tenure and the question is whether they have or have not such a tenure within an estate, the burden of proof rests on them, but when it is found that they have such a tenure, and the only question is one of parcel or no parcel, the burden rests on the plaintiff. It does not appear to me that the terms of section 37 of the Revenue Sale Act, 1859, make any difference so far as this question of the burden of proof is concerned, as the learned Vakil for the respondents has argued.

(1) 3 C. W. N. 763.

On the second point, the learned Subordinate Judge finds that the defendants are not entitled to this land because in his opinion, the howla Ram Mohan Da was partitioned between two persons, named Sadhu Ram and Ramuttam: and the lands which fell to Sadhu Ram were included within the taluk Ram Ram Sen of which the plaintiff is now owner, and the land attached to Ramuttan fell within the taluk Bisseswar Sen. The defendants are the ultimate successors-in-interest of Ramuttam: and, therefore, they cannot, according to the learned Subordinate Judge, have any right or title to the lands included in the taluk of Ram Ram Sen, which fell on partition to Sadhu Ram. On the facts found, this argument appears to me to be perfectly logical; and it would ordinarily dispose of the defendants' case. But the learned Subordinate Judge has overlooked the fact that this theory of the partition of the lands of the howla between Sadhu Ram and Ramuttam is entirely opposed to the plaint. According to the plaint, the lands are still joint and the plaintiff sues only for an undivided half share. That being so, it was not open to the learned Subordinate Judge to hold that, as a matter of fact, the lands had been partitioned and that separate land had been assigned to the two taluks, Ram Ram Sen and Bisseswar Sen.

It has been argued by the learned Pleader for the respondent that the Subordinate Judge did not intend to find that the howla had been partitioned, but merely that there had been so much of a division between Sadhu Ram and Ramuttam as amounted to a separate collection of rent from their joint tenants. But this view is not supported by a single word in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, and, in my opinion, is entirely opposed to the whole purport of that judgment. I may observe that the Subordinate Judge, in coming to this decision in respect of partition, relies on the evidence of the witness, Kaly Prosanna Sarkar, which is to the effect that the lands were not only partitioned but separated. It appears to me, therefore, that on the first point the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in laying the burden of proof on the defendants and that on the second point his decision is not secundum allegata.

I think, therefore, that the case must go back for re-hearing. The learned Subordinate Judge will dispose of the case on decision of the point, whether the plaintiff has succeeded in proving that these lands are not included within the howla Ram Mohan Da. If he succeeds in proving this, he will, of course, be entitled to a decree: if not, the case must be dismissed as against the appellants: and it will be for the learned Subordinate Judge to decide to what relief, if any, the plaintiff may be entitled as against the defendants who have not appealed. The materials before me at present are not sufficient to enable me to come to any decision on that point

The costs will abide the result.

The plaintiff appealed.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—In my opinion, we must set aside the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe and restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court. The suit is one for the recovery of possession of an undivided half share of certain land, on the allegation that this share was included within a taluk Ram Ram Sen, of which the plaintiff was a purchaser at a revenue sale. The defence of the defendants was that as they were in possession, they were entitled to retain that possession by virtue of a permanent tenure created by a certain howla. The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the defendants have failed to prove that the disputed land appertains to this particular howla. On appeal, however, Mr. Justice Coxe did not think that he was bound by that finding of fact, for it appeared to him that there had been an erroneous decision by the learned Judge as to the incidence of the onus of proof. He considered that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the lands in dispute were not in the howla. The authority for this view is said to be found in Rajendro Kumar v. Mohun Chandra (1). That case does not profess to lay down any new law. The Judges make it clear that they only proposed to follow the decision of this Court in Rhidoy Kristo v. Nobin Chunder (2). An examination of that case makes it clear that all that the Court said or determined was that a plaintiff must prove his allegations. In that case, the plaintiff sued his tenant for khas possession. He admitted the tenants' holding but he alleged that the land in dispute was an encroachment beyond the proper boundaries of the holding and, therefore, it appeared to the Court that it was for the landlord to prove the encroachment. That was because the encroachment was the case made by the landlord in his plaint. That this is so is made abundantly clear by the contrast drawn in the judgment between these cases where the burden of proof lies upon the defendant and where it lies upon the plaintiff, in circumstances which have a superficial resemblance, one to the other, but which differ by reason of the particular allegations made by the plaintiff in each case, and by reason of that which it is necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove. This is so apparent from the judgment itself, that I need say no more than refer to the decision of Mr. Justice Banerjee in Sheodeni Roy v. Chatoorbhuj Roy (3) as giving the sanction of his high authority to this view. In my opinion, therefore, in the circumstances of this case, there is a finding of fact by the Subordinate Judge vitiated by no error of law, and by that finding this case is concluded. I do not overlook the ingenious argument advanced by Mr. Jogendra Chandra Ghosh, based upon a reference to long possession, but I cannot find that adverse possession or even length of possession, as distinct from possession under the howla, was ever the defendant's case: and. so far as limitation goes, it is apparent from the judgment of the Munsif that this was abandoned in the Court of first instance. Moreover, the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe, as well as that of the Subordinate Judge, indicate in the clearest manner the lines within which this case proceeded. We cannot, therefore, give effect to this argument, and we must accordingly set aside the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe, restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and direct that the respondents do pay to the appellant the costs incurred in the High Court.

Guardian and Ward—Appointment of guardian supported by mother of minor—Appointment of joint guardian—Joint guardian appointed sole guardian for other guardian's inability to give security—Appointment without mother's approval—Order injudicious.

A guardian who was supported by the mother of a minor was appointed along with another person as joint guardian. As he was unable to furnish security, the joint guardian was appointed the sole manager of the minor's property. No opportunity was given to the mother to state her views before this appointment was made:

Held, that the order was injudicious and made without due consideration and ought to be set aside.

Appeal from the order of the District Judge of Chittagong, dated Jauuary 4th, 1911.

Babu Ambika Charan Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Shiba Prosonna Bhattacharya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the original order of the District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 4th January 1911, appointing one Makbul Ahmad Chowdhury, a joint manager of the property of two minors. It appears that the original application was made by one Shamsher Ali, who is a grand-uncle of the minors, and that there was a petition of objection put in by another grand-uncle of the minors, Mohabbat Ali Chowdhury. This petition was supported by another petition of objection filed by Nasima Khatun, the mother of the minors. The learned District Judge appointed Mahabbat Ali Chowdhury the objector, as guardian of the minors' property on the ground that he was equally related to the minors and that he had been managing the minors' property and paying their revenue. But the District Judge also thought it better to appoint another man as joint guardian with Mahabbat Ali. One Jan Ali was selected for this purpose but he refused to act as a guardian, on which on the 4th of January 1911 Makbul Ahmad Chowdhury was appointed manager of the minor's property, jointly with Mahabbat Ali already appointed. On being called upon to give the necessary security, Mahabbat Ali failed to do so, upon which this Makbul Ahmad Chowdhury was appointed sole manager of the property of the minors. In our opinion, the order was at the least injudicious and made without due consideration. Makbul Ahmad is the son of Shamsher Ali and apparently he was appointed without any opportunity being given to the mother to state her views.

In the above circumstances, we set aside the order of the District Judge, dated the 4th January 1911. If the matter comes up again before the District Judge, that is, if a further application be made to him, and if he thinks it necessary to appoint a guardian of the property, he should proceed according to law under Chapter II of the Act.

We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Order set aside.

Pre-emption—Co-sharer—Partition, effect of.

The sale in respect of which the present pre-emption suit was instituted took place on the 22nd of July 1909.

On the 21st June previously, partition had been made and confirmed with effect from the 1st of July 1909. Under the partition the plaintiff and the vendor were co-sharers in the same mahal and the vendee ceased to be co-sharer with the vendor. The Wajib-ul arz, which was prepared after the partition, was verified on the 2nd of August 1909:

Held, that the plaintiff had a right to sue for pre-emption.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 31st of March 1911.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Mr. Govind Prasad, (with him Mr. Sital Prasad Ghose), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption. The sale took place on the 22nd of July 1909. On the 21st of June previously, partition had been made and confirmed with effect from the 1st of July. Under the partition, the plaintiff and the vendor were co-sharers in one mahal. The defendant has ceased to be a co-sharer with the vendor altogether. His property is in a separate mahal. On the 2nd of August 1909, the wajib-ul-arz was verified for the new mahal. There was also given in evidence the wajib-ul-arz of 1865. They are practically the same except that in 1865 the village evidently consisted of a single mahal. In the former wajib-ul-arz, there was a second class of co-sharers called "near co-sharers." After the partition, that class was designated as "near co-sharers in the mahal". Both the Courts below decided against the plaintiff on the ground that the new wajib-ul-arz was not in existence on the 22nd of July 1909, the date of the sale. They thought that under the old wajib-ul-arz the defendant had an equal right with the plaintiff. We think that the Courts below were wrong. Assuming that the rights of the parties were regulated by the custom set forth in the earlier wajib-ul-arz on the date of the sale, the defendant had ceased to be a co-sharer with the vendor and, therefore, he had no rights at all. Admittedly, he had no rights against the plaintiff if the rights of the parties were regulated by the wajib-ul-arz of the 2nd of August 1909. It is true that the wajib-ul-arz was not verified until the 2nd of August 1909, but if we look at the case from the point of view of contract as evidenced by the recent wajib-ul-arz, it is pretty clear that the arrangements amongst the parties must have been come to long prior to the verification of the wajib-ul-arz, in all probability before the time when the partition was completed, that is to say, on the 21st of June. In any event, it is clear that the contract which is recorded in the wajib ul-arz was to regulate the rights of the parties from the date of the partition, that is, from the 1st of July 1909. We think, therefore, that on the basis of contract, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. If all along a custom has existed and the custom is as in the earlier wajib-ul-arz, then the defendant, in the events that have happened, has no right of pre-emption while the plaintiff has. In any event, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. We allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's claim conditional upon his paying the sum of Rs. 1,000 into Court within three months from this date. If he pays in the money, he will receive his costs in all Courts. In default of payment, the suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

NABIN CHANDRA PAL AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
BANGA CHANDRA CHOWDHURY AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 22 cl. (2), 49—Eastern Bengal and Assam Act (I of 1903), s. 10 cl. (b)—Acquisition of occupancy-right by co-sharer tenure-holder—Destruction of occupancy-right—Existence of raiyati—Tenant under raiyat *to be under-*raiyat under co-sharer tenure-holder—Amending Act—Retrospective effect.

The Eastern Bengal and Assam Act I of 1908, section 10, clause (b), which amends section 22, clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, has no retrospective operation.

Therefore, if a co-sharer tenure-holder purchased an occupancy-holding under the tenure, before the amending Act came into operation, he acquired the rights of a raiyat though not those of an occupancy-raiyat.

And he can bring a suit to eject a tenant of the holding who is an under-raiyat, under section 49 clause (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, after the amending Act came into force.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Noakhali, dated July 13th, 1909, reversing that of the Munsif of Lakhimpore, dated March 1st, 1909.

FACTS.—This is a suit for ejectment under section 49, clause (b), of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiffs are co-sharer tenure holders and they purchased an occupancy-holding under the tenure. They allege that they are raiyats and that the defendants are under-raiyats and liable to be ejected. The defendants contend that the plaintiffs who are themselves the co-sharer-tenure-holders having purchased the holding, they held it as a tenure-holder and not as a raiyat, under section 10 clause (b) of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Act I of 1908, and that, therefore, the defendents were raiyats under the plaintiffs and not under-raiyats and, therefore, not liable to be ejected.

The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that the raiyati with its occupancy-right acquired by the plaintiffs had merged into their superior tenure, and that the plaintiffs were tenure-holders and the defendants raiyats under them and not under-raiyats. The learned Munsif also held that section 10 of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy (Amendment) Act I of 1908 governed the present case, and under that, the plaintiffs had no right to hold the land in suit as raiyats but as tenure-holders. The learned Munsif observed:—

"It is admitted that the plaintiffs are the co-sharer maliks of the superior taluq, and the acquisition by purchase of the occupancy-right was subsequent. Under the circumstances, the occupancy-right has ceased to exist under section 22, clause (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the case of Jawad-ul Haq v. Ram Das Saha (1), it is held that in such cases the occupancy right only, which is an incident to the holding, shall cease to exist, but the holding shall continue though divested of the right of occupancy, which attached to it. This view was affirmed by the Full Bench case of Ram Mohun v. Sheik Kachu (2). But the law appears to have been changed by the amendment of this section by the Eastern Bengal and Assam Act I of 1908. Section 10 clause (b) of this Act amends section 22 clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it is clearly laid down in the amended clause that 'such person shall have no right to hold the land as a raiyat, but shall hold it as a proprietor, &c.' It is clear that the intention of this amendment is to prevent or discharge the acquisition of the occupancy rights by landlords. Sub-section (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not clearly extinguish the tenancy or holding and leaves the status of the purchasing co-sharer landlord uncertain;

(1) 24 C. 143; 1 C. W. N. 166.
(2) 32 C. 383; 1 C. L. J. 1; 9 C. W. N. 249.

the amendent made it clear that the possession of such co-sharer landlord shall be the exclusive possession of the co-sharer proprietor or tenure-holder, as the case may be. Under the circumstances, if the amended Act is applicable in this case, the plaintiffs are evidently tenure holders with respect to this land, and the defendants, who are cultivating tenants of this land, are raiyats in respect of this holding, and thus section 49 clause (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to the present case. The learned Pleader for the plaintiffs contended that the amended Act (Eastern Bengal and Assam Act I of 1908) cannot govern this case, as the purchase of the occupancy-right in question was made before the amendment came into force. I do not consider that this contention is sound, for the present suit has been instituted after the amendment came into force and the law of the land that was in force at the time when the suit was brought must govern the suit in question. * * I, therefore, hold that the present case is covered by section 22 clause (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act as amended by section 10 clause (b) of Act I of 1908 (Eastern Bengal and Assam). I accordingly hold that the defendants are not under raiyats of this holding and are not liable to be ejected."

On appeal, the learned District Judge reversed the decision of the learned Munsif with the following remarks:—

"With regard to the application of the provisions of the Amendment Act, it has been urged before me by the learned Pleader for the appellants that there is nothing in the Act to show that it is retrospective in its effect. In my opinion, there is force in this contention. The learned Munsif thinks that because this suit was brought after the passing of the Amendment Act, it must be governed by the provisions thereof. In the absence, however, of any mention, in the Act itself, of its provisions being retrospective, they must be held to govern such transactions only as may take place after the passing of the Act. * * Then, again, the Bengal Tenancy Act, and consequently its Amending Act are in the shape of adjective law, the provisions of which are not retrospective unless they are made so by the Legislature specifically. * * I must hold that as the purchase of the occupancy-holding, as well as all the other transactions in suit, took place before the passing of the Amendment Act; section 10 thereof does not govern the present suit."

The learned Judge held that the plaintiffs were raiyats in respect of the holding in suit and the defendants under-raiyats. He, therefore, decreed the suit.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Kritanta Kumar Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak, and Babu Bipin Chandra Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for ejectment on the ground that the defendants were under-raiyats and had received proper notice to quit. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance on the ground that the plaintiffs held the land as proprietors or tenure-holders by virtue of section 22 sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended by the Eastern Bengal and Assam Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1903, and that, therefore, the defendants were no longer under raiyats but raiyats. The learned District Judge in appeal took the opposite view and decreed the suit. The defendants appeal.

It is conceded by their learned Vakil that the appeal cannot succeed on the main point unless it is held that the amending Act, so far as section 22 is concerned, is held to have retrospective operation. He had referred to the statement of objects and reasons as showing that it was the intention of the Legislature to stop the acquisition of tenancy interests by landlords. But that statement does not show that the Legislature intended to interfere with rights already acquired. Under the Act, as it stood before amendment, the plaintiffs had certainly acquired the rights of a raiyat in the land, though not apparently those of an occupancy-raiyat. Those rights cannot be taken away by an amending Act unless the intention to take them away is clearly set out. That intention is certainly not set out in clear terms or in any terms in the amending Act, quoted above, and accordingly we must hold that the decision of the learned District Judge on the point is correct,

It is argued that the defendants were entitled to a decision on the 6th and 7th issues. But it is clear that they did not press the contention embodied in those issues or lay any materials for a decision upon them before the Courts.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

versus

JOGENDRA LAL CHOWDHURY—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation—Sale in execution—Deposit of money by auction-purchaser—Application by judgment-debtor to set aside sale—Success in first Court—Surplus sale-proceeds taken away by another decree-holder of judgment-debtor—Subsequent reversal of sale—Suit by auction-purchaser for refund of money against second decree-holder—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 62, 97, 120.

A suit brought by an auction-purchaser to recover money from the defendant who had, after the sale and the deposit of the money in Court and before the sale was set aside on appeal, attached that sum in execution of his decree against the judgment-debtor as representing the surplus sale-proceeds belonging to the original judgment-debtor after satisfaction of the decree obtained against the debtor by the decree-holder, is governed by Article 120 of the second Schedule to the old Limitation Act, 1877, that is to say, the period of limitation is six years from the date when the sale was set aside by the Appellate Court.

Articles 62 and 97 contemplate a suit brought by one of the contracting parties against the other to recover the money which has been paid at the sale which owing to the default on part of the vendor has become infructuous.

Nilakanta v. Imamsahib, 16 M. 361, followed.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of 24-Pergannahs, dated June 1st, 1909, modifying that of the Sub-Judge of that district, dated February 15th, 1909.

FACTS:—On the 8th February 1899, the plaintiff purchased at auction-sale in execution of a decree against defendant No. 3 certain property for Rs. 2,100. The defendant No. 3 took proceedings for the setting aside of this sale and on the 20th September 1901, those proceedings were decided against him in the first Court. They terminated in his favour in the Court of Appeal and the sale was set aside on the 23rd May 1902. A second appeal to the High Court was dismissed on the 30th August 1903. In the meantime, defendant No. 1, holding a decree in another suit against the defendant No. 3, attached the money deposited by the plaintiff in favour of defendant No. 3 and on the 22nd August 1899, withdrew Rs. 1,600 of that money. The plaintiff now sues to recover this Rs. 1,600 from the defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 2 is the decree-holder against defendant No. 3.

Both the Courts below gave the plaintiff a decree. The defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar, Nagendra Nath Ghosh and Bijoy Kumar Bhattacharyya, for the Appellant.

Babus Harendra Narain Mitra and Satish Chandra Bhattacharyya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which has been raised in support of this appeal is whether the District Judge was correct in the view which he took that the limitation applicable to the present suit was that provided by Article 120 of the second Schedule of the old Limitation Act, that is to say, six years. The suit was brought by the auction purchaser to recover the sum of Rs. 1,600 from the defendant No. 1, who had, after the sale and the deposit of the money in Court, attached that sum in execution of his decree against the judgment-debtor, as representing the surplus sale-proceeds belonging to the original judgment-debtor after satisfaction of the decree obtained against the debtor by the decree-holder. There can, in our opinion, be no doubt that the present plaintiff would be entitled to recover the money from the present appellant who was the defendant No. 1 in the lower Courts either by an application made under Order XXI, rule 93, Civil Procedure Code, or, as he has done in the present case, by a suit. For the purposes of the suit, it would be necessary for him to make parties to it the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder.

In support of the present appeal, it has been argued that the proper Article of limitation applicable to the present suit is Article 97 of Schedule II of the old Limitation Act. In support of this view, the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (1) has been relied on as also the case of Ram Kumar Shaha Pooddar v. Ram Gour Shaha Chowdhuri (2). Both of these cases are, in our opinion, distinguishable from the present case. The former is a case in which a member of a joint family attempted to sell certain properties and his other co-sharers objected. The purchaser then sued for the return of the purchase-money and their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the case must fall either under Article 62 or Article 97 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act. That, however, was a suit between the original contracting parties to the sale, whereas, in the present case, it is impossible to contend that the person whose property was sold was, in fact, a willing party to the transaction or that the present suit is one between the two original contracting parties. In fact, the sale was brought about at the instance of the decree-holder and the property sold was the property of the judgment-debtor and the present suit is brought against a third person who attached some of the sale-proceeds as being the property of the judgment-debtor. This certainly cannot be regarded as a suit between the two contracting parties to the sale. In the same way, in the case of Ram Kumar Shaha Fodder v. Ram Gour Shaha Chowdhri (2), the decree-holder had sold as the property of his debtor property which belonged to a third person and, in that case, it was held that a suit would lie by the purchaser against the original decree-holder and that the limitation applicable would be that provided by Article 62 of the second Schedule of the Limitation Act. In our opinion, both those two Articles comtemplate a suit brought by one of the contracting parties against the other to recover the money which has been paid at the sale which owing to the default on the part of the vendor has become infructuous. The present case is not, however, of the same nature at all and we think that the District Judge was quite right in holding that it did not fall within the provisions of either Article 62 or Article 97 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act. The learned Judge has relied on a case of the Madras High Court in Nilakanta v. Imamsahib (3). That decision appears to be applicable to the facts of the present case and, agreeing with it we hold that the only limitation applicable to the present suit must be that provided by Article 120 of Schedule II of the old Limitation Act. As the present suit was instituted within six years from the date when the sale was declared by this Court to be invalid, we think that the learned Judge was quite right in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation. No other points have been taken in support of the appeal. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal—Abatement—Sufficient cause—Delay due to ignorance of law—Cross-objections—Appeal abating—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 3, 9 (2).

An appeal was filed in March 1909. The sole appellant died on 4th October 1909 but no application to bring his representatives on the record was made till 27th May 1912. The only explanation of the extraordinary delay was that the appellant's representatives were ignorant of law. The appeal was admitted on 4th June 1910 long after the appellant's death but nothing more was done for over a year owing to omission to pay process-fee till 6th August 1911:

Held, that appeal had abated and that no special circumstances existed to justify any concession to the appellant's representatives.

Ghulam Shah v. Mallik Muzaffar Khan, 81 P. R. 1886, explained and distinguished.

Cross-objections filed by a respondent cannot be heard, where an appeal abates and there is no appellant on the record.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated 5th December 1908, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, first class, Lahore, dated 6th July 1905, dismissing plaintiff's claim in part,

Mr. Festonji Dadabhoy, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gobind Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was filed in March 1909. The sole plaintiff died on the 4th October 1909, but an application has only been made to-day to bring his sons on the record as his representatives.

The appeal has by law long abated under Order XXII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, and defendants' Counsel presses his objection. There is no explanation of the extraordinary delay except that plaintiff's sons are said to have been ignorant of the law.

Plaintiff's Counsel asks us to accept ignorance of the law as a sufficient excuse on the authority of Ghulam Shah v. Mallik Muzaffar Khan (1). We do not understand the Full Bench to have ruled anything more than that under special circumstances ignorance of law may be accepted as a sufficient cause within the meaning of rule 9 (2) under Order XXII. There are, in our opinion, no special circumstances in the present case to justify concession to plaintiff's sons. Failure to apply the letter of the law in such a gross case of negligence would be tantamount to refusal to follow the law and would involve severe hardship to the defendants, against whom plaintiff has already succeeded to the extent of about two-thirds of his claim.

We observe also that this is not the only act of negligence on appellant's part. The appeal was admitted on the 4th June 1910, long after plaintiff's death, but nothing more was done for over a year owing to omission to pay process-fee till 6th August 1911. During all this time the defendants have been allowed to suppose that no appeal had been presented by plaintiff from the lower Appellate Court's decree of 5th December 1908. There is a limit to the extent to which negligence of this sort by an appellant can be properly overlooked.

We hold that the appeal abates. The defendants have filed cross-objections but these cannot be heard as there is no appellant on the record. We allow costs of the appeal to defendants, fixing Counsel's fee at Rs. 50 to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff, under Order XXII, rule 3 (2).

Appeal dismissed.

SAKHI CHAND—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Mesne profits, application for assessment of—Application in suit—Dismissal of application for default—Fresh application, if may be made—Application for restoration—Proper course to follow.

An application for assessment of mesne profits, is an application in the suit, although section 244, clauses (a and (b) of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, directs that an application of this kind when made should be entertained by the Court in its execution department.

Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen, 19 C. 132 (F. B.), Harmanoje Narain Singh v. Ram Prashad Singh, 6 C. L. J. 462 and Debendra Nath v. Khirode Chandra, 5 Ind. Cas. 272, relied upon:

Therefore, such an application cannot be entertained as one for execution of the decree where a similar application previously made had been dismissed for the default of the plaintiff.

But the plaintiff is entitled to make an application for the restoration of the application which was dismissed for default.

Rule against the judgment of the Sub-Judge of Bhagalpore, dated May 4th, 1910, and also an order of the District Judge of Bhagalpore, made on appeal on August 19th, 1910, dismissing the appeal preferred from the order of the Sub-Judge.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose and Sailendra Nath Palit, for the Petitioner.

Babu Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order of the Subordinate Judge, directing that an application for assessment of mesne profits be registered as an application for execution of a decree, notwithstanding the dismissal of a similar application previously made. It appears that the suit in which the plaintiff claimed to recover possession and mesne profits was decreed on the 28th March 1898. Possession was delivered in due course. An application subsequently made for assessment of the mesne profits as directed in the decree, was dismissed for default on the 25th January 1904. On the 13th April following, a fresh application was presented for assessment of mesne profits which was dismissed for default on the 9th May 1905. Upon appeal, the order of the primary Court was reversed by the District Judge on the 2nd January 1906. That order was confirmed on appeal to this Court on the 7th March 1907 [Upendra Chandra v. Sakhi Chand (1)]. The result was that the primary Court was directed to proceed with the application for assessment of mesne profits. The application, however, was ultimately dismissed for default on the 7th January 1910, by the Subordinate Judge as his order for the payment of fees to the Commissioner has not been carried out. Six days later, on the 13th January 1910, the decree-holder presented two applications, one for restoration of the application of the 13th April 1904 and the other a fresh application for assessment of mesne profits. On the 12th March 1910, the decree-holder apparently elected to proceed with the application for assessment of mesne profits and abandoned the application for restoration. The result was that the application for restoration was dismissed on that date and on the 4th May 1910, the application for assessment of mesne profits was directed to be registered as an execution case. This latter order is now assailed on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction inasmuch as the dismissal of the application of the 13th April 1904 on the 7th January 1910 was equivalent to a dismissal of the claim for mesne profits. In our opinion, there is no room for controversy that this contention is well founded and must prevail.

As was pointed out in the case of Rimkishore Ghose v. Gopi Kant Shaha (2), an application for assessment of mesne profits has been commonly treated as an application for execution of decree, it is nevertheless clear, upon the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen (3), that an application in this behalf is an application in the suit, although section 244, clauses (a) and (b), directs that an application of the kind when made should be entertained by the Court in its execution department. The same view was taken in the cases of Harmanoje Narain Singh v. Ram Prosad Narain Singh (4) and Debendra Nath v. Khirode Chandra (5). The true position in the present case, therefore, was that on the 13th April 1904, the decree-holder invited the Court to proceed to a determination of the amount of mesne profits recoverable under the decree. The Court proceeded to hold an investigation and a Commissioner was appointed for the purpose. Indeed, without previous ascertainment by a Commissioner upon evidence taken for the purpose, it would hardly be practicable for the Court to determine the matter in controversy. But the Commissioner was unable to submit his report in time because the order for payment of his fees had not been carried out by the plaintiff decree-holder. The result was that on the 6th January 1910, the Court recorded an order to the effect that the Commissioner be directed to return the commission and that the case be dismissed for default on behalf of the plaintiff. Now, what was the "case" thus dismissed? Clearly, it was the claim of the plaintiff for recovery of mesne profits from the defendants. As that case was dismissed on the 7th January 1910, it was obviously not open to the plaintiff to make a fresh application on the 13th January 1910 because there was no pending suit wherein that application could be deemed to have been made. The view, we take, is supported by the decision in Kewal Kishan Singh v. Sookhari (6). The case of Rankishore Singh v. Gopi Kant Shaha (2) is clearly distinguishable. In that case, an application had been made for the recovery of costs allowed by the decree and in that application a prayer had been inserted to the effect that the mesne profits recoverable under the decree might also be ascertained. When the application came to be considered by the Court, an order was made for recovery of the costs, but the prayer for assessment of mesne profits was apparently overlooked; when the costs had been realised, the application was accordingly treated to have terminated. Subsequently, in answer to a fresh application by the decree-holder for assessment of mesne profits, it was urged by the judgment-debtor that the dismissal of the previous application which embodied a prayer for assessment of mesne profits was equivalent to a dismissal of the claim for mesne profits. This was overruled by this Court and the course adopted appears to be supported by the observations in Pryag Singh v. Raju Singh (7), though the reasons assigned were not quite consistent with the principle of the decision in Puran Chand v.

Roy Radha Kishen (3). The case of Ram Krishna Ghose v. Gopi Kanth Saha (2) plainly is of no assistance to the decree-holder in the case before us; but if it lays down any rule of law inconsistent with the decision of the Full Bench in Puran Chand v. Roy Radha Kishen (3), it cannot be treated as a binding authority. In the case before us, the Court had been invited to adjudicate upon the question of amount of mesne profits recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant. The Court took steps to ascertain the amount, but could not determine the sum because of laches of the plaintiff. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the dismissal of the case on the 7th January, 1910 was equivalent to a dismissal of the claim for the mesne profits, and a fresh application in the same matter was not admissible. The order of the 4th May 1910 must consequently be discharged as made without jurisdiction.

The question next arises what further direction, if any, should be given in this matter. It is clear that the application for restoration to which we have referred was abandoned because the plaintiff erroneously believed that the proper procedure to follow was to make a fresh application for assessment of mesne profits. That application, as we have just held, cannot be entertained. Consequently, in the interests of justice, the order of the 12th March 1910 by which the application for restoration was dismissed should also be cancelled.

The result is, that the Rule is made absolute. The orders of the 12th March and the 1st May 1910 are both discharged; the application of the 13th January 1910 for assessment of mesne profits will stand dismissed; but the application of the same date for restoration will stand revived and the Court will now proceed to consider that application on the merits. The petitioner is entitled to the costs of this Rule. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

MEENAKSHI SUNDARA NACHIAR—APPELLANT

versus

SA. RM. CH. CHIDAMBARAM CHETTY AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Landlord's obstruction to tenant's peaceful enjoyment—Right of tenant to withhold rent—Right of defendant to plead as set-off damages sustained in action for rent—Apportionment—Constructive eviction—Abandonment by tenant—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 108 (b) & (c), 111, 114.

The Transfer of Property Act, (IV of 1882), does not deal with the question of the lessee's right to withold payment of the whole or part of the rent, where his possession of the premises has been seriously obstructed by the landlord. Section 108 does not deal with the defence to an action for rent. It enacts that the iessor is bound, on the lessee's request, to put him in possession of property, but does not say that, if he does dot do so, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent.

The Transfer of Property Act has made no change in the rule that non-delivery of possession of the premises is a good answer to a suit for rent.

Under clause (c) of section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, the actual prior payment of rent is not a condition for the lessee's right to enjoyment without interruption. The clause does not purport to confer any right or cast any liability on the lessor or lessee as a matter of law, but to state that a certain contract shall be taken to have been entered into between the parties. If the clause is to be read as importing a condition, it can only be so read in cases where the lessee claims actually to enforce his right to damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

The method of obstructing the tenant's enjoyment without actually evicting or turning him out is known as constructive eviction, i.e., where the landlord commits wrongful and unlawful acts which deprive the tenant of the beneficial use and enjoyment of the property. In such cases of constructive eviction, the tenant enjoys immunity from the payment of rent until the landlord again permits him to have quiet enjoyment.

The tenant, however, is not entitled to withhold payment of the entire rent due to the landlord, where the obstruction caused by the latter has entailed on the tenant damages in a lesser amount than the amount of rent due by him.

If the landlord does not put the lessee in possession of the whole of the premises leased, the latter is not bound to pay any portion of the rent. If the landlord is unable to do so, the tenant may be entitled to rescind the lease, but he cannot insist on keeping possession of a part of the premises and yet refuse to pay rent for that part. If, after putting the tenant in possession of the property leased, the landlord obstructs his enjoyment of a portion thereof, it is open to the tenant to say that he is not willing to enjoy a portion of the premises, paying proportionate rent, but would treat the whole lease as rescinded during the period of such obstruction, but, in that case, it is his duty to restore to the landlord the part of the premises still remaining in his occupation and not retain possession of it until he is again put in possession of the whole of the leased property.

Where a tenant remains in aportion of the premises leased after obstruction by the landlord, the landlord is entitled to rent for that portion either on the contract of lease or as compensation for use and occupation and in such cases the tenant is estopped from pleading that he is not liable for the rent of that portion. His right in law is to damages, while he is liable to pay the rent and it is only a rule of convenience that he should be allowed to enforce his right for damages by setting them off in the landlord's action for rent.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Madura, in A. S. No. 524 of 1908, presented against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Madura (East) in O. S. No. 27 of 1908.

Messrs. P. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar, T. Rangachariar and N. T. Shamanna, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this second appeal is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendant the rent of two villages for Fasli 1315. The defence to the claim is that the plaintiffs lessors seriously obstructed the enjoyment of the villages by the defendant in that year, by which she sustained loss to the extent of Rs. 1,300 and that the plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to claim any rent for that year. The amount of rent due for the year, according to the contract of lease, was Rs. 1,245-12 3. The plaintiffs are alleged to have obstructed the lessee's enjoyment, both of certain Karavalu trees and the paddy lands. With regard to the former, both the lower Courts have found that the obstruction was not of a substantial character. With respect to the paddy land, both Courts have concurred in finding that the plaintiffs, having brought the villages to sale for arrears of rent for previous faslis in November 1905 and purchased them at the auction sale, took steps to exercise their rights as purchasers and sent an order to the Curnam, Exhibit X-a, dated the 26th November 1905, directing him to conduct all operations in the villages under their order, as they had become the owners. They then moved the Magistrate to restrain the defendant from interfering with their enjoyment of the villages, allegirg that they were in possession as purchasers. The Magistrate took steps in consequence to preserve the peace and the defendant, while she denied the plaintiff's possession of the villages, consented to the produce on the lands being harvested under the supervision of a Village Munsif. The Curnam refused to send the usual accounts to the defendant. On account of the delay in the harvesting of the crops in consequence of the obstruction and on account of rains, the defendant sustained some damage. We may note that the rent sale was subsequently set aside as irregular and illegal. The Subordinate Judge does not find what loss the defendant sustained. He says that the delay was only for about three weeks, and that the plaintiffs themselves did not collect any portion of the rent from the ryots in possession; and he concludes:—"I find it impossible to hold that the defendant's enjoyment was so materially interfered with by any permanent act of the plaintiffs or their men as to lead to the conclusion that the defendant was not able to have peaceable enjoyment in 1315 and that the plaintiffs' acts amount to such an obstruction to enjoyment as to suspend the plaintiffs' claim for rent for that year."

He was of opinion that the defendant's proper course, if she sustained any damage, was to take independent steps for recovering it. He held that the defendant would be entitled to suspension of rent for the period when there is substantial and material obstruction to her enjoyment by the landlord.

The District Judge observes that the defendant has not shown that she sustained a larger damage than a sum between Rs. 500 and 900 and says:—"I do not consider that the plaintiffs' interference can be regarded as a substantial interference of defendant's enjoyment of the village, and it appears at most to have been a temporary obstruction which was soon removed and for which she may obtain damages." We are unable to agree that, if the plaintiffs' obstruction caused a loss of Rs. 900 or thereabouts, the obstruction would not be of a substantial character, the total income of the village being about Rs. 2,200. The learned Judge apparently did not think it necessary to record a definite finding on the question of the amount of the loss sustained by the defendant, because, according to the view he took of the interpretation to be placed on section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, even if there was substantial obstruction of the defendant's enjoyment by the plaintiffs, that would be no answer to this suit for rent. Clause (c) of that section enacts that "the lessor shall be deemed to contract with the lessee that, if the latter pays the rent reserved by the lease and performs the contracts binding on the lessee, he may hold the property during the time limited by the lease without interruption." Clause (l) provides "the lessee is bound to pay or tender, at the proper time and place, the premium or rent to the lessor or his agent in this behalf." Taking the two clauses together he held that "in order that a lessee might claim the benefit of an implied covenant for uninterruped enjoyment of the leased property, it is necessary, as a condition precedent, that he should comply with the provisions of section 108 (b), viz., that he should pay or tender at the proper time and place the rent payable by him. At the same time, he thinks that the lessee might sue for damages caused by the obstruction. We can hardly suppose that the Judge means that the tenant should first pay the rent, and then claim re-payment of it, in virtue of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Probably, what he means is, that the tenant, after paying the rent, may claim against the landlord damages for the breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. If clause (c) must be construed to require that the contract between the lessor and lessee should be taken to be that the prior payment of rent is a condition precedent for the tenant's right of quiet enjoyment, we have no doubt that this condition can apply only where the tenant attempts to enforce the covenant for quiet enjoyment by a claim for damages. It may not be unreasonable to say that, before the tenant actively asserts his claim to damages, he must perform his own obligation to pay or tender the rent due to the landlord, though it is difficult to see the necessity for doing so, especially, where the damage sustained exceeds the rent reserved. We are not convinced that, on the right construction of clause (c), the actual prior payment of rent is intended to be a condition for the right to enjoy without interruption. The clause does not purport to confer any right or cast any liability on the lessor or lessee as a matter of law, but to state that a certain contract shall be taken to have been entered into between the parties. Now, suppose an instrument of lease says 'if you pay the rent and perform your covenants, you may hold the property for 20 years.' This need not necessarily mean anything more than that if the lessee is unwilling to pay the rent reserved or to perform his other covenants, i.e., obligations under the lease, he would have no right of quiet enjoyment. We can hardly think of any good reason for enacting a provision that the failure to pay a single instalment of rent should deprive a lessee of the right to continue in enjoyment of the leased property. It is hardly necessary to say that such is not the English law. The right to re-enter on non-payment of rent is confined, according to that law, to cases where there is an express covenant for re-entry. Section 111 clause (g) shows that the law is the same in this country. Section 114 goes further and provides in such cases for granting relief to the lessee against forfeiture for non-payment of rent; the usual clause in instruments of lease in England was paying the rent, etc., 'you shall be entitled to hold, etc.' The Courts have not construed this to mean that actual payment of the rent is a condition for the right to hold for the stipulated term. See Dawson v. Dyer (1) and Edge v. Boileau (2). No doubt, where an unusual privilege, such as a right to a renewal of the lease, is granted, if the lessee pay the rent in time, the Court may be inclined to continue the observance of the covenant as a condition to be satisfied to entitle the lessee to the privilege. See Bastin v. Bidwell (3). We think there are good grounds for holding that, notwithstanding the conditional form of the clause in clause (c) of section 108, it was not intended to make the right to the benefit of the covenant for quiet enjoyment conditional on the actual payment of the rent. At any rate, we are clearly of opinion that, if the clause is to be read as importing a condition, it can only be so read in case where the lessee claims actually to enforce his right to damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

The Transfer of Property Act does not in reality deal with the question of the lessee's right to withhold payment of the whole or part of the rent where his possession of the premises has been seriously obstructed by the landlord. Section 108 does not deal with the defence to an action for rent. It enacts that the lessor is bound, on the lessee's request, to put him in possession of property, but does not say that, if he does not do so, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent. But there can be no doubt that the Transfer of Property Act has made no change in the rule that non-delivery of possession of the premises is a good answer to a suit for rent. See the Zemindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (4).

The basis of the defence, where the lessor has obstructed the lessee's enjoyment, is that in cases of continuous relationships involving mutual rights and obligations, a party who repudiates and acts in violation of his obligations cannot claim to enforce his own rights against the other party. Hence, a lessee who abandons his lease is not entitled to complain of dispossession by his landlord. See Obhoya Charan Bhooia v. Koilash Chunder Dey (5). To use the language of Mr. Adam in his Landlord and Tenant, a rent service is something given by way of retribution to the lessor for the land demised by him to the tenant, and consequently the lessor's title to the rent is founded upon this that the land demised is enjoyed by the tenant during the term included in the contract, for the tenant can make no return for the thing he has not. If, therefore, the tenant be deprived of the thing, the obligation to pay the rent ceases, because such obligation had its force only from the consideration which was the enjoyment of the thing demised. In England the defence is raised in the form that the tenant has been evicted from the premises and is, therefore, entitled to suspension of the rent during the period of eviction. See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, page 476; For on Landlord and Tenant, page 134. But eviction has been found not to be an appropriate word and the Courts hold that there is constructive eviction where the landlord, without turning the tenant out of possession, commits unlawful and wrongful acts which deprive the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment and use of the property; such wrongful acts amount in law to constructive eviction, and the tenant enjoys immunity from the payment of rent until the landlord again permits him to have quiet enjoyment. This principle has been enunciated in a series of cases. See Lhunput Singh v. Mahomed Kazim Ispahain (6); Harro Kumari Chowdhrani v. Purna Chandra Sarbogya (7); Rai Charan Sar Mazumdar v. Administrator-General of Bengal (8); Mahomed Zeaulla Miah v. Sukliannessa Bibi (9); Purna Chandra Sarbajna v. Rasik Chandra Chakrabarti (10). We are clearly of opinion that the Transfer of Property Act has made no modification of the law in this respect. The learned Vakil for the respondents contends that, as the obstruction in this case was only for a short time and the tenant obtained possession of the villages afterwards and was in enjoyment during the remainder of the fasli, she is not entitled to withhold payment of the whole of the rent. We do not deal with this contention at present, because, before disposing of the case finally, we consider it desirable to request the District Judge to submit a clear finding on the question, what damage did the defendant sustain in fasli 1315 in consequence of the plaintiffs' obstruction of her enjoyment and we accordingly do so.

Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer further contends that, as the defendant consented to the harvesting of the crops by the village Munsif, she cannot now complain of obstruction by the plaintiffs, but the obstruction commenced several weeks before the defendant's consent referred to and the consent can be construed only as a forced abandonment of the premises for a time in consequence of the obstruction. According to some authorities, abandonment is even necessary to enable a tenant to claim immunity from rent. See Mr. Adam on Landlord and Tenant, page 1293. The finding will be submitted within one month from the date of the receipt of this order. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections. Fresh evidence may be adduced on both sides.

In compliance with the above judgment, the District Judge of Madura submitted the following

FINDING.

A finding has been called for on the question, what damage did defendant sustain in Fasli 1315 in consequence of the plaintiffs' obstruction of her enjoyment.

There is not much material for an answer to this question. Defendant's Vakil claims Rs. 1,422 or 158 kalams at Rs. 9 a kalam. I do not think it is of much use attempting to estimate the loss in kalams at a certain rate per kalam. Exhibit C supplies a safe foundation for an estimate. It shows that the average income of the village was taken at Rs. 2,878-10-1. Now the evidence of the Village Munsif, who harvested the crops, (D. W. No. 2) is that half of the village was harvested without loss and that the loss on the remainder was 50 per cent. This makes the total loss 25 per cent. On the basis of an average income of Rs. 2,878, this would represent in round figures Rs. 720.

I would, therefore, find that defendant's loss was Rs. 720. That such loss was due to the obstruction of the other party is, I think, obvious. The harvest was delayed from 1st to 19th March and not finished till considerably later, and the damage may be attributed entirely to the delay.

This appeal coming on for final hearing on Monday the 1st April 1912, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred to it by this Court for trial and, having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT:—The District Court has submitted a finding that the loss sustained by the defendant in consequence of the obstruction to the enjoyment caused by the plaintiffs was Rs. 720. It is contended for the defendant that, as there was material obstruction to her enjoyment of the leased premises during Fasli 1315, she is entitled to an entire suspension of rent for the year and the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover any amount. This contention was urged before our order of remand, but we reserved the consideration of the question until the return of the finding. As already pointed out in our remand order, the Transfer of Property Act does not deal with the question of the lessee's right to withhold payment of the whole or part of the rent when his possession has been obstructed by the landlord. For the appellant, several decisions of the Calcutta High Court have been cited in support of the contention, that she is not bound to pay any portion of the rent. The question does not seem to have been definitely decided by this Court in any previous case nor apparently by the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad. As observed in the remand order, rent is paid by the tenant in consideration of her enjoyment of the land demised to her, and vice versa it must be held that the payment of the rent is the consideration which the tenant is bound to render to the landlord in lieu of her enjoyment of the land. Prima facie, therefore, it appears to be reasonable, that, where the tenant continues in the occupation of the land demised to him and receives the income thereof, he should be bound to pay rent to the landlord even though his income may have suffered some diminution in consequence of the landlord's obstruction. But, it is argued, that we should follow the decisions of the Courts in England which, it is said, have laid down that, where there has been such material obstruction by the landlord of the tenant's enjoyment as would be regarded as tantamount to eviction, the landlord should not be entitled to recover any portion of the rent. It cannot be contended that those decisions are binding on the Courts in India, and, before we adopt them, it is our duty to consider whether they are based on general principles applicable to this country. If the tenant's enjoyment is obstructed, he is, no doubt, entitled to damages for such obstruction; but it does not appear to follow from that, while in enjoyment of his landlord's premises, he should be entitled to withhold altogether the consideration due to the landlord for such enjoyment. Where rights in rem over property are created by contract of parties, ordinarily each party is entitled to enforce his rights as against the other and neither party can refuse to perform his obligation on the ground that the other party has not performed his. Such is, undoubtedly, the law in the case of a contract of sale and also in the case of mortgages, except, perhaps, in one respect that, where the mortgagee has failed to advance the whole amount secured by the instrument of the mortgage, the mortgagor cannot be compelled to re-pay more than the amount advanced.

In the case of a lease, which involves a relationship giving rise to recurring obligations between the lessor and lessee, the law applicable to covenants has been applied to so as to modify that applicable to rights in rem. The ordinary rule obtaining with regard to obligations arising from covenants is, no doubt, that one of the parties to contract cannot demand of the other party the performance of his obligations unless he has himself performed all his own obligations or is prepared to do so and the repudiation of his obligations by one party may, in some cases, entitle the other to rescind the contract. Applying this rule, it may be held that if the landlord does not put the tenant in possession of the whole of the premises leased, the latter is not bound to pay any portion of the rent. If the landlord is unable to do so, the tenant may be entitled to rescind the lease, but it does not follow that he would be entitled to insist on keeping possession of a part of the premises and yet refuse to pay rent for that part. When the landlord has already put the tenant in possession of the property leased, his initial obligation to the tenant has been performed; but, as the relationship is continuous, it will be a breach of his obligations arising from the relationship of lessor to deprive his tenant subsequently of the possession of any portion of the leased premises. But if he does so, what is the resulting right of the lessee? It may be open to him to say that he is not willing to enjoy only a portion of the premises paying proportinate rent and that, until the landlord restores possession of what he has wrongfully taken, he is not willing to perform the obligations of a lessee at all but would treat it as rescinded during such time. But, in that case, it seems to be clear that it should be his duty to restore to the landlord the part of the premises still remaining in his occupation and not to retain possession of them until he is put in possession again of the whole of the leased property. It must be admitted that this is not the manner in which the law has developed in England.

It would seem that the reason for the rule adopted in England was originally connected with the feudal system which once prevailed in that country. In Bacon's Abridgment, Vol. VII, page 62, it is stated that no man may be encouraged to injure or disturb his tenant in his possession whom by the policy of the feudal law he ought to protect and defend. Other reasons were subsequently given in support of the rule.

Thus the Chief Justice Haine says in Hodgkins v. Robson (11):—"If the lessor enters into a part by wrong, this would suspend the whole rent, for, in such a case, he shall not so apportion his own wrong as to enforce the lessee to pay anything for the residue." Baron Gilbert in his Treatise on Rents gives a third reason. He says (page 178):—"Because by the demise every part of the land was equally chargeable with the whole rent, therefore, the lessor shall not, by his own act, discharge any part from the burden during the continuance of such contract. It will thus be seen that the original reason for the rule in England based on the obligation of a lord to his tenant according to feudal principles is not applicable in this country. The later reason hardly met the injustice of the tenant keeping possession of the landlord's land and still refusing to pay any rent for it. It need hardly be said that there is no general principle of law against the apportionment of rent. It is allowed where either the reversion or the tenancy has become severed so that different persons are in possession of portions thereof and the severance may take place either by law or by the act of the parties. See Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XVIII, page 484. The disallowance of it, where the landlord has deprived the tenant of a portion of the premises and the tenant, without giving up possession of the remainder retains it, is apparently due to historical causes which affected the devolopment of the English law. A different rule is adopted in America. In Mr. Adam's Landlord and Tenant, page 1293, the law is stated thus: "It is an elementary rule in regard to constructive eviction that the tenant must abandon the possession of the premises to the landlord for he cannot claim that he has been forced to go out while he remains in." In American Cyclopædia of Law and Procedure, Vol. XXIV, page 1130, it is observed: "There can be no constructive eviction without the surrender of possession of the premises by the tenant." Even in England it does not seem to be absolutely settled that the landlord would not be entitled to any portion of the rent where the tenant has not been deprived of possession of the whole of the land. Lord Esher preferred to express no opinion on it in Baynton v. Morgan (12).

Foa in his work on 'Landlord and Tenant' says that the question was not really decided in the earlier English cases, Neale v. Mackenzie (13) and Reeve v. Bird (14) and he cites the case of Stokes v. Cooper (15) as an authority for the opposite view. Again, apportionment of rent is allowed where the eviction of the tenant is not the result of a wrongful act of the landlord but of a person holding by title paramount. In Imambandi Begum v. Kanleswari Pershad (16), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council apparently did not consider that there was any such rule applicable in this country. The case was decided on the footing that the tenant was evicted from a portion of the premises and the landlord was held entitled to a decree for rent for the portion of which the tenant was in possession although the question now under discussion was not definitely raised and decided. In Gopanund Jha v. Lalla Gobind Pershad (17), the tenant was evicted from the part of the land by title paramount. Sir Barnes Peacock held that the landlord was entitled to rent for the remainder, following the English rule. The Calcutta High Court has also held that apportionment might be allowed where a tenant's loss of possession is due to the wrong of a third party or to an act of nature, as for example, by diluvion. See Rasseswari v. Surendra Mohun (18). The Calcutta cases generally lay down that, where there has been an eviction from even a part of the premises, the whole rent is suspended. See Surip Jan Bibi v. Aftabuddin Miah (19) and earlier cases cited therein. But it can hardly be said that the rule has been settled in that Court. In Rai Charan Sar Mazumdar v. Administrator-General of Bengal (8), Harington, J., abstained from expressing any opinion on the question. In Annada Prasad Mukhopadhya v. Mathura Nath Nag Mazumdar (20), Chitty and Vincent, JJ., were of opinion that the English rule was not applicable to the country. After referring to the earlier cases, Chitty, J., observes: "I do not propose to enter upon an elaborate discussion of the English cases. It may be questioned how far the technicalities to be found in the English law should be allowed to affect the relations of landlord and tenant in this country. In one respect, the principle underlying the English decisions appears to be inapplicable to the present case. Eviction is regarded as a wrong done by the landlord to his tenant for which the former is to be penalised." Justice Vincent took the same view. In Kali Prasanna Khasnabish v. Mathura Nath Sen (21), where a tenant was deprived of the possession of a portion of the holding by other tenants of the landlord whose leases were made subsequent to his own but remained in possession of the remainder, Brett and Sharfuddin, JJ. held that he was bound to pay rent for that portion. In Dhumpat Singh v. Mahomed Kazim Ispahain (6), Ghose and Hill, JJ, allowed apportionment where the rent had been separately fixed on the portion from which the tenant was evicted and the portion of which he retained possession although the covenant for rent was entire. In our opinion, it is difficult to hold on principle, that the landlord is not entitled to any portion of the rent if the tenant remains in possession of a portion of the land let. He must be held entitled to it on the contract of lease, since the tenant prefers not to throw up the lease during the period of eviction or as compensation for use and occupation and it would, in our opinion, be reasonable to hold that the tenant, where he retains possession of a portion of the land, must be estopped from pleading that he is not liable for the rent of that portion. Strictly speaking, where the tenant has once been let into occupation of the premises leased to him, his right in law, where he is deprived of possession of a part thereof is only to damages while he is liable to pay the rent; and it is only a rule of convenience that he should be allowed to enforce his right to damages by setting them off in the landlord's action for rent. We, therefore, hold that, deducting the amount of Rs. 720, the damages found to have been sustained by defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to rent claimed for Fasli 1315. The decrees of the lower Courts will be modified accordingly. The plaintiffs and defendant will pay and receive proportionate costs in all the Courts.

Title—Priority—Purchase of holding—Plaintiff's purchase at mortgage decree sale—Defendant's purchase at co-sharer landlord's rent decree sale—Question of transferability of holding, if can be raised by defendant—Defendant, representative-in-interest of judgment-debtor—Estoppel—Defendant bound by same estoppel as judgment-debtor.

The plaintiffs purchased a holding in execution of a decree on a mortgage held by them against the admitted tenant. The defendants subsequently purchased the same holding in execution of a decree for rent held by a co-sharer landlord:

Held, (1) that the title of the plaintiffs was superior to that of the defendants who, as purchasers at a sale in execution of a decree for rent by a co-sharer landlord, were in the same position as a purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree for money;

(2) that the question of transferability of the holding could not be raised at the instance of the defendants who were the representatives-in-interest of the tenant and were bound by the same estoppel as the judgment-debtor whose right, title and interest had been purchased by them.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The case for the plaintiffs is that on the 25th January 1905, they purchased this property in execution of a decree on a mortgage held by them against the admitted tenant and that although they obtained delivery of possession through Court, they were subsequently ousted by the defendants. The case for the defendants is that they purchased the property in March 1906 in execution of a decree for rent held by a co-sharer landlord and are entitled to hold possession thereof. It is clear that the title of the plaintiffs is superior to that of the defendants, who, as purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree for rent by a co-sharer landlord, are in the same position as a purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree for money. But the Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that the holding in question was not shown to be transferable either by custom or by local usage. It was contended in the Courts below, and the contention has been repeated in this Court on behalf of the appellant, that the question of transferability could not be raised at the instance of the defendants. It has been pointed out, in the first place, that as between the tenant mortgagor and his mortgagees no question of transferability can arise. [Bhagirath Changa v. Hafiz-ul-din (1)]. This position has not been and cannot be disputed. It has next been argued that the defendants are the representatives-in-interest of the tenant and are bound by the same estoppel as the judgment-debtor whose right, title and interest have been purchased by them. This position is supported by the decision of this Court in the cases of Ayen ud-din v. Srish Chandra Banerjee (2)]; Haro Chandra Poddar v. Umesh Chandra Bhattacharjee (3) and Shyama Charan v. Mokhoda Sundari Debi (4). The case of Asmatnunnessa Khatun v. Harendra Lal Biswas (5), upon which the learned District Judge relied in support of his view, is clearly distinguishable. There the question of transferability was raised by the entire body of landlords, while in the case before us the question is sought to be raised by the purchasers at a sale held in execution of a decree of a co-sharer landlord. The decision in Achamulla v. Cholamunnessa Bibi (6) is also distinguishable. There no question was raised as to the estoppel which might bind the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by a co-sharer landlord. What was argued was that as such purchaser had taken the property he had induced the plaintiff to believe that the property was transferable; for that contention, there was no foundation, because the purchase by the plaintiff had been made long before the purchase by the co-sharer landlord. Again, as pointed out in the case of Shyama Charan v. Mokhoda (4), the decision in Achamulla v. Cholamunnessa (6) rests on the doubtful ground that the execution purchaser is not bound by the same estoppel as the judgment-debtor. In our opinion, there is no room for controversy that the question of transferability cannot be raised at the instance of the defendants.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the suit decreed with costs throughout.

MADAN MOHAN NATH v. BHIKHAR SHAHU.

Babu Bipin Bihari Ghose (Junior), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order which purports to have been made in proceedings in execution of a mortgage-decree, but which really amends the original decree. The mortgage-decree made in favour of the present respondent on the 15th December 1904 against three defendants, directed the sale of the mortgaged properties; the first defendant alone, however, was made liable for the costs of the suit. An application was made for execution of this decree on the 8th January 1909, and after the objection of the judgment-debtors had been overruled on the 21st January, execution was directed to proceed. Two of the judgment-debtors, the second and third, then appealed to this Court and they joined as parties respondents to their appeal the decree-holder and the first judgment-debtor. At the hearing of the appeal, the first judgment-debtor respondent was not represented; but by consent of the two judgment-debtors appellants and the decree-holder respondent, it was directed by this Court that the decree of the lower Court and the application for execution be amended by striking out both the names of the second and third defendants, that as prayed by them execution do proceed against the first defendant alone, and, finally, that their rights, in the property, if any, be not affected by the sale. Whether an order of this description, whereby the decree was materially varied, could have been validly made on an appeal from an order in proceedings for execution of the original decree, it is not necessary for us to consider. But it is clear that this order does not bind the first defendant as he was not a party thereto. Subsequently on the 4th March 1910, an application was made for execution of the decree against the first defendant alone. The second and third defendants entered appearance and objected to the execution on the ground that the decree had not been amended, at the instance of the decree-holder in the manner directed by this Court by consent of parties and they apprehended that the result of the execution sale, if it took place without a prior amendment of the decree, would be to affect their interest in the property. The Court overruled the objection taken by these two judgment-debtors. The first judgment-debtor then appeared and contended that the previous order of this Court was not binding upon him and that the decree could not be amended except upon a proper application in that behalf, to the Court which had passed the decree. The Subordinate Judge thought that this objection was frivolous and he proceeded to amend the decree. This is the order now assailed before this Court, and there can, in our opinion, be no room for controversy that the order cannot be supported.

Under section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1903, clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders, or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission may at any time be corrected by the Court either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties. It is manifest that an order under this section must be made in the suit itself. But it has been argued for the respondent that as the Subordinate Judge, who had to deal with the application for execution of the decree, was the Judge who had made the original decree, it was competent to him to amend the decree even in execution proceedings. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well founded. It is an elementary principle of law that an execution Court must execute the decree as it stands; it cannot alter, vary, or add to the terms of the decree; its propriety or validity, cannot be discussed in execution proceedings. Girish Chunder v. Shoshi Shikhareswar(1), Udwant Singh v. Tokhan Singh (2), Forester v. Secretary of State (3); Hurro Durga v. Surut Sundari (4). It would, in our opinion, be fundamentally erroneous to allow an execution Court to amend a decree without notice given to the parties and all the facts upon which amendment is claimed properly set out and investigated. The learned Vakil for the respondent has finally invited us to embark upon an inquiry into the merits of the matter; this necessarily involves an investigation of the merits of the suit and we must decline to accept his invitation to persist in the irregular course hitherto pursued in this litigation.

We desire to add that this order will not prevent the decree-holder from applying to the Subordinate Judge, if he is so advised, for amendment of the decree.

Religious Institution—Succession to Mahantship—Byragi Thakurdwara in Banswala Bazar, Amritsar City—Suit by senior chela to oust junior with equal right.

Only a person with a superior right can disturb another in possession of property. So where in a suit for possession of a Byragi Thakardwara in Banswala Bazar, Amritsar city, brought by the senior chela against the junior, the right of both was found to be equal and the plaintiff failed to prove that as senior chela he had a preferential right to succeed, his claim was disallowed on the ground that he was not entitled to oust the defendant.

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, at Amritsar, dated 31st January 1910, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nand Lal and G. L. Maheshwary, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for possession of a Byragi Thakurdwara in Amritsar city. The last Mahant, Radhka Das, died on the 9th November 1908, and the plaintiff was then in Benares. Ralla Ram is the principal defendant in the case and will be referred to in this judgment simply as "the defendant", the other defendants being simply tenants of two shops attached to the Thakurdwara. Ralla Ram being on the spot took possession. Plaintiff claims that he is the chela of Radhka Das and denies that defendant is the chela. Defendant claims to be the chela and denies that plaintiff is a chela. Plaintiff also claims that if both he and defendant are held to be chelas, he (plaintiff) is entitled to preference on account of seniority. The lower Court has dismissed the claim holding that the evidence on both sides proves that both plaintiff and defendant were made chelas by the late Mahant and that plaintiff has failed to prove any thing by reason of which he should be given the preference and allowed to oust the party in possession.

Plaintiff appeals. In ground 2 of the appeal, it is said that plaintiff is admittedly a chela of the late Mahant, but we cannot find from the record that the defendant ever made any such admission, though the Subordinate Judge, in one part of his judgment, writes:—"there is no doubt that plaintiff is admitted by defendant Ralla Ram himself (in his story) to be senior to him." The evidence as to appointment of chela seems to be about equally balanced. Both sides have produced Mahants and others. Plaintiff's witnesses swear that plaintiff was appointed a chela in their presence; defendant's witnesses say the same for him. Holes can be picked in the evidence on both sides. The lower Court rejects as incredible the story told by defendant's witnesses that when he was appointed a chela, the keys were handed over to him. On the other hand, we might equally criticize the evidence of plaintiff's first witness, Mahant Reoti Das, who says he was a chela himself at the time of plaintiff's appointment and that only small pujaris and not big Mahants are called when a chela is appointed. To criticize the evidence in detail would be useless; it is simply a case of so many witnesses deposing on plaintiff's behalf that some 14 or 15 years ago, Mahant Radhka Das appointed the plaintiff as his chela and of so many witnesses deposing on defendant's behalf that about two years ago, the late Mahant made defendant his chela. For the plaintiff, it is urged that the defendant does not use the name of Gokal Das which he alleges was given to him when he was made a chela but still conducts a newspaper in his own name. But times are changing and Byragis like other people do many things now which would have been accounted shocking in the good old days. And if the evidence of the four defence witnesses examined on commission at Benares is to be credited, plaintiff's conduct has been still stranger, for according to these witnesses, while pursuing his studies at Benares, the plaintiff has left the Byragi sect and become a Sarsut Brahmin and become the chela of one Rattan Singh and changed his name from Mangu Ram (by which name—not Mangal Das—he seems to be known in Benares) to that of Damodar Singh. This evidence, which seems to have been scarcely noticed by the learned Subordinate Judge, if credited, would disqualify plaintiff altogether from succeeding to the Mahantship of a Byragi institution, for even plaintiff's witnesses admit that leaving the panth is a disqualification. The evidence certainly seems to refer to the plaintiff as in it he is described as Mangu Ram, son of Narain Das of Amritsar. Narain Das is the natural father of the plaintiff but apparently the plaintiff was not at Benares when this evidence was taken and so the witnesses have not identified him as the man of whom they are speaking. According to Rattan Singh's evidence, plaintiff's new guru, Rattan Singh, had to turn him out for gambling and playing musical instruments. If the evidence tendered by plaintiff be accepted as good enough to prove that he was appointed a chela, we must agree with the lower Court that defendant's evidence as to defendant's appointment is equally good. The lower Court finds that "both parties have produced overwhelming evidence." We prefer to say that the evidence seems about equal. If one has established his appointment as chela, so has the other, and beyond the bare assertion of some of plaintiff's witnesses, we can find no proof of the allegation that mere seniority gives any preference. The defendant has set up a Will, but the lower Court has rightly held this Will to be not proved. The Mahant was evidently too ill to sign it and the Sub-Registrar very properly refused to register it. So the defendant has failed to show that the Mahant nominated him as his successor, but, on the other hand, the plaintiff has failed to prove that the Mahant nominated him. As to appointment by the Bhek, the evidence is again balanced, so many witnesses supporting each side. Either one set of witnesses or other is lying or else the truth is that the Bhek was divided and one-half assembled and went through the ceremony of appointing the plaintiff, while at another occasion, the other half assembled and appointed the defendant. That the defendant performed the funeral ceremonies immediately after the death appears certain; but, on the other hand, plaintiff called by telegram from Benares appears to have taken upon himself to perform some of the later ceremonies. What the real test is as to succession with regard to this particular institution has not been proved.

Plaintiff's natural father, Narain Das, seems to have been a Gurbhai of the late Mahant (i. e., Narain Das and Radhka Das both had the same guru). Narain Das was on the spot in Amritsar during Radhka Das' last illness which lasted some days, and it seems to us peculiar that Narain Das did not send a telegram to Benares to call the plaintiff back before Radhka Das' death, instead of waiting till after the death to call his son back.

We agree with the lower Court that the evidence is about equally balanced, and that plaintiff has failed to prove that he has any preferential right to succeed to the Mahantship. As to the eighth ground of appeal, Counsel has wisely refrained from addressing us on this point, though we reminded him of this ground and asked him if he wished to support it.

We uphold the decision of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal. We pass no order as to costs in this Court as apparently the defendant has the support of only half of the Bhek.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Family settlements, binding nature of—Inquiry into antecedent rights of parties, whether permissible.

In judging of the validity of a compromise, Courts are not entitled to inquire into the rights of parties as they stood before the compromise to see whether the compromise has recognized them; the inquiry should be restricted to the question whether the claims advanced by either side were bona fide and whether the compromise really is in settlement of such claims. Every compromise may invoive the giving up of certain claims to which a party may be rightly entitled, and the acquisition of interests to which he may have no claim. But if such compromise is a settlement of disputes advanced bona fide, then, prima facie, it ought to be upheld. This reason applies with greater force in cases of family settlements where the peace of the family is involved, more especially when the settlements were effected long prior to the date of the dispute between the parties.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 1645 of 1908.

The plaintiff is the son of Devaraja Ayier, who died in the year 1850, leaving a widow, named Ponnammal. He had another son, Sivaramier, who predeceased him in 1843 Sivarama Aiyer had a son, Devaraja Aiyer by name, who died in 1851. The plaintiff now claims to recover the property as the reversioner of this Devaraja Aiyer as his brother's son, alleging that the cause of action arose on the death of Devaraja Aiyar's mother, Mangalathammal, who obtained possession of the property on Devaraja Aiyer's death and died in the year 1905. The defendants are the persons who claim under various alienations made by Mangalathammal. One of the questions raised for decision is whether Mangalathammal had become the absolute owner of the properties which are in the possession of these defendants under a compromise, Exhibit VIII, or whether she had only a widow's interest in the estate.

Some years before the plaintiff's father, Devaraja Aiyer's death, there was a partition entered into between him, his son, the plaintiff, and his daughter-in-law, Mangalathammal, acting as the guardian of her minor son, Devaraja Aiyer. Each of them took $\frac{1}{3}$rd share in the family property. The partition-deed also recites that on the death of the plaintiff's father, Devaraja Aiyer, his property was to be divided equally between the plaintiff and his brother's son, Devaraja. Six years afterwards, in 1850, a fresh arrangement was come to by which the arrangement of 1844 was modified. Devaraja Aiyar died in 1850. Disputes arose between the parties immediately after and a suit (Original Suit No. 726 of 1851) was filed by Ponnammal (widow of Devarja Aiyer) in the Diwani Adawlut Court of Kumbaconam against her daughter-in-law, Mangalathammal, and certain others. She set out the partition of 1844 as well as the partition of 1850, and stated that when she came to know of this arrangement of 1850, she represented that the arrangement was unfair, as it did not provide for the performance of various ceremonies of her son and she alleged in the plaint that when her husband was about to die, he acknowledged in the presence of mediators that the deed of partition executed by him was inequitable and that the properties should, upon her son's attaining the age of majority, be divided into two equal shares. She alleged that these defendants had taken illegal possession of these properties, that the deed of partition was void, that her daughter-in-law was entitled only to maintenance and not entitled to any property and that she was entitled to recover possession of those properties which she was not in possession of. What Mangalathammal's contention in that suit was does not appear. All that the evidence, that is relied on by the plaintiff to prove what her contention was, is Exhibit XXIII, which is a statement filed by Ponnammal in that suit itself in reply to the written statement of Mangalathammal. That statement does not show what Mangalathammal's contentions were. In the course of that suit, a razinamah, Exhibit VIII, was put in by the parties. It refers to the death of Devaraja Aiyar after the partition of the 18th July 1850 and it states that Mangalathammal "first defendant herself shall, with rights of every kind and with competency to alienate by way of gift, sale or otherwise, enjoy the properties that fell to the share of the said Devarajan under the said deed of partition and list;" and it gives similar rights to the plaintiff therein on behalf of Annasami Aiyar. By that document, Mangalathammal also undertook to pay to the plaintiff therein through Court Rs. 115 for meeting the marriage expenses of her son, Annasami. The main question in the suit is whether this compromise (Exhibit VIII) gives the properties referred to therein to Mangalathammal absolutely. On behalf of the defendants, it is contended that it was a family arrangement between the members of a Hindu family and that it settled the disputes which had been raised between the parties and it should not now be re-opened at this distance of time. On behalf of the plaintiff, it is contended that the compromise gives Mangalathammal no more than what was given to her by the deed of the 18th July 1850 in the properties, that she took only life-interest in them, (i. e.,) the interset of a Hindu widow and that for her acquisition of the absolute interest in the properties, there was really no consideration. As we have already pointed out, it does not appear what Mangalathammal's contentions were in that case. Nor does it appear whether the properties of which she obtained possession were one-half of the properties left by Devaraja Aiyar, the plaintiff's father. It also appears that she paid Rs. 115, which she was not bound to pay, for meeting the expenses of the plaintiff's marriage. If in that suit, she claimed one-half of the properties in dispute and she claimed not only a widow's interest in such properties but an absolute interest with right to alienate by way of gift or sale or in any other form, then, it is difficult to say that the compromise was not in settlement of claims advanced in that suit. In that view, she must have given up a portion of the properties to which she laid claim and paid a sum of Rs. 115 in consideration of Ponnammal recognising her absolute interest in the properties which were finally given to her. It is true that there is no direct evidence in the case of what the scope of the litigation was or what her contentions were; but the deed of compromise itself by recognising in her such rights, is evidence that she claimed those rights. The plaintiff's Pleader contends that the deeds of partition of 1844 and 1850 did not recognise such a claim and that she did not put forward any claim which was not recognised by those partition-deeds. But, in judging of the validity of a compromise, we are not entitled to inquire into the rights of parties as they stood before the compromise to see whether the compromise has recognised them; we are only entitled to inquire whether the claims advanced by either side were bona fide and whether the compromise really was in settlement of such claims. Every compromise may involve the giving up of certain claims to which a party may be rightly entitled and the acquisition of interests to which he may have no claim. But if such compromise is a settlement of disputes advanced bona fide, then, prima facie, it ought to be upheld. And this reason applies with greater force in cases of family settlements where the peace of the family is involved. Further, taking into consideration that more than 50 years have elapsed after the date of the compromise and Mangalathammal is now dead, we shall not be justified in presuming that the contentions advanced by Mangalathammal did not involve claims justifying such a razinamah. We are, therefore, unable to say that the compromise is invalid for that reason.

It is then argued that though the compromise may be valid, Ponnammal had no authority to part with Annasami's right as his guardian. If Annasami himself could have entered into a razinamah like this, we fail to see why Ponnammal, acting as his guardian could not have entered into it. It is possible that Ponnammal might have got on his behalf more property than he would have been entitled to get. She certainly got Rs. 115 of which presumably he had the benefit. She has not parted with Annasami's right of inheritance to Devaraja Aiyar as was contended for by the respondent's Pleader. We disallow this contention. We hold accordingly that the razinamah (Exhibit VIII) is binding on the plaintiff and that, therefore, he is precluded from contending that the deceased Mangalathammal was not the full owner of the properties therein referred to with power to alienate. She acquired such power under the compromise. The alienations made by her cannot, therefore, be impeached by the plaintiff on the grounds alleged.

The decree is reversed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout against the appellants, defendants Nos. 7 to 10.

Appeal—Present right of—Construction of Statute—Right in esse not affected by new Law—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 6—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 154, O. XLI, r. 23, O. XLIII, r. 1 (u)—Re—Appeal mand order.

The right of appeal in a pending action is not a matter of procedure and the repeal of a statute, which was in force at the time when the action was instituted and which regulated the course of appeal, does not affect the right of appeal acquired or enjoyed under that Statute unless the repealing Statute expressly or by necessary implication takes away that right.

The words "any present right of appeal" in section 154 of Act V of 1908, mean a right of appeal in esse and not in posse, i.e., a right of appeal which had actually come into existence and was capable of being exercised by the aggrieved party at the commencement of the new Statute.

Where in a suit instituted before the coming into force of the new Civil Procedure Code, an order of remand is passed after the new Code has come into force, the right of appeal against the order is regulated by the new and not by the old Code.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Sialkot Division, dated 8th January 1909, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Gujranwala, dated 20th November 1908.

JUDGMENT.—The question of law referred to the Division Bench by the learned Judge in Chambers is stated with sufficient clearness in the order of reference which runs as follows:—

"This is an appeal from an order under rule 23 of Order XLI of the Code of Civil Procedure remanding a case to the lower Court. In such a case an appeal only lies if one would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court, see Order XLIII, rule 1 (u).

As the present suit is an unclassed one valued at Rs. 500, no second appeal would lie, and, therefore, prima facie no appeal lies from the order of remand.

It is, however, contended by Mr. Sukh

Dial that as the suit was instituted before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force, the course of appeal is regulated by the former Code which allowed an appeal from such an order in all cases. He relies upon the Full Bench ruling in Choudhri Narsing Das v. Lala Dholan Das (1).

Exactly the same point was argued before Williams, J., in Nand Lal v. Sohan Mal, Case No. 452 of 1905 decided on 8th March 1910, in which it was held, having reference to section 154 of the present Code, that no appeal lay, as the right of appeal had not accrued at the time when the Code came into force. I am inclined, as at present advised, to agree with this decision, but as the question is an important one and will affect a great many cases, I refer it to a Division Bench. The question referred is, whether in a case instituted, but not decided, before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force, the right of appeal is governed in all cases by the provisions of the former Code, being saved by section 6 of the General Clauses Act; or whether, having regard to section 154 of the present Code, section 6 of the General Clauses Act does not apply and the right of appeal is governed by the Code?"

The suit, out of which the present appeal has arisen, was brought on the 19th December 1907, by the plaintiff for pre-emption in respect of the house in dispute, on the ground that the transfer of it by way of mortgage by defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 1 by the registered deed, dated the 21st December 1906, was a colourable transaction, the real intention of the parties being to effect a sale of the house in the guise of a mortgage. The parties joined issue on the question whether the transaction was one of mortgage or of sale; and the Munsif decided on the 20th December 1908, that the transaction was what it purported to be, namely, a mortgage, and on that ground, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

On appeal, the learned Divisional Judge held, differing from the Munsif, that the transfer in dispute was really a sale and not a mortgage, and reversing the decree of the Munsif, he remanded the case to his Court by order dated the 22nd April 1909, for decision on the merits.

It is from the Divisional Judge's order of remand, dated the 22nd April 1909, that the present appeal has been preferred to this Court; and it is conceded that an appeal would only lie from the order in question if it were regulated by the provisions of the old Code of Civil Procedure and not by Order XLIII, rule 1 (u) of the new Code. In support of his contention that the new Code does not govern the present appeal, Mr. Sukh Dial has cited, in addition to section 6 of the General Clauses Act X of 1897, and Chowdhri Narsing Das v Lala Dholan Das (1), on which he relied before the learned Judge in Chambers, a recent decision of the Madras High Court, Kalingi Hebbara v. Narasimha Hebbara (2). In that case, it was held that where a person had filed an appeal under the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which gave him a right of second appeal if the decision went against him, the passing of the new Code of 1908, which did not give a right of second appeal in a similar case, did not take away the appellant's right of second appeal. With reference to the contention that section 154 of the new Code had, by necessary intendment, deprived the appellant of the right of second appeal which had not accrued to him at the commencement of that Code, the learned Judges observed that the words "present right of appeal" as used in the said section did not mean anything more than that no right of appeal which has been vested in a litigant shall be affected by the present Code.

We have given our very best consideration to the arguments of Mr. Sukh Dial and to the reasoning on which the decision of the Madras High Court is based, but with all due respect to the learned Judges of that Court, we think that they have not placed a right construction on section 154 of the new Code, and we are not, therefore, prepared to follow their ruling. The general principle which regulates the question whether a repealing statute deprives a litigant of a right of appeal, which he enjoyed under the statute which has been repealed, is authoritatively stated in the Full Bench decision of this Court, in Chowdhri Narsing Das v. Lal Dholan Das (1), and in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Colonial Sugar Refining Company Limited v. Irving (3), which is cited in the Madras case above referred to. It may be taken as now settled that the right of appeal in a pending action is not a matter of procedure: and that the repeal of the Statute, which was in force at the time when the action was instituted and which regulated the course of appeal does not affect the right of appeal acquired or enjoyed under that Statute unless the repealing Statute, expressly or by necessary implication, takes away that right of appeal. This is the principle underlying section 6 of the General Clauses Act, as interpreted by the highest judicial authority in this country, the relevant words of which are as follows: "Where..... .....any Act of the Governor-General in Council.....made after the commencement of this Act, repeals any enactment hitherto made..... .....then, unless a different intenion appears, the repeal shall not .....

(c) affect any right, privilege..... .....acquired, accrued..... under any enactment so repealed; or (e) affect any investgation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege .....as aforesaid."

In the above section the words "unless a different intention appears" are of special importance, and with reference to those words, the question for decision in the present case is whether the intention of the Legislature, as expressed in section 154, read with Order XLIII, rule 1 (u) of the new Civil Procedure Code, was not to take away the right of appeal which the present appellant had under the provisions of section 562 of the old Code, which was in force when the suit was instituted, but which had not actually accrued to him at the time when the new Code came into operation, inasmuch as the order of remand, with reference to which the right of appeal is claimed, was not passed until after the 1st January 1909. In our opinion, the words "any present right of appeal" in section 154 of the new Code mean a right of appeal in esse and not in posse, a right of appeal which had actually come into existence and was capable of being exercised by the aggrieved party at the commencement of the new Code by reason of the decree or order appealed from having been passed before the 1st of January 1909. We venture to think that the learned Judges of the Madras High Court have not kept in veiw the full significance of the word "present" in the phrase "any present right of appeal" contained in the said section, as we are ourselves unble to understand how it could be said, without the language of the section being unduly strained, that the appellant before the Madras High Court or the appellant before us could reasonably claim that a present right of appeal had accrued to him at the commencement of the new Code in respect of an order which was not passed by the lower Appellate Court until long after that Code had come into force. Upon the view of the Madras High Court, the word "present" in section 154 is redundant, for it is not disputed by Mr. Sukh Dial that if that word were eliminated from the section, the dicision of the said High Court would have been exactly the same as it is now, and it seems to us that the learned Juges would then have expressed themselves with greater certainty as to the correctness of their opinion. They say in their judgment: "We confess the matter is by no means free from doubt"; and we are inclined to think that their doubt was due to the fact that the word "present" in the section in question rather indicated the intention of the Legislature only to save a right of appeal which could be exercised in præsenti at the commencement of the Code of 1908, and this could only be the case if the order appealed from was passed before January 1909. We would make our meaning clear by a simple illustration. Suppose, in the present case, the order of remand had been passed by the Divisional Judge, not on the 22nd April 1909, but on, say, the 15th December 1908; in other words, on some date before the new Code came into force. In that case, as soon as the Divisional Judge had passed his order of remand under section 562 of the old Civil Procedure Code, a present right to appeal from that order under section 588 (28) of the same Code would have accrued to the defendant at the commencement of the new Code, and under section 154 of that Code, the said right of appeal would have remained unaffected by the provisions of Order XLIII, rule 1 (u). In other words, notwithstanding the provisions of the new Code restricting the right of appeal from an order of remand, the defendant would have enjoyed an unqualified right to appeal from that order at any time within the prescribed period of limitation. As soon, however, as the new Code came into force, the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23, and Order XLIII, rule 1 (u), became applicable to all orders of remand passed after the commencement of that Code, and no present right of appeal could be said to have accrued to the aggrieved party at its commencement in respect of the orders so passed. We fully agree in the construction which Mr. Justice William had placed on section 154 of the new Code in Nand Lal v. Sohan Mal (Civil Appeal No. 452 of 1909) and we hold that the right of appeal in respect of the order of remand passed by the Divisional Judge on the 22nd April 1909, is governed by the new Code of Civil Procedure and not by the old Code.

There is yet another reason why an appeal does not lie from the order in question. That order was passed, as it could only be passed, under rule 23, Order XLI of the new Code, and not under section 562 of the old Code, which was no longer in existence at the time when the remand was made. If, then, the case was not remanded, as it obviously could not be remanded, under section 562 aforesaid, no appeal could be preferred under section 588 (28) of the old Code. Both section 5 8 and section 588 (28) of the Code of 1882 have been swept away by the new Code with the result that where after the commencement of the latter Code a case has to be remanded by an Appellate Court after reversal of the decree of the original Court, which has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point, the remand must be made under Order XLI, rule 23 of the present Code, and an appeal from the order of remand so made can only be preferred under Order XLIII, rule 1 (u), which allows an appeal only in cases where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court. The appeal before us is an appeal from an order passed under rule 23 of Order XLI of the new Code and must be treated as having been preferred under the above mentioned Order and rule; and it is somewhat difficult to see how it can be treated as an appeal under saction 588 (28) of the old Civil Procedure Code, which only allowed an appeal from an order under section 562 of that Code, under which the order of remand, which is now impugned, was never passed.

For the above reasons, our answer to the question referred to us by the learned Judge in Chambers is that the right of appeal in respect of the Divisional Judge's order of remand in this case is governed by the new Code, and we hold that no appeal lies from that order to the Court. The case will now be remitted to the Judge in Chambers for disposal.

Execution of decree—Sale—Application to set aside sale—Irregularities—Inadequacy of price—Value of property equal to decretal amount—Liability of judgment-debtor ceased on ground of limitation—Substantial injury—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90, Proviso.

In an application by a judgment-debtor to set aside a sale, it was found that there was a group of irregularities, that the price was inadequate, that this inadequacy was due to the irregularities, but that the value of the properties sold would not exceed the decretal amount and that the judgment-debtor's liability under the decree had ceased on the ground of limitation. It was contended on behalf of the decree-holder that no substantial injury was suffered by the judgment-debtor and that, therefore, the sale should not be set aside:

Held, that the irregularities occasioned a substantial injury to the applicant and the sale should be set aside.

JUDGMENT.

JENKINS, C. J.—This appeal from order arises out of proceedings in execution. The application which initiated the present proceedings was one under Order XXI, rule 90, to set aside a sale on the ground of irregularity. The case has been argued before us on the basis of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, which has been taken by both sides as a correct presentation of the facts, but it is maintained that the conclusion of law at which he arrived on those facts is erroneous. The facts found by the Subordinate Judge were succinctly and at the same time clearly placed before us by Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy in the course of his argument. His submission was that six separate facts were found: (1) that the notice required by rule 66 has not been served; (2) that the proclamation had not been published; (3) that an inadequate price was stated in the proclamation; (4) that an inadequate price was in fact realized; (5) that the value of the properties would not exceed the amount under the decree; and (6) that the defendant's liability under the decree had ceased. The position constituted by the first four of these facts, then, is this, that there was a group of irregularities; that there was an inadequacy of price, and, according to the concession made before us, that this inadequacy was to be attributed to irregularities. But it was argued, and argued with very considerable ingenuity, that the fifth and sixth findings of fact saved the position, because they brought into play the saving operation of the proviso to rule 90 That proviso is in these terms: "Provided that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud." It is said that there was no substantial injury, because, in the first place, the value of the property would not exceed the amount due under the decree, and secondly, because the defendant's liability had ceased. The conjoint operation of this, it is said, is such that it would be impossible to affirm that the applicant had sustained substantial injury. Ingenious as the argument is, I think it cannot be supported. A debtor is entitled to have those steps taken for which provision is made by the Code for the purpose of ensuring that his property will realize an adequate price and so enable him to pay off his debt in money or money's worth. It is no answer to him to say 'it is quite true there have been irregularities and a consequent inadequacy of price which has prevented you from paying off your debt in full, but you have the satisfaction of a shelter behind the statute of limitation.' That is not all that satisfaction an honest debtor desires and I do not think that the argument and the considerations involved in it are sufficient to enable a decree-holder and purchaser in a case like the present to say that substantial injury has not been suffered simply because further remedies may be barred by some technical rule of law.

I, therefore, feel bound to come to the conclusion on the first four findings of fact that there has been, as indeed it is conceded for the purposes of the argument before us, an inadequacy of price resulting from irregularities in the conduct of the sale and that this has occasioned a substantial injury to the applicant which has not been removed. I come to this conclusion not without some regret because the decree-holder purchaser was perfectly willing to allow the sale to be treated as one for a value that would enable the judgment-debtor to say that in fact the debt had been paid off in full. But the judgment debtor did not see his way to accepting this offer made by the decree-holder, and the result is that we must set aside the sale and, the case must go back to the lower Court where the proceedings in execution must be renewed.

The opposite party, respondents, must pay the costs in the Court below and in this appeal. We assess the hearing fee in this appeal at two gold mohurs.

Bengal Court of Wards Act (IX of 1879), ss. 10, 644. —Notice—Presumption—Non-presentation of claim to the Collector, effect of—Interest, loss of.

The Bengal Court of Wards Act, 1879, does not require a Collector to give notice to the creditors entered in any list, but it does require the issue of a general notice.

If the provisions of clauses (b) and (c) of section 644 of the Court of Wards Act are complied with in full and those of clause (a) are complied with partly, the Court may presume that all the notices required by the section were published.

If a creditor does not submit his claim after the publication of the notice under the Act, the creditor loses his interest from that date.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Benares.

Mr. A. E. Ryves (with him Mr. Ghulam Mujtaba), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal (with him the Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent, Gaya Prasad, for the recovery of Rs. 4,618-8 on the basis of a promissory-note said to have been made in his favour by Babu Ram Bahadur Singh, represented in this suit by the Court of Wards, Bengal, on the 11th of September 1906. First appeal No. 336 of 1910 arises out of a suit brought by the same person on three promissory-notes said to have been made in his favour by Ram Bahadur Singh on the 27th of December 1906, 29th of December 1906, and 31st of December 1906. Ram Bahadur Singh was, on his own application, under section 6 (e) of the Bengal Court of Wards Act, IX of 1879, declared to be a disqualified proprietor and his estate was taken under the charge of the Court of Wards in March 1907. Both the suits were tried together in the Court below and may be disposed of here by the same judgment. The Court of Wards pleaded that the notes were not made for consideration, and that the ward, Ram Bahadur Singh, had, after his estate was taken under the management of the Court of Wards, made the promissory-notes in favour of the respondent in pursuance of an arrangement that if the amounts of the notes were paid by the Court of Wards, those amounts would be divided between the respondent and the ward. The Court of Wards further pleaded that Ram Bahadur Singh had not mentioned these promissory-notes in the list of debts when his estate was taken under the charge of the Court of Wards, although the claims of other petty creditors were mentioned, that the respondent did not file particulars of his claim before the Collector of Monghyr notwithstanding the publication of a general notice under Bengal Act I of 1906, which amended the Bengal Court of Wards Act of 1879, and that, therefore, no suit could be maintained on the promissory-notes.

The Subordinate Judge fixed three issues; (1) Whether the notes were admissible in evidence; (2) whether the notes were made for consideration and whether they were ante-dated, and (3) whether the plaintiff was entitled to interest. The Subordinate Judge found that the notes were admissible in evidence, that they were made for the consideration mentioned therein and were made on the dates on which they purport to have been made, and that the respondent was entitled to interest. Accordingly, he decreed the claims.

The Court of Wards appeal. In this Court, they repeat the pleas taken in the Court below and suggest that the trial of the case was unsatisfactory and that this Court should order a further inquiry.

[On the question whether the promissory-notes were made on the dates on which they purport to have been made, their Lordships discussed the evidence and proceeded:]

In the face of the direct evidence of the respondent and the ward, we are unable to hold that the notes were ante-dated, and we affirm the decision of the Subordinate Judge that they were made for consideration and were made on the dates on which they purport to have been made.

The next question is, whether the suits are maintainable in view of the provisions of the Bengal Court of Wards Amendment Act No. I of 1906. By section 3 of that Act, several new sections were inserted after section 10 of the Court of Wards Act of 1879. The first of them, section 10A, provides that when the Court of Wards assumes charge of any person or property under section 7 or section 10, it shall publish in the manner provided in section 64A a notice calling upon all creditors, having claims against the ward or his moveable property, to submit the same in writing to the Court at a place to be named in the notice, within six months from the date of the publication of the notice, and every such claim not submitted to the Court shall, with certain exceptions which are not material in this case, cease to carry interest from the date of the expiry of the period aforesaid. Section 10B, sub-section (1), provides that every creditor, submitting his claim in compliance with the provisions of section 10A, shall submit with his written statement of claim full particulars thereof and shall, within such time as the Court may appoint, produce all documents which are in his possession, power or control, on which he relies to support his claim. Sub-section (3) of the same section provides that if any document, which to the knowledge of the creditor is in his possession, power or control, is not produced by him as is required by sub-section (1), the document will not be admissible in evidence against the ward in any suit brought by the creditor in respect of such claim. By section 10 of the Act of 1906, a new section, i.e., section 64A, was inserted in the Act of 1879 to the effect that any notice required to be published by the provisions of sub section (1) of section 10A shall be published,—

(a) In the English and in the vernacular official Gazettes;

(b) in at least three issues each of one English and one vernacular newspaper published in Calcutta;

(c) in two issues of a newspaper, (if any), published in the district or division in which the ward ordinarily resides or has last resided, and

(d) by posting such notice on the notice boards in the offices of the Collector and of the Judge of the district in which the place named in the notice is situate.

The Subordinate Judge seems to have misunderstood these provisions. He says that it was incumbent on the Collector to issue notices to the creditors whose names appeared in the list submitted by the ward, and that such creditors are required to produce the documents in their possession, and that the respondent was never served with any such notice. The Act does not require the Collector to give notice to the creditors entered in any list, but it does require the issue of a general notice. Counsel for the Court of Wards has produced in this Court with our permission a copy of the vernacular official Gazette, issues of Vernacluar and English newspapers published in Calcutta and two issues of a newspaper published in the Division in which the ward resided, which show that the provisions of clauses (b) and (c) of section 64A were complied with in full and those of clause (a) were partly complied with. There is no evidence, and it would probably be difficult to produce evidence at this time, that notices were affixed to the notice board in the offices of the Collector and Judge of the district. In view of the notices to which we have already referred, and the evidence of the Special Manager and in view of the fact that due publication of the notices was not denied in the Court below, we may fairly presume that all the notices required by section 64A were published as required by that section.

It is contended by Pandit Sunder Lal, on behalf of the respondent, that when a creditor does not submit a claim at all, the penal provisions of sub-section (3) of section 10B of the Act are not applicable, and that the only penalty, which such a creditor incurs, is the loss of interest under sub-section (2) of section 10A of the Act. It may be doubted if this result was intended by the framers of the Act, but sub section (3) of section 10B provides that if a document is not produced as required by sub-section (1), the document shall not be admissible in evidence thereafter. Sub section (1) does not oblige the creditor to produce his documents with his claim. He is required to produce his documents within such time as the Court may appoint. There is nothing to show that the Collector appointed any time for any of the creditors of the ward to produce their documents and he could not require the respondent to produce his documents when he was not aware that the respondent had a claim against the ward. It seems to us that the only penalty which the respondent has incurred by not presenting his claim to the Collector is the loss of interest on the promissory-notes after a certain date.

With reference to the suggestion that the case should go back for further inquiry, we need only say that we have examined the record and find that ample time was given to the Court of Wards for the production of evidence. The date fixed for filing the written statement in each case was altered from time to time, and ultimately the 1st of March 1910, was fixed for the filing of the written statements and the 10th March was fixed for the settlement of issues. On the latter date, the Court of Wards presented a petition in which they asked for further time for the production of evidence, and the Court fixed the 5th May 1910. It is evident that the Court of Wards knew that they had to produce evidence on the 5th of May. They did produce some evidence on that date and a few days before that date they applied for the issue of commissions which were refused on the ground that the evidence to be taken would be irrelevant, and on the 5th of May, the Court of Wards did not ask for any further adjournment. It is impossible to say that they were taken by surprise or that they had not sufficient time to produce evidence. The proceedings in the Court below were certainly somewhat summary, but no definite ground has been made out on which we could order a re-trial, and as we have said above, no objection seems to have been taken to the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge. The result is that we hold that the claim for the principal sums of the promissory-notes must be decreed, and we must allow interest in both the cases from the date of the promissory-notes up to the 2nd of October, 1907, that is, the date on which the six months' notice under section 10 expired. The decrees of the Court below are modified accordingly. The parties will pay and receive costs in proportion to failure and success.

In an application for execution of a mortgage decree, the date of the order absolute is to be considered as the date of the decree for the purpose of calculating the period of limitation.

Civil Miscellaneous second appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore, in A. S. No. 332 of 1909, preferred against the order of the District Munsif of Tanuku, in E. P. No. 332 of 1909 (O. S. No. 52 of 1905), dated 22nd June 1909.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are sufficiently clear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

This appeal arose out of an order passed by the District Munsif of Tanuku in the execution petition presented by the plaintiff requesting the Court to pass orders for the sale of the mortgaged property.

2. The defendants contended that the application was barred inasmuch as the notice issued on Execution Petition No. 115 of 1906 was a notice under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act and not one under section 248 of the old Civil Procedure Code.

3. The District Munsif, upholding the contention of the defendants, dismissed the application. Hence this application.

4. The only point arising for determination in this appeal is whether the application of the appellant was barred or not. The Execution Application No. 115 of 1903, under section 253 of the old Code and section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, was filed on 3rd February 1906. On 14th idem, notice was ordered to show cause why the decree should not be made absolute. It was served on the defendants on 2nd of April 1903 and the decree was made absolute on 19th idem.

5. But no notice under section 248 of the old Civil Procedure Code was issued at any time on the last execution application, Execution Petition No. 115 of 1906. Therefore, the mere issue of a notice under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot help the plaintiff nor can it be said that the order making the decree absolute was passed in execution proceedings.

6. It was next contended that the new Limitation Act applied to the present case and that an execution application to issue notice to show cause why a decree should not be made absolute was in effect an application for the issue of notice to show cause why it should not be executed and, therefore, under Article 182, clause 6, it saved limitation. But I see no force in this contention. The order in question was passed on 14th March 1906, when the old Code was in force and the application is clearly time-barred.

7. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. B. Sitaram Row, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After the decision of the Privy Council in Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (1), we think we are bound to hold that the date of the order absolute is to be considered as the date of the decree for the purpose of calculating the period of limitation in the case of application for execution of the decree. The present application is, therefore, within time, and we set aside the order of the Court below and direct the Court of first instance to deal with the application for execution according to law.

The appellant will have his costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

RAM SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

LALTA PRASAD—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 159, 160—Suit for arrears of revenue payable or paid by lambardar—Limitation.

Section 159 of the Agra Tenancy Act contemplates a suit by a lambardar for arrears of revenue payable to the Government through the lambardar by a co-sharer, whether such revenue has actually been paid or not. The limitation for such a suit is three years from the date when the revenue became payable. Section 160 contemplates a case where arrears of revenue have actually been paid by one co-sharer for another, whether the co-sharer paying the revenue be a lambardar or not. The limitation under this section runs from the date of actual payment.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Bareilly.

Mr. Sital Prashad Ghose, for the Appellant.

Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I think the conclusion at which the Courts below have arrived is correct. The plaintiff is the lambardar and he brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, against the defendant, who is a co-sharer, to recover arrears of revenue paid by the plaintiff for the defendant. The amount of the revenue was actually paid on the 3rd of July 1906. The suit was brought on the 30th of June 1909. The question is whether the claim is time barred. The decision of this question depends on whether the suit was in reality a suit under section 159 of the Agra Tenancy Act or under section 160 of that Act. Section 159 contemplates a suit by a lambardar for arrears of revenue payable to the Government through the lambardar by a co-sharer, whether such revenue has actually been paid or not. The limitation for such a suit is three years from the date when the revenue became payable. Section 160 contemplates a case where arrears of revenue have actually been paid by one co-sharer for another. The two sections make a distinction between revenue which is payable and revenue which has actually been paid. Where a person who has paid the revenue happens to be a co-sharer, he can sue his co-sharer, for whom he has paid the revenue, within three years of the date of payment. If he happens to be the lambardar, that would, in my opinion, not take the case out of the category of those contemplated by section 160. As I have already said, where the lambardar sues to recover arrears of revenue payable by a co-sharer, the suit is one under section 159, and such a suit must be brought within three years from the date when the arrears became payable. In the present case, the arrears were actually paid. Therefore, this was in reality a suit under section 160 and was well within limitation. This is the only point argued. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Musammat BHAGI, WIDOW OF JIWAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

MUHAMMAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), s. 12(a)—Widow's right to pre-empt as heir—Widow, whether heir under Customary Law.

Where a widow has a right to succeed collaterally, she has a right to pre-empt under section 12 (a) of the Pre-emption Act. Under section 12*(a)*, the right of pre-emption is not confined to agnates alone.

Obiter—Under the Customary Law, as under the Hindu Law, a widow is an heir of her husband.

Sher Muhammad v. Phula, 9 P. R. 1899, referred to.

Second appeal from the order of the Divisional Judge, Jhelum Division, dated the 8th August 1910, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st class, Jhelum, dated the 15th June 1907, dismissing plaintiff's claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nanak Chand and Devi Dyal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute is between two rival pre-emptors, Musammat Bhagu, widow of Jiwan, (now appellant), and Muhammad (now respondent). The vendor is Musammat Jawai, widow of Raja. It may be noted that Jiwan (appellant's husband) is a nearer agnate of Raja than Muhammad is. Therefore, if it be held that a widow is entitled to succeed collaterally in this particular tribe, and that a widow entitled to succeed to possession on an ordinary widow's life-tenure is to be reckoned as included in the persons "entitled to inherit" [see section 12 (a) of the Pre-emption Act], the preference must be given to Musammat Bhagu.

The first Court dismissed Musammat Bhagu's claim, and gave Muhammad a decree, holding that Musammat Bhagu had failed to prove that in this tribe widows succeed collaterally. The learned Divisional Judge remanded for further inquiry on two issues, one of which was, whether, according to the custom of the tribe, Musammat Bhagu could succeed collaterally. But later on, the Divisional Judge dismissed Musammat Bhagu's appeal without deciding the above issue, holding that the phrase in section 12 (a) "persons entitled to inherit" only referred to persons entitled to inherit as full owners, and not to persons succeeding to a limited interest such as widows and daughters.

Both Courts held that Muhammad was not estopped by confession from contesting Musammat Bhagu's claim and on this part of the case, I agree with the lower Courts. It is true that in the statement of Muhammad recorded by the first Court, we find the sentence, "my right is not greater than Musammat Bhagu's", but seeing that in the written pleas, Muhammad had clearly stated that a woman had no rights of pre-emption under section 12 (a), I can only conclude that what he meant was, "if Musammat Bhagu has a right to pre-empt, I cannot say that my right is superior to hers".

As to the question whether a widow entitled to succeed to a widow's life-tenure is a person "entitled to inherit" within the meaning of section 12 (a) of the Pre-emption Act, it is urged on appellant's behalf that there is no difference in such cases between inheriting and succeeding. In Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th Edition, para 605, I find it stated that the typical form of estate inherited from a male is the widow's estate. The para. goes on to state that it is wholly incorrect to speak of a widow's estate as one for life only; that Hindu Law measures estates not by duration but by use, and that though restrictions upon the use of an estate inherited by a woman are different in degree to those which limit the powers of a male holder, they are similar in kind; that the distinctive feature of the estate is that at the widow's death, the land reverts to the heirs of the last male owner, as the widow never becomes a fresh stock of descent. In the following paragraphs too, I find frequent passages speaking of a widow as inheriting from her husband; in fact the Chapter is headed "Woman's Estate in property inherited from males"

But for the respondent it is urged that according to Customary Law, a widow is not an heir but only holds the estate in lieu of maintenance. But I fail entirely to see that there is any difference between Customary Law and Hindu Law so far as the present case is concerned. In Sher Muhammad v. Phula (1), I find it stated by authority, for which I have high respect, that: "There are strong analogies between the estate of a widow under Customary Law and her estate under Hindu Law; under both laws, she holds for life for the purpose of maintenance with certain powers of disposition necessarily incident to her position" (vide page 51). And later on in the same paragraph, I find a remark to the effect that a widow can surrender her estate but can only do so to the next heir, which distinctly refers to the widow as the first heir to her husband. There seems to me no reason to hold that either under Hindu or Customary Law, a widow is not an heir, and in cases where a widow succeeds collaterally, I take it that the theory is that she inherits from her husband's collateral as heir of her husband.

It has also been argued on respondent's behalf that the intention of the Legislature was to confine the right of pre-emption to agnates. But in some parts of section 12, agnates are specifically referred to, e. g., section 12 (b) secondly, and if the intention was to confine the right of pre emption under section 12 (a) to agnates alone, it would have been quite easy to say so. On this point, Civil Appeal No. 1268 of 1907 may also be referred to. I hold, therefore, that if the appellant has a right to succeed collaterally, she has a right to pre empt under section 12 (a). And if she has a right to pre-empt under section 12 (a), her right is obviously superior to that of Muhammad. But has she a right to succeed collaterally? That is the real point for inquiry in this case, the other points being merely legal; on this point, no decision has been arrived at by the learned Divisional Judge. The appellant's Counsel wishes me to decide the point, urging that there is sufficient material on the record, but respondents' Counsel asks for a remand, and though I undoubtedly have the power to decide the point, I think it more in accordance with the usual practice of this Court in such cases to remand the case.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the decision of the learned Divisional Judge, I remand the case under Order XLI, rule, 23 for decision in due course on the merits. The decision will, of course, rest on the answer to the question whether in this particular tribe a widow succeeds collaterally.

Stamp on appeal to be refunded. Other costs of appeal to follow the event.

Appeal allowed.

COURT ORDER No. 20 OF 1912.

June 10, 1912.

BHIKARI SUKUL AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—PETITIONERS

Mohant GADADHAR RAMANUJ DAS—DECREE-HOLDER—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Rent Act (X of 1859), s. 109, scope of—Single execution creditor and single judgment-debtor—Case of several judgment-debtors—Execution against some of judgment-debtors—Proceeding against immoveable property of some judgment-debtors whose moveables and persons also were proceeded against, though no proceeding taken against other judgment-debtors—Process against moveables on first execution—Proceedings against immoveable property subsequently, though moveables came into judgment-debtor's possession in the meantime—Sale of immoveable property—Onus of proof—Decree to be self-contained—Execution as decree stands.

Section 109 of the Bengal Rent Act, 1859, contemplates the case of a single execution-creditor and a single judgment-debtor; it does not specifically refer to the case of a joint and several decree against a number of judgment-debtors, in which case the decree-holder is at liberty to take out execution against any or as many of the judgment-debtors as he may choose. And the requirements of the section are satisfied if, in so far as an individual judgment-debtor is concerned, proceedings have been taken against his person or moveable property before an attempt is made to reach his immoveable property; he has no concern with his fellow judgment-debtors against whom the decree-holder may not proceed at all at his choice. In other words, execution can be taken out of a decree for money under the Bengal Rent Act, 1859, not being money due as arrears of rent of a saleable under-tenure, against the immoveable property of some of the judgment-debtors, whose moveable property and person had been proceeded against previously, although the moveables belonging to the other judgment-debtors have not yet been sold.

Process against moveable property must be taken upon the first application for execution of such a decree; and after moveable property has been exhausted, the decree-holder is free to proceed against immoveable property upon succeeding applications for execution, notwithstanding that other moveable property has come into the possession of the judgment-debtor in the meantime.

An application against the person of the judgment-debtor is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of an application for execution against immoveable property.

Deanutoollah v. Nawab Nazim Sidhee Nazir Ali Khan, 10 W. R. 341, 1 B. L. R. 216, referred to.

It is not the true meaning of section 109 that if an application has been made for execution against the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, it can be defeated by him only if he proves that he has moveable property within the district sufficient for the complete satisfaction of the judgment-debt. The decree-holder is not free to ignore the moveable property, even upon the first application for execution although its value is not sufficient for the full satisfaction of his decree.

A decree must be self-contained and must be executed as it stands.

Grish Chunder v. Shoshi Shikhareswar, 27 I. A. 110; 27 C. 951, Chhoti Narain Singh v. Rimeswar Kuar, 6 C. W. N. 796, Jai Gobind v. Patesri Narain, A. W. N. (1907) 286, 4 A. L. J. 765, relied upon.

In a suit it was ordered that a decree be passed in accordance with the solenamah filed by the parties, but the provision in the solenamah, as to the payment of interest in the event of default, was not incorporated in the decree:

Held, that the decree-holder was not entitled to take out execution of interest under the decree as it stood, but he might apply for amendment of the decree.

Application against the order of the Deputy Collector, Bhadrak, dated December 1st 1911.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Khetra Mohan Sen, for the Petitioners.

Babus Provas Chandra Mitter and Sushil Madhab Mallik, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited by the petitioners to set aside an order made in execution of a decree for money obtained against them by the opposite party, on the 30th May 1899, under the Bengal Rent Act, (X of 1859). The decree-holder has made successive applications, for execution and realised various sums from time to time. In the application whereby the present proceedings were instituted on the 20th May 1911, the decree holder prayed for sale of the moveable properties of the judgment-debtors, for the arrest of their persons, and, if the decree was not satisfied by these means, for the sale of their immoveable properties. The judgment-debtors took exception to the application on two grounds, first, that it was not maintainable under section 109 of the Bengal Rent Act, 1859; and secondly, that the claim for interest was not sustainable. The Court below has overruled these objections and directed execution to proceed. In this Court, the objections mentioned have been re-iterated.

In support of the first objection, it has been urged, first, that no execution can be taken out against the immoveable properties of some of the judgment-debtors as the moveables belonging to the other judgment-debtors have not yet been sold; and, secondly, that execution cannot be sought against the immoveable properties, when, on the face of the application, the decree-holder asserts that there are moveables against which he wishes to proceed. In support of the second objection that the claim for interest is not sustainable, reference has been made to the terms of the decree, which, although referring to a petition of compromise whereon it is based, specifically allows the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 3,500 and the costs of the litigation.

In so far as the first branch of the first ground is concerned, it is plainly unsubstantial. Section 109 of the Bengal Rent Act, 1859, provides that in the execution of any decree for the payment of money under the Act, not being money due as arrears of rent of a saleable under-tenure, if satisfaction of the judgment cannot be obtained by execution against the person or moveable property of the debtor within the district in which the suit was instituted, the judgment-creditor may apply for execution against any immoveable property belonging to such debtor. This section, it will be observed, clearly contemplates the case of a single execution creditor and a single judgment-debtor; it does not specifically refer to the case of a joint and several decree against a number of judgment-debtors. In the present case, the decree under execution is a joint and several decree, and the decree holder is at liberty to take out execution against any or as many of the judgment-debtors as he may choose. He has apparently not taken out execution against two of the judgment-debtors and has proceeded against the remaining persons. It has been argued, on behalf of the petitioners, that inasmuch as no proceedings have been taken either against the persons or the moveable properties of these two judgment-debtors, the decree-holder is not entitled to apply for execution against the immoveable properties of the other judgment-debtors, although, so far as the latter are concerned, their moveable properties have been already exhausted. In our opinion, this contention is ingenious but unsound. The section obviously contemplates that an application for execution against the immoveable property of a judgment debtor is not to be made till proceedings have been taken against his person or moveable property. The requirements of the law are satisfied, if, in so far as an individual judgment-debtor is concerned, proceedings have been taken against his person or moveable property before an attempt is made to reach his immoveable property; he has no concern with his fellow judgment-debtors, and, he cannot indirectly restrict the right of the execution-creditor to proceed at his choice against one or some only of the entire body of judgment-debtors. The first branch of the first contention, therefore, cannot be sustained.

In so far as the second branch of the first ground is concerned, it has been argued that before execution can be applied for against immoveable property belonging to the judgment debtor, it must be shown that his moveable properties have been exhausted or that proceedings have been taken against his person; in other words, that an application for execution against immoveable property cannot at all be received and entertained so long as there is any moveable property against which execution may possibly be taken out. This contention is, in our opinion, too broadly formulated. Even if it be assumed that in the initial application for execution, a prayer for process against immoveable property cannot be coupled with a prayer for process against moveable property, the position cannot be maintained in respect of subsequent applications made after the moveable properties have been exhausted on a previous application and proceedings have been taken against immoveable properties. Once the decree-holder has reached the stage when he becomes entitled to proceed against immoveable property, upon a subsequent application for execution, he is free to proceed against immoveable properties, and it is not obligatory upon him to seek out and proceed against moveable properties, such for instance, as may have come into the possession of the judgment-debtor in the interval. Consequently, it is open to him to join in such subsequent application a prayer for process against moveable properties with a prayer for process against immoveable properties. In the case before us, it is not disputed, that, on a previous application for execution, proceedings were taken by the decree-holder against immoveable property, apparently without objection on the part of the judgment-debtors; it is, consequently, open to him to proceed against immoveable properties on the basis of the present application. We may add that, in this connection, it was suggested, though somewhat faintly, that an application against the person is a condition precedent to the maintenance of an application for execution against immoveable property. There is no substance, however, in this contention. The decree-holder is not anxious to arrest the judgment-debtors; he does not believe that the judgment-debt is likely to be satisfied by the arrest of the judgment-debtors; nor, so far as we can gather, are the judgment-debtors themselves anxious to be arrested at the instance of the decree-holder. We must, consequently, hold that the application, as framed, is maintainable under section 109. The view we take is supported by the observations of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J , in the case of Deanutoollah v. Nawab Nazim Sidhee Nazir Ali Khan (1), where the learned Chief Justice explained the object of section 109. Section 109 shows clearly that, as a general rule, process of execution for a money-decree under the Bengal Rent Act, 1859, is not to be levied in the first instance by attachment of immoveable property; the Legislature seems to have been anxious to guard against the sale of immoveable property in execution of decrees of the Revenue Courts under that Act, until the moveable property should have been first exhausted. The second branch of the first contention must, consequently, fail. Before we proceed to deal with the second ground, we may refer briefly to two extreme contentions, one by the decree-holder, another by the judgment-debtor,—neither of which can be supported It was argued on behalf of the decree-holder, that if an application has been made for execution against the immoveable property of the judgment debtor, it can be defeated by him only if he proves that he has moveable property within the district sufficient for the complete satisfaction of the judgment-debt. That is clearly not the true meaning of section 109. As Sir Barnes Peacock puts it, the decree-holder is bound to proceed against the moveable property and exhaust it in the first instance, even though the proceeds may not be sufficient to satisfy the judgment-debt. It is only after the moveable property has been exhausted, that execution can be taken out against immoveable property for the recovery of the balance. The suggestion of the decree holder that he is free to ignore the moveable property, even upon the first application for execution, if its value is not sufficient for the full satisfaction of his decree, is wholly groundless. Equally unfounded is the argument put forward at one stage by the judgment-debtor that even in the case of successive applications for execution, it is incumbent on the decree-holder at every stage to seek out and proceed against the moveable properties of the judgment debtor before he can attach the immoveable properties. This argument is clearly unsustainable. If the contention were to prevail, the inference would follow that he is bound to proceed not only against moveable properties each time he applies but also against the person of the judgment-debtors on every successive application. This, however, he is not competent to do in view of the provisions of section 94 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act, 1859. Consequently, process against moveable property must be taken upon the first application for execution: and after the moveable property has been exhausted, the decree-holder is free to proceed against immoveable property upon succeeding applications for execution, notwithstanding that other moveable property may have come into the possession of the judgment debtor in the meantime.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it has been pointed out that the decree was made by consent of parties and was based on a petition of compromise. The petition stated that the plaintiff was entitled to recover Rs. 3,500, that the sum would be paid in two equal instalments on the 15th October 1899 and the 10th February 1900, and that if the sum was not so paid, interest would run at the prescribed rate. When the decree, however, came to be drawn up, it was ordered that, in accordance with the solenamah, a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 3,500 and for costs of the suit. The provision as to the payment of interest in the event of default was not incorporated in the decree. The reason possibly was that as the agreement for payment of interest was contingent upon future default on the part of the judgment-debtors, it was thought unnecessary to incorporate the terms in the decree. If so, it was clearly a mistake. The decree must be self-contained and must be executed as it stands. Ghrish Chunder v. Soshi Shikhareswar Roy(2), Chhoti Narain Singh v. Musammat Rameswar Koer (3); Jai Gobind v. Patesari Narain (4). There is no question that under the decree, as it stands, the decree-holder is not entitled to take out execution for interest. It will be open, however, to the decree-holder to consider whether he should apply to the Court, which made the decree, for amendment thereof, and to obtain a decree in accordance with the terms of the compromise. All that we now decide is that, under the decree as it stands, the claim for interest cannot be sustained. The second objection must, consequently, prevail.

The result is that the application is granted in part. The order of the Court below, in so far as it allows the decree-holder to realise interest, is set aside, but is confirmed in other respects. As there are no merits in the application and as the substantial ground has failed, while the ground whereupon the petitioners have succeeded in part is of an entirely technical character, they must pay the costs of the opposite party who have appeared on notice. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

Application partly granted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 38, 39, 41—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 223—Transmission of decree for execution—Simultaneous or concurrent execution by Court which passed decree and to which it is sent for execution—Application to latter Court for execution—Dismissal of petition—Subsequent application to Court which passed decree—Application to 'proper Court'—Limitation.

MAHARAJA OF BOBBILI v. NARASARAJU PEDA.

The Court which passed a decree can order concurrent execution of it simultaneously with execution proceedings initiated by the Court to which it has been sent for execution, but such execution should be allowed only in exceptional circumstances. It is only when such execution is necessary in the interests of the decree-holder, and when it can be carried on without hardship to the judgment-debtor, that it ought to be allowed by the Court which passed the decree.

Saroda Prosad Mullick v. Luchmeeput Singh Doogur, 14 M. I. A. 529 at p. 540; 17 W. R 289; 10 B. L. R. 214 and Kristo Kishore Dutt v. Rup Lal Das, 8 C. 687; 10 C. L. R. 609, referred to.

When a decree is transferred by the Court which passed it to another Court for execution, and an application made to the latter Court is dismissed, a subsequent application for execution made to the Court which passed the decree, while the result of execution has not been certified by the Court to which it was sent for execution, is not an application made to the 'proper Court,' unless there is an order permitting simultaneous execution along with execution proceedings initiated in the Court to which the decree was sent for execution.

Kristo Kishore Dutt v. Roop Lall Dass, 8 C. 687, 10 C. L. R. 609, distinguished.

Plaintiff obtained a decree in the District Court of Vizagapatam. It was sent for execution to the Parvatipur Munsif's Court on 5th October 1904. There the petition for execution was dismissed by the Munsif on 10th March 1905. On 13th December 1907, plaintiff applied for execution to the District Court of Vizagapatam, which returned the petition for amendment under section 235, Civil Procedure Code, 1882. The petition was represented without amendment and the District Court simply recorded it. On 21st October 1910, the decree-holder applied to the District Court for execution:

Held, (1) that the application, of 13th October 1907, was a step-in-aid of execution which saved limitation;

Pachiappa Achari v. Poojali Seenan, 28 M. 557, followed.

(2) that the application, dated 13th October 1907, was not made to the 'proper Court' as the District Munsif's Court of Parvatipur had seisin of the execution proceedings.

JUDGMENT.

SANKARAN NAIR, J.—The question is whether the plaintiff's application is barred by limitation. The plaintiff obtained a decree in O.S. No. 11 of 1903 on the file of the District Court of Vizagapatam. The decree was transferred to the District Munsif's Court of Paravatipur for execution on the 5th October 1904. The decree-holders got certain immoveable properties attached, but the petition was dismissed on the 10th of March 1905 and no further steps were taken in the District Munsif's Court. The decree-holder then applied to the District Court at Vizagapatam on the 13th December 1907 for the sale of the property attached by the District Munsif. The petition was returned for amendment under section 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. It was re-presented without amendment and was then recorded without being registered. The decree-holder makes this present application on the 21st April 1910 for notice and for the realisation of the amount by sale of the properties already attached. The question whether this present application is barred by limitation depends on the question whether the application of the 13th December 1907 to the District Court was in accordance with law and to the proper Court.

The application of the 13th of December 1907 prayed for notice under section 248 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and the decision of the District Judge that such application must be treated as a step-in-aid of execution is in accordance with the decision in Pachiappa Achari v. Poojali Seenan(1). The only question that remains, therefore, for decision, is, whether the application is made to the 'proper Court.' The District Judge decides that the proper Court to which the application should have been made was the District Munsif's Court of Parvatipur, to which the decree had been transferred for execution and that, therefore, the present application is barred. Under section 223 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 (section 41 of the present Code), the Munsif's Court of Parvatipur, to which the decree was sent for execution, has to certify to the District Court of Vizagapatam the fact of such execution or, if the Munsif's Court fails to execute the decree, the circumstances attending such failure. Till that is done, the Munsif's Court retains its jurisdiction to execute the decree; See Abda Begam v. Muzaffar Husain Khan (2).

There is no doubt, therefore, that the Munsif's Court had jurisdiction to entertain a similar application for sale though that Court had dismissed the application for execution in 1905. This was not denied in argument before us.

The next question is, whether that is the only Court to which this application could be made or, had the District Court also jurisdiction to order the sale of the property. Under section 38 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 (section 223 of the Code of Act XIV of 1882), the decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or to which it is sent for execution. This in itself does not authorise the District Court of Vizagapatam, which passed the decree, to execute it after it had been sent for execution to the Munsif's Court of Parvatipur. Section 39 states the condition under which a decree may be sent to another Court for execution. Under clause (c), it may be sent for execution to another Court if the Court directs the sale or delivery of immoveable property situated outside the limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, which passed the decree, and, presumably, within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which it is sent for execution. The reason for the transfer of this case is plain enough. By clause (a), it may also be sent to another Court if the judgment-debtor resides there or carries on business or works for gain within the limits of the jurisdiction of that Court. Under clause (b), if the judgment-debtor has no property within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy the decree and has property within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, to which it is sent, the decree may be sent to that Court for execution. Under clause (d) of section 39, if the Court which passed the decree considers for reasons, which shall be recorded in writing, that the decree should be executed by another Court, then also the decree may be sent to another Court for execution. This section does not say that, after the decree has been sent to another Court for execution, the Court passing the decree may not simultaneously carry on execution proceedings but it is plain enough that section 39 intends that it is only for special reasons that the decree should be sent to another Court for execution. Thus, if there is sufficient property by the sale of which the debt may be realised ordinarily, no Court would be justified in sending the decree to another Court for execution. At the same time, it is quite possible that concurrent execution may be necessary. If, for instance, a property within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree is comparatively not of much value and the property within the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree is sent is also not comparatively of much value, then there can be no injustice to the judgment-debtor in carrying on execution proceedings in both the Courts. If the decrees be sent for execution to two or more Courts to be executed at the same time and the amounts realised in the aggregate may be much higher than the judgment-debt, it would manifestly be an injustice to the judgment-debtor to allow the execution proceedings to go on at the same time. Furthermore, if the full amount of the decree is realised by two or three Courts it is difficult to see how matters can be worked out, which of the sales is to be held valid and on what grounds and what interest would be acquired by the purchasers at those sales. It is true the judgment-debtor may apply for stay of execution proceedings under Order XXI, rule 26, but he is not entitled to get the execution proceedings stayed. While, therefore, these sections may not show that concurrent execution cannot be carried on, they certainly show that such execution should be allowed only in exceptional circumstances. It is only when such execution is necessary in the interests of the decree-holder and when it can be carried on without hardship to the judgment-debtor, that it ought to be allowed by the Court which passed the decree. The other provisions show that such Court apparently retains control over the execution proceedings; when the decree has to be executed against the representative of the judgment-debtor, then, according to section 50, the application has to be made to that Court which passed the decree; when a decree has to be executed at the instance of the assignee of the decree-holder, then also the application has to be made under Order XXI, rule 16, to the same Court. Then, again, power is given to such Court to stay the execution proceedings in the Court to which the decree is sent for execution. When, therefore, concurrent execution is necessary, the Court which passed the decree may order it; but when such order is passed and permission is given to the decree-holder to execute the decree simultaneously in more than one Court, he is not entitled to carry on execution proceedings at the same time. The decision seems to be one of this view. In Saroda Prosid Mullick v. Luchmeeput Singh Doogur (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it was open to a Court to send the decree for execution to three Courts at the same time. This decision was passed under the Civil Procedure Code, 1859. It may be pointed out that, under section 286 of that Code, the Court was bound to transmit the decree for execution to another Court unless there be special reasons to the contrary. Under the Codes of 1882 and of 1908, it is optional with the Court to send it to another Court. Under section 234 of the Code of 1859, their Lordships pointed out that when the decree is sent for execution to another Court, conditions may have to be imposed upon the decree-holder. This also shows the necessity of the exercise of judicial discretion. In the case of Kristo Kishore Dutt v. Roop Lall Doss (4) also, there was an order by the Court which passed the decree for simultaneous execution. These decisions are authorities for the proposition that decree may be executed simultaneously in more than one Court, but in all these cases, there were orders allowing such execution, and the considerations that I have already set out would seem to indicate the necessity of an order, permitting concurrent execution before such execution proceedings can be carried out. In the present case after the decree was transferred for execution to the Paravatipur Munsif's Court, that Court had seisin of the execution proceedings and it was bound to carry them on until execution was obtained or further execution became impossible. There was no order of the District Court of Vizagapatam staying execution in that Court for the purpose of executing the decree in the Vizagapatam Court itself. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Judge is right in holding that the application for sale in 1907 should have been made to the Parvatipur Munsif's Court and that the District Court was not, therefore, the proper Court to entertain such an application. The present application, therefore, is barred. I would confirm the order of the District Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

AYLING, J.—I agree.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Mirzapur, dated 4th July 1911.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Choudhri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kalindi Prashad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the plaintiff Bidesi, sued to recover possession of two plots of land, forming part of a fixed-rate tenancy and with a total area of 1 bigha, 5 biswas. His plaint appears to admit that the land in dispute formed part of a larger holding with a total area of 4 bighas, 8 biswas, which had formerly stood in the name of Sheopal, father of the defendant Nidhai. The plaintiff says, in the first place, that he is a son of Jangi, brother of Sheopal, and that in Sheopal's life-time, the entire holding belonged to, and was cultivated by, all members of the family jointly. On the death of Sheopal, it is quite clear that there was a dispute between the parties which took the form of a contested application for mutation of names before a Revenue Court. This dispute was settled by a compromise, dated March 16th, 1909, to which the plaintiff Bidesi, and the defendant Nidhai, were parties. The petition of compromise is somewhat curiously worded, and contains certain recitals of fact for which apparently Nidhai alone is responsible and other recitals of fact in which both parties purported to join. The gist of the petition, however, is quite clear. The parties agreed to divide the holding between them, Bidesi is to take the two plots now in dispute with an area of 1 bigha, 5 biswas, and Nidhai is to take the remaining 3 bighas, 3 biswas of the holding. Each is to be separately liable for the rent of the portion of the holding assigned to him. The learned District Judge sent for the record of the mutation proceedings and satisfied himself that the order of the Revenue Court was passed in accordance with the terms of the petition of compromise. There is, therefore, a fair presumption that the terms of the compromise were for the time being actually carried into effect. The written statement filed by the defendant Nidhai is somewhat cautiously worded. He does not deny the relationship claimed by the plaintiff, and must be taken to have admitted it. He states, however, that the plaintiff and his father were altogether separate from the defendant and Sheopal, and that the former never had anything to do with any portion of the fixed-rate holding. As regards the compromise filed in the Revenue Court, he will not admit that there was any compromise on the terms alleged by the plaintiff and in fact pleads that the petition of compromise relied on by the latter is inadmissible in evidence for want of registration but he does admit that there was an agreement between the parties as to the division of the holding. He says that what the parties agreed to was that in the month of Jeth 1317 Fasli, which would correspond with the month of June 1910, the plaintiff was to pay the defendant Rs. 140 and thereupon the defendant would "in consideration of the plaintiff's near relationship" put him in possession of the two plots of land now in dispute. The Court of first instance seems to have tried the case very carefully. It was of opinion that the petition of compromise of March 16, 1909, was admissible in evidence, and held that on the evidence, as a whole, the plaintiff had made out a good case in favour of his claim to possess, by right of inheritance, some share of interest in the fixed-rate tenancy in question. It further held that this right on the part of the plaintiff to an undivided share in the holding had become, by virtue of the petition of compromise and the actual settlement thereby effected and endorsed by the order of the Revenue Court, a right to the separate possession of the two plots of land now in suit. It accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim in full. Before the learned District Judge on appeal, the point principally argued was the admissiblity in evidence of the petiton of compromise of March 16th, 1909. Now, I have no doubt that the record of the entire proceeding before the Revenue Court, including the pleadings of the parties, the petition of compromise and the order of the Court, were admissible in evidence as matters bearing upon the various issues in the case. The plaintiff was, undoubtedly, entitled to prove that he had set up a claim to a share in the fixed-rate holding on the death of Sheopal, that this claim had been brought to the notice of, and contested by, the defendant Nidhai, but that in the result Nidhai had entered into an agreement in consequence of which a portion of the holding had passed into the actual possession of the plaintiff. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (1) is sufficient authority for the proposition that a petition of this sort should not be excluded altogether from evidence by reason of the provisions of the Indian Registration Act. There remains, however, the further question of the legal effect of a compromise of this sort taken in connection with the order of the Revenue Court on the same. The whole question was considered by a Bench of this Court, of which I was a member, in Rustam Ali Khan v. Gaura (2), where a number of rulings on the point are referred to. The Court had to deal in that case with a petition of compromise presented before a Revenue Court which admittedly purported to deal with immoveable property of a value exceeding Rs. 100. It was there pointed out that such a petition of compromise might be relevant fact in the case, and might be admitted in evidence, but yet might be incapable of operating as a document of title so as to transfer title to immovable property of a value exceeding Rs. 100 from one person to another. I am still of the same opinion but it seems to me that the circumstances of the present case are distinguishable. What the plaintiff, Bidesi, actually got under this compromise of March 16th, 1909, was possession over immoveable property, viz., two small plots of land of a value apparently not exceeding Rs. 100.

MOHIB ALI v. SURAT SINGH.

The plaintiff valued the property in dispute at Rs. 40 and this valuation was not contested by the defendant but was adopted by him in his memorandum of appeal to the District Judge. It seems to me that, under the circumstances of this case, the entire transaction comprised in the presentation of the petition of compromise, the order thereon by the Revenue Court, and the transfer of possession in accordance with the same, should be regarded as sufficient to confer upon the plaintiff, Bidesi, a title which the defendant cannot now call in question. I take it that Bidesi held as against Nidhai what amounted, at any rate, to a doubtful claim, and this in respect of immoveable property of a value not exceeding Rs. 100. This claim Nidhai settled by putting Bidesi into actual possession of two plots of land and calling upon the Revenue Court to take note of the fact that he had done so and to make the necessary entries in its papers accordingly. I am not satisfied that such transaction in the case of immoveable property of a value less than Rs. 100, would require a registered instrument in order to give it legal validity. Holding this view, I think the learned District Judge was substantially right in declining to go into the question of the validity of Bidesi's claim by right of inheritance, independently of the settlement effected under the compromise of March 16th, 1909. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (2), 56, 57, 58, 167—"Agricultural purposes," meaning of—Land for the purposes of grazing—Jurisdiction of Civil or Revenue Court—Suit for ejectment of tenant from pasture land.

The words "agricultural purposes" in section 4 (2) of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, must be construed in their ordinary sense; they refer to tilling and cultivation for purposes of raising crops. In their widest sense, the words may include grazing but it is impossible to hold that all land held for grazing purposes is land held for agricultural purposes.

A suit for ejectment of a tenant from pasture land, not held for agricultural purposes, is cognizable by the Civil Court and not by the Revenue Court.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, of Shahjahanpur, dated 22nd December 1911.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Appellant.

Mr. Benode Behari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellant in a Court of Munsif for the ejectment of the respondent from two plots of land. The suit was resisted on the ground that the parties were landlord and tenant and, therefore, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction. The respondent pleaded that he had been cultivating the plots. But the Courts below have found that he has not cultivated them but has held them only for grazing purposes and that he has been paying Rs. 3 a year for them to the appellant. The Munsif found that the suit was cognizable by a Civil Court and decreed the claim. On appeal, the District Judge held that the suit was barred with reference to the provisions of sections 4, 56 and 167 of the Tenancy Act. The suit as brought was not cognizable by a Revenue Court if, as I am informed, (the plaint is not before me), the appellant alleged that the respondent was a trespasser. That allegation has been negatived by the Courts below, and the question is whether on the facts found, a suit could have been maintained by the appellant for the ejectment of the respondent in a Revenue Court. According to the finding, the respondent was a tenant of the appellant and according to section 4(3) of the Tenancy Act what the respondent paid to the appellant for the grazing was "rent". The definition of "rent" specifically includes what is paid by a tenant on account of rights of pasturage. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court must be barred, if at all, by some express provision of the Tenancy Act. Section 167 provides that all suits specified in the fourth Schedule of the Act shall be heard and determined by the Revenue Courts and except by way of appeal, no Court other than a Revenue Court shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which any such suit might be brought. If a suit for ejectment is maintainable by the appellant against the respondent at all, it must be either as a suit of the kind described at No. 29 in Group C of the fourth Schedule to the Act, or as a suit of the kind described at No. 39 in Group D of the fourth Schedule. The former is a suit for ejectment of a non-occupancy-tenant on the ground specified in section 58 of the Act and the latter is a suit for ejectment of a tenant on the grounds specified in clause (a) of section 57 of the Act. The opening words of section 57 are:—"A tenant, not being a permanent tenure-holder, shall be liable to ejectment from his holding on one or more of the following grounds". Then the grounds are stated. Section 58 provides as follows:—"A non-occupancy-tenant shall be liable to ejecment on one or more of the following grounds in addition to the grounds specified in section 57, namely, (a) on the ground that he holds only as a tenant from year to year; (b) on the ground that he holds under a lease the term of which has expired or will expire at or before the end of the current agricultural year; (c) on the ground that he has refused to accept a lease containing the particulars of his holding for the time being in accordance with the provisions of section 96". Both these sections relate to the ejectment of a tenant from his holding and "holding" is defined in section 4 (9) of the Act as a parcel or parcels of land held under one tenure or one lease or engagement The word "land" is defined in section 4(2) as land which is let or held for agricultural purposes. It appears, therefore, that sections 57 and 58 apply only to suits for the ejectment of a tenant from land as defined in the Act. Thus the question whether the present suit is cognizable by a Civil Court or not, resolves itself into the question whether the land held for grazing purposes is land held for agricultural purposes within the meaning of section 4(2) of the Act. It seems to me that, in its widest possible sense, the expression "agricultural purposes" might include grazing. But it is impossible to hold that all land held for grazing purposes is land held for agricultural purposes. There are enormous areas in these Provinces to which cattle are sent to graze and which certainly have no connection whatever with agricultural purposes in the ordinary sense, and it would be impossible, I think, to hold that these areas are lands held for agricultural purposes within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. In the present case, there is nothing to show that the respondent's occupation of the land in question is in any way connected with agricultural purposes in the ordinary sense, that is to say, with the tilling and cultivation of land, nor, in my opinion, can the question whether land held for grazing purposes is land held for agricultural purposes depend upon the trade or occupation of the person who actually holds the land in question in a suit. It seems to me that the words "agricultural purposes "in section 4 (2) of the Act must be construed in their ordinary sense and that they refer to tilling and cultivation for purposes of raising crops. I was referred to a decision of the Board of Revenue in Chowdhury Muhammad Mahmood v. Ganga Ram (1). The question, which I have to decide, was raised in that case, but was not decided, the Board being of opinion that a person who has grazing rights over land is not a tenant of the land who can be ejected by a suit under the Tenancy Act. If that decision is correct, the present suit is cognizable by a Civil Court, even if my interpretation of the definition of land is erroneous. I allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the case to that Court in order that it may be restored to the pending file and disposed of according to law. Costs in this Court will be costs in the cause.

I am informed that the plaint was returned by the District Judge to the appellant for presentation to a Court of Revenue. The plaint should now be re-placed on the record.

Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 13—

PARTAB BAHADUR SINGH v. NAURANG SINGH.

Misjoinder of parties and causes of action—Objection to be taken at the earliest opportunity—Appeal, objection not allowed to be taken in.

Under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, objections as to misjoinder of parties and causes of action should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and where no such objection is taken in the written statement, it should not be allowed to be taken for the first time in appeal.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Rai Bareli, dated 30th October 1911, reversing that of the Deputy Collector of Partabgarh, dated 1st July 1911.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Girja Saran Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of a suit which was brought by the plaintiff appellant in the Court of the Assistant Collector of Partabgarh under the provisions of section 108 (5) of the Oudh Rent Act for profits. The suit was brought against 36 defendants and the profits, which were the subject-matter of the suit, were said to be due in respect of a share belonging to the plaintiff in a patti called Patti Jiwan Rai. The claim of the plaintiff was resisted on a variety of grounds but the main contention raised on behalf of the defendants was that they were not liable for the claim and that if anything was due from any of them, it was due to the plaintiff separately so that a joint decree could not be passed against all of them. The Assistant Collector, having had a statement of the accounts prepared, gave separate decrees, against nine of the defendants specifying the amount due to the plaintiff from each. Seven of these defendants appealed to the Court of the District Judge. Three of them were parties to one appeal while four of them joined in a separate appeal. Both these appeals have been allowed by the Court below on the ground that the plaintiff-appellant's suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. The learned District Judge, having come to this conclusion, set aside the decree of the first Court and remanded the case for re-trial. He also directed that the plaint should be returned to the plaintiff for amendment with a direction to confine his claim to one cause of action against the same defendants. In appeal here, it is contended that this order of the Court below was wrong inasmuch as no plea of misjoinder having been taken by any of the defendants at the earliest possible opportunity, such a plea could not be raised for the first time in appeal. I am of opinion that this contention must prevail. It is true that in the judgment of the lower Court it is stated that these pleas of misjoinder of parties and causes of action were raised in the Court of first instance but after a perusal of the various written statements, filed by some of the defendants (some of the defendants filed no written statement at all), it seems to me clear that no such plea of misjoinder was taken. For example, Zabar Singh, who was one of the defendants, while he stated in his written statement, as if by way of complaint, that all the co-sharers were being sued jointly, nevertheless expressed his willingness to submit to a decree for any such amount as might be found owing from him, that is to say, his plea was really one to the effect that no joint decree could be passed against him. Raghubar, Sripat and Ganga Bakhsh, who are also respondents in these appeals, did not raise any plea of misjoinder whatever; nor did the other respondents Nauring and Bikramjit. I think therefore, it must be taken that the learned Judge was under a misapprehension in dealing with the case. The terms of Order I, rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure are perfectly clear and make it necessary that all objections on the ground of misjoinder shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity. I may also remark that this plea of misjoinder, even assuming it could be raised, does not appear to me to be well taken.

The Patti Jiwan Rai, in which the plaintiff has a share in respect of which he was seeking for profits, contains numerous sub divisions for each of which there appears to be a separate account. So far as these respondents are concerned, it appears that Raghubar, Balkaram and Zabar, who are the respondents in Appeal No. 5, hold shares in two Khatas Nos. 28 and 29. Ganga Bakhsh, Sripat, Naurang and Bikramjit, on the other hand, are all co-sharers in Khata No. 29 alone. It is admitted that the plaintiff has shares in both of these khatas. I can see no reason why it should be held that a claim, which affects the khatas in which all these parties are concerned, is necessarily bad for misjoinder because it so happens that some of the defendants are concerned only with one khata while others, are concerned with two. In the first Court, there does not appear to have been any difficulty in making out the account of the liabilities of the various defendants and it cannot, I think, be said that on the ground of inconvenience, there was any necessity for a direction to the plaintiff to file separate suits. I set aside the order of remand passed by the lower Appellate Court in each of the cases before it and direct that the appeals be disposed of by the learned Judge according to law. The appellant will get his costs from the respondents in each of the appeals in this Court.

Cases remanded.

Appeal against an order of the Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, dated 5th May 1911, upholding that of the Munsif, Partabgarh, dated 28th February 1911.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first matter to be dealt with in this appeal is a question of Court-fees. According to the office report, the deficiency, which is recoverable from the plaintiff-appellant, amounts to Rs. 977, that is to say, Rs. 488-8 payable in the lower Appellate Court and a similar amount which is payable in this Court. The facts of the case are that the plaintiff sued to recover possession of a share of certain lands alleging that the property belonged to his uncle, Sital Singh deceased, and that after his death, the property had devolved on his widows and that on the death of the widows, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the property as the next reversioner of Sital Singh. On the case as thus set out in the plaint, a Court fee of Rs. 16-8 was paid being the amount leviable on five times the revenue, which was described as coming to Rs. 213-6. The defendant set up the plea that he held the property as mortgagee from the widows of Sital Singh and that these widows were competent to execute these mortgages and that the mortgages were binding upon the plaintiff. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff a decree for possession subject to payment of Rs. 10,802, that is, the amount found to be due on the mortgages set up in the written statement. The plaintiff brought an appeal in the Court below which has been dismissed, the order of the first Court being upheld. It appears that the findings of the Courts below are to the effect that the property in dispute had become the absolute property of Sital Singh's widows as stridhan and that they were competent to deal with this property as full owners. It was found, however, that the plaintiff was the heir of the widows and entitled to succeed to their stridhan property and on this footing, the Courts below gave the plaintiff a decree for redemption. They found him to be the heir of Sital Singh's widows and, therefore, held that as representing the widows, he was entitled to redeem on payment of the sum just mentioned. On these facts and relying upon the case reported as Basdeo Ban v. Sri Krishen Gir (1), the office has put up its report relating to the deficiency in Court-fees. Mr. Ishwari Prasad who appears for the appellant contests the report. He points out that the amount which he has been directed to pay by the lower Courts before he is entitled to get possession of the property, is far in excess of the value of the property and he claims that as his suit was not one for redemption but one for possession by ejectment of the defendant, he is only liable to pay

(1) 13 O. C. 62; 5 Ind. 941;

Court-fee such as was paid by him in both the Courts below. In Basdeo Ban v. Sri Krishen Gir (1), it was laid down that where a plaintiff sues for possession of land claiming an unconditional decree or admitting his liability to pay certain sum and the Court requires him to pay a sum which he disputes and he appeals on the ground that he is not liable to pay that sum, he must pay Court-fee on the amount in question. It may be noticed that this case is at variance with a previous case which is reported as Ram Phal v. Deputy Commissioner, Bharaich (2). It was laid down in Basdeo Ban v. Sri Krishen Gir (1), that the ruling in Ram Phal v. Deputy Commissioner Bharaich (2) should no longer be followed as it was contrary to the current of authorities both in this Court and in the Allahabad High Court. It was argued before me that the decision arrived at in Basdeo Ban v. Sri Krishen Gir (1), is based on an erroneous principle, namely, that the Court has applied to a suit in ejectment the same considerations which would be properly applicable to a suit for redemption. It may be possible to argue that there is some distinction in principle between the two cases and that in the case of a suit in ejectment, different considerations ought to apply. Clearly, in a suit for ejectment, the plaintiff does not admit any title in the defendant whereas where a plaintiff sues to redeem, he necessarily admits a title existing in the defendant and which he is entitled to displace on payment of a certain sum. However, a consideration of the pleadings in this suit seems to make it clear that the appellant is no longer in a position to argue that his case is in any way distinguishable from the case set out in Basdeo Ban v. Sri Krishen Gir (1). After the written statement had been filed, the plaintiff filed a replication, in paragraph 19 of which he stated that if it were held that the property in suit has become stridhan of Sital Singh's widows, even then he, being the heir to both these ladies, was entitled to recover possession. In the concluding portion of this paragraph, the plaintiff stated that if any amount were found due to the defendant, he would have no objection in making payment thereof. Obviously, this was an invitation to the Court to grant the plaintiff a redemption decree in case the facts were found against him on which he relied in his plaint for his cause of action. In short the plaintiff set up two alternative cases, he asked either for an unconditional decree for possession as being the heir of Sital Singh or, alternatively, for a decree for possession by redemption in his capacity as heir of both the widows of Sital Singh. The Courts below have given him a decree for redemption and if he now disputes the amount which the Courts below had declared him liable to pay, he must pay the Court-fee on the amount in question. It is stated that the Court-fee is in excess of the value of the property and Mr. Ishwari Prasad informs the Court that his client is unwilling to pay the additional Court-fee of Rs. 977. It is no use, therefore, giving the appellant time to make good the deficiency. I, therefore, direct that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Judge, Hardoi, dated 17th October 1910.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain, for the Appellant.
Mr. Sami-ullah Beg, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that the plaintiff-appellant was married to one Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam on the 25th of June 1905. The marriage took place at Shahjahanpur at the house of the bride's parents. The bride was a minor at the time of the marriage. The rukhsat ceremony (going to the husband's house) took place on the 24th of May 1907. The plaintiff-appellant and Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam lived as man and wife for about two years. On the 9th of July 1909, Israr Hasan, the brother of Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam, went to Shahabad where the plaintiff-appellant lives and persuaded him to let Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam go to see her mother at Shahjahanpur who was said to be ill at the time. The plaintiff-appellant allowed his wife to go to Shahjahanpur, with her brother on condition that she was to return home after about a week. But it seems that her marriage life was not a happy one and she did not return to her husband as promised. On the 3rd of December 1909, she instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur, under the guardianship of her father as she was still a minor, against her husband, the plaintiff-appellant, for the recovery of her prompt dower. The plaintiff-appellant denied her claim, but a decree was passed against him for Rs. 10,000 on the 23rd of April 1910, which was upheld by the High Court at Allahabad on the 29th of November 1911. In the meantime, subsequent to the institution of the suit of Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur, the plaintiff-appellant brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, on the 5th of January 1910, against her parents and her three brothers. The plaintiff-appellant sued for the restitution of conjugal rights, for a perpetual injunction against her parents and her brothers to prevent them from obstructing her return to him and for the recovery of ornaments worth Rs. 4,150 or their price. The plaintiff-appellant alleged in his plaint that Israr Hasan, the brother of Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam, had taken her to see her mother on the promise that she would return to her husband in a week; that at the time of her departure she had taken with her ornaments worth Rs. 4,150, which he had got made for her and that she, at the instigation of her parents and her brothers, refused to return to him or to restore the ornaments. The suit of the plaintiff-appellant was resisted by his wife, her parents and her brothers. Her parents and her brothers denied that she had gone to their house with any ornaments belonging to the plaintiff-appellant or that they were standing in the way of her return to her husband. Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam supported the defence of her parents and her brothers and added that she was unwilling to return to the plaintiff-appellant because he had been cruel to her and she was in danger of her health and her life at his hands. She further advanced a legal plea to the effect that the plaintiff-appellant could not claim restitution of conjugal rights without paying her prompt dower.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, found that Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam did not go to her mother's house at Shahjahanpur with the ornaments of the value of Rs. 4,150, or any ornaments belonging to the plaintiff-appellant. The plea of cruelty was found not to have been proved. But the plea of the non-payment of prompt dower was upheld. A decree was accordingly passed for restitution of conjugal rights subject to the payment by the plaintiff-appellant of prompt dower. The claim for ornament or their price and for a perpetual injunction against the parents and the brothers of Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam was dismissed. The lower Court mentioned no sum as payable to Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam for prompt dower. The plaintiff-appellant preferred an appeal to this Court which came up for hearing before us on the 1st of June 1911. It was urged for the appellant then that the decree of the lower Court was so vague as to be incapable of execution inasmuch as it did not fix the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant. The sum decreed by the Suborbinate Judge of Shahjahanpur could not, it was said, be considered as the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant because in Oudh dower is to be determined according to the means of the husband. For the respondents, it was admitted that the decree of the lower Court was vague, but it was argued that the question as to the amout of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant was res judicata between him and his wife by reason of the decree of the Shahjahanpur Court. We accordingly framed the following issues and remitted them for trial to the lower Court, namely:—

1. Is the question of the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff to the defendant No. 6 res judicata?
2. If not, what is the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff to the defendant No. 6?

The learned Subordinate Judge submitted his findings on the above issues on the 15th of August 1911. He found on the first issue that the question of the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant to his wife was not res judicata, as an appeal was pending at the time in the High Court at Allahabad from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur. On the second issue, the lower Court found that the sum of Rs. 5,000 was the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant to his wife. The plaintiff-appellant has filed objections to the finding of the lower Court on the second issue. And as the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur was upheld by the High Court at Allahabad subsequent to the remand finding, but prior to the hearing of the present appeal before us, the respondents have pressed the plea of res judicata as to the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant. The appeal has been argued at some length before us on all the points in dispute between the parties with the exception of the plea of cruelty which was taken by the respondent No. 6 in the Court below.

There appear to be four questions for determination in the appeal, namely:—

1. Has the wife, after consummation of marriage, the right to refuse her person to her husband so long as her prompt dower remains unpaid?
2. Is the question of the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant to his wife Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam res judicata?
3. If not, what is the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant to his wife?
4. Did Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam, when going to her mother at Shahjahanpur, take with her jewelry worth Rs. 4,150 belonging to the plaintiff-appellant?

Elaborate arguments have been advanced at the Bar on the first question which raises a somewhat difficult point of Muhammadan Law. The difficulty is due to the difference of opinion among the Muhammadan lawyers and to the conflict of authority in the case-law. But, before proceeding to consider the text-books or the case-law, it would be just as well to clear the ground for the consideration of the question by stating some undisputed facts. Both the plaintiff-appellant and his wife are Sunni Muhammadans. They were married according to the Sunni Law which governs their marital relations. They lived as man and wife for sometime prior to the present litigation. Prompt dower is payable by the plaintiff-appellant, which remains still unpaid in spite of a demand for it prior to the institution of the plaintiff-appellant's suit. Now, we have to see whether, under these circumstances, the respondent No. 6 can resist the suit of her husband on the ground of the non-payment of her prompt dower according to the Hanafi Law, which binds the Sunni sect of Muhammadans. The majority of the writers of the text-books, as will appear from the quotations given below, favour the defence of the defendant-respondent No. 6.

I.—Bidaya, which is the text of Hedaya, contains the following passage on the subject:—"A woman has a right to refuse to surrender herself to her husband until she receive her dower, and to prevent him from taking her upon a journey; and the husband has no right to prevent her from going out of his house or from visiting her relatives until the payment of the whole of the prompt dower; but if the dower be deferred, the woman has no right of refusal. But if cohabitation has taken place, then also she has the same (right)".

II.—In the Chapter on Nikah in Hedaya, the following passage is relevant:—"It is the wife's right that she may deny herself to her husband until she receive the dower and she may prevent him from taking her away, so that her right in the return may be fixed in the same manner as that of the husband in the object of the return and become like sale. And it is not for the husband that he may prevent her from travelling or going out of his house and visiting her friends until he has paid the whole prompt dower, because the right of restraint is for securing fulfilment (of his right) to the rightful person, and he has not the right to securing fulfilment before rendering fulfilment himself; and if the whole dower is deferred, it is not for her to deny herself because of her having dropped her right by deferring it, as in sale. And in this matter, Abu Yusuf holds the contrary opinion. And if the husband has retired with her, the same would be the answer according to Abu Hanifa, but the two disciples have said that she has not the right to deny herself, and the difference of opinion subsists where there is retirement with her consent; but if she was forced or an infant or insane, her right of denying herself does not drop according to the unanimous opinion of our Doctors."

III.—The learned author of the Durr-ul-Mukhtar, a well known book on the Muhammadan Law, expresses the following opinion:—"It is the wife's right to prevent the husband from connubial intercourse, and that which is implied therein, and from journeying with her, even though after connubial intercourse and retirement to which she has consented, because all connubial intercourse has been contracted with her, and the rendering of some does not imperatively require the rendering of the rest. This right is for the purpose of obtaining what has been stated as prompt dower, whether wholly or partly."

IV.—Fatwa-i-Qazi Khan has the following passage on the subject:—"A wife, having surrendered herself to her husband before the payment of dower, subsequently denies herself to him for securing the payment of the dower. She has this right in the opinion of Abu Hanifa; but Abu Yusuf and Imam Muhammad maintain that she has not the right of prohibiting him from connubial intercourse, and doubts have arisen with regard to their opinions as to the power of preventing her from journeying. And, according to the opinion of Abul Qasim Assaffar, it is her right that she may prevent him from taking her on a journey."

V.—Fatwa Hamadiah, referring to Umdat-ul fatwa, contains the following passage:—"According to usage, a woman has a right to withhold her person from her husband until she receive her whole dower. But in determining what amount is prompt for similar women, her status must be considered. If the amount which forms the prompt dower for similar women is paid, she has no right of refusal."

VI.—The same book with reference to the Fatwa-e-Mufti has the following passage:—"A woman has a right to deny herself to her husband, and she can go on a journey or out of her husband's house without his permission until she receive her dower in full to the last dirham."

VII.—Hamadiah quotes a passage from Tahzib, which is as follows:—"A woman has power to deny herself to her husband till the payment of the whole dower on the analogy of sale, and she is at liberty to go on a journey or to live anywhere before receiving her dower. And though she has once cohabited willingly with her husband, she has a right of refusal contrary to the view of the Sahibain."

VIII.—Tanvir-ul-Absar, which is the text of Durr-ul-Mukhtar, has the following passage:—"A woman can refuse to accompany her husband on a journey or to cohabit with him until the payment of her prompt dower even though the refusal takes place after there has been a valid retirement or cohabitation with her consent."

IX.—In Wikayat-ur-rivayah, which is the text of Sharha Vikayah, the rule is stated thus:—"It is the right of the wife to deny herself to her husband and refuse to travel with him and in spite of this refusal take food and raiment from him, notwithstanding that such refusal may be after cohabitation with her consent, so long as she does not receive her dower either the whole or such part as is specified prompt or which is customarily prompt for such woman without consideration whether it is one-fourth or one-fifth, unless it is specified."

X.—The law is thus stated in Kanz-ud-dakaik:—"A woman has a right to withhold her person from her husband and refuse going on a journey with him though consummation may have taken place."

XI.—The following passage in Fatawa-i-Alamgiri discusses the point under discussion:—"In all places, when the husband has had connubial intercourse with her, or validly retired with her, the whole dower is confirmed. If she intends to deny herself to him for securing the payment of her prompt dower, it is her right to do so according to Imam Abu Hanifa; but this is opposed to the opinions of his two disciples, and in like manner, the husband cannot prevent her from going out or travelling or going on a voluntary pilgrimage, according to Abu Hanifa, except when she goes out in an indecent manner. As to her right to all this before she has surrendered herself, there is unanimity of opinion, as there is as to the rule when the husband has had connubial intercourse with her whilst she is a minor or has been forced or insane, in which cases her father might refuse to surrender her until the payment of her prompt dower—so in the Itabyyah. And if the husband has had connubial intercourse with her or retired with her consent, it is her right to refuse herself to go on a journey until payment of her whole dower according to the written engagement or the prompt part of it according to the custom of our country. This view is according to Abu Hanifa, but his two disciples maintain that she has no such right, and the Shaikh-ul-Imam, the jurisconsult, the pious Abul Qasim Assaffar, was accustomed to decide according to Abu Hanifa, so far as going on a journey is concerned; but in matter of refusing herself, he used to decide according to the opinions of the two disciples and several of our learned doctors have approved of this distinction."

Three propositions are clearly deducible from these authorities:—

first, that if consummation of marriage has not taken place, the wife may refuse to admit her husband to sexual intercouse or to obey his orders so long as her prompt dower remains unpaid;

second, that in case consummation of marriage has taken place, she has the right to refuse her person to her husband according to Imam Abu Hanifa, but has no such right according to the Sahibain (that is, his two disciples, Abu Yusuf and Muhammad); and third, that the majority of Muhammadan jurists have accepted the view of Imam Abu Hanifa.

The Sunni Ulamas in this country have always given Fatwa (or decision) on the point under consideration in accordance with the view of the Great Imam. This is borne out by case XXXI, mentioned by Macnaghten in his book on Muhammadan Law, eighth reprint, at page 281. The question and answer are as follows:—

"Q.—1. Has a wife a right to oppose the inclination and resist the authority of her husband, before she has received her dower, notwithstanding the previous interchange of conjugal habits, without objection on her part?

"R.—1. If it had been stipulated that a portion of the dower is to be paid immediately, she has a right to do so, with a view to obtain that portion of her dower. So also if no mention have been made of the immediate payment of any portion, she may do so, with a view to obtain such a portion as may be consistent with her situation in life, unless the postponement of the payment of the whole had been expressly stipulated; according to the Munnih ul-Ghuffar,—'she is competent to preclude him from the enjoyment of conjugal rights, or from carrying her on a journey, or removing her from one house in a town to another, (although matrimonial intercourse may have passed between them and the marriage may have been consummated, without any objection on her part), for the purpose of obtaining a portion, or the whole, of the dower, prompt payment of which was stipulated, or for the purpose of obtaining such a portion of it as is usually paid promptly to her equals in condition, unless the payment of the whole was expressly postponed;' according to Abu Yusuf,—'she has a right by a favourable construction in this case also; and opinions have been given according to this doctrine on a principle of favourable construction.' Such also is the doctrine contained in the Durr-ul-Mukhtar,— 'she is competent to preclude him from the enjoyment of conjugal rights; and according to Abu Yusuf, even although the payment of the whole dower was expressly postponed. Opinions have been given according to this doctrine on a principle of favourable construction.' Therefore, before the dower that may be due is paid, the husband has no right to force and compel his wife to come to his house."

The Anglo-Indian decisions followed the opinion of the Great Imam up to the case of Abdul Kadir v. Salima (1), decided in 1886, by the High Court at Allahabad. In fact, some of those decisions went a little further than the rule laid down by Imam Abu Hanifa and held that the husband could not maintain a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights against his wife if the prompt dower had remained unpaid up to the date of the institution of the suit. One of the earliest cases on the point is that of Jaun Beebee v. Sheikh Moonshee Beparee (2). It was observed in that case that the husband could not enforce his right to his wife till he paid the dower. The most definite pronouncement was made by the North-Western Provinces High Court in 1874 in the case of Sheikh Abdool Shukkoar v. Musammat Raheem-un-nissa (3). In that case, the husband sued for the restitution of conjugal rights on the allegation that his wife refused to return and that her mother dissuaded her from returning to him. It was urged in defence of the suit that the plaintiff, the husband, could not compel his wife to return to him as the prompt dower had not been paid. The learned Judges, who decided that case, held that "a suit will not lie by a Muhammadan to enforce the return of his wife to his house even after consummation with consent, until her prompt dower has been paid" The suit was accordingly dismissed. The same view was adopted in the cases of Wilayat Husain v. Allah Rakhi (4), Nasrat Husain v. Hamidan (5) and Nazir Khan v. Umrao (6). But in the case of Eidan v. Mazhar Husain (7), the view taken in the cases mentioned above was modified so far that a decree in favour of the husband for the restitution of conjugal rights was passed conditional on the payment of prompt dower due to the wife. The point again came up for consideration before the Allahabad High Court in the case of Abdul Kadir v. Salima (1), when the case-law and the text-books on the point were reviewed in an elaborate judgment by the late Mr. Justice Mahmood, who held that a wife could not resist the suit of her husband for the restitution of conjugal rights after consummation of marriage on the ground of the non-payment of her prompt dower. The law, as laid down by him, has been accepted in subsequent cases by other High Courts. On the other hand, this Court has adopted the principle enunciated in the case of Eidan v. Mazhar Husain (7). It has been held by this Court, in at least two reported cases, that even if there has been a consummation of marriage, the wife can resist the suit of her husband for the restitution of conjugal rights and a conditional decree on the payment of her prompt dower should be passed in favour of the husband—vide the cases of Khodaija Begam v. Saiyid Naki (8) and Nawab Wazir Jahan Begam v. Nawab Haidar Razi Khan (9). In view of the importance of the question under discussion and the eminence of the learned Judge who was responsible for the judgment in the case of Abdul Kadir v. Salima (1), we propose to consider and examine that case in order to see what was actually decided in it and whether the view expressed therein is supported by authority. The facts of that case, as given in the report, are that Abdul Kadir was married to Salima on the 15th of March 1883, and that her dower was fixed without any specification as to whether it was to be partly or wholly prompt or deferred. She cohabited with her husband, the plaintiff, up to the 15th of June 1883, when she went on a visit to her father. On the 28th June 1883, Abdul Kadir instituted the suit in the Court of the Munsif of Mirzapur for the restitution of conjugal rights on the allegation that Salima, under the influence of her father, refused to return to him. Salima resisted the suit on several grounds but the main pleas in defence were (1) that she had been divorced by Abdul Kadir, (2) that Abdul Kadir had been guilty of cruelty to her, (3) that Abdul Kadir had not paid her dower and was not, therefore, competent to bring the suit for the restitution of conjugal rights so long as he did not satisfy her dower-debt. After the defence of Salima had been made and before the case was decided by the Munsif, Abdul Kadir deposited the whole dower money in Court. The Munsif found on the pleas of cruelty and divorce against Salima. He further held that as dower debt had been paid into Court, the plaintiff was entitled "to succeed in his claim for bringing his wife to his house." A decree was accordingly passed in favour of Abdul Kadir. On appeal, the District Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif on the ground that "payment into Court after institution of the suit was insufficient, because the husband had no cause of action at the time when he brought his suit." Abdul Kadir preferred an appeal to the High Court when a Division Bench referred the question whether under the circumstances of the case the suit was maintainable or not to the Full Bench. Mr. Justice Mahmood, whose judgment was adopted by the Bench, reviewed the Muhammadan Law of marriage and dower and came to the conclusion that marriage among the Mahomedans was purely a civil contract, two incidents of which were the mutual right of the husband and wife to cohabitation with each other and the liability of the husband to pay his wife's dower. To quote Mr. Justice Mahmood's words: "The legal effects of marriage come into operation as soon as the contract of marriage is completed by proposal and acceptance; their initiation is simultaneous and there is no authority in the Muhammadan Law for the proposition that any or all of them are dependent upon any condition precedent as to the payment of dower by the husband to the wife." In other words, Mr. Justice Mahmood's inference from the text-books on Muhammadan Law of marriage and dower was that the right of cohabitation by the husband or the wife and the liability of the husband to pay dower arise simultaneously on the completion of the marriage contract. And hence a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights by the husband was maintainable in spite of the non-payment of his wife's dower. The expression of the opinion that the suit of Abdul Kadir was maintainable was quite sufficient for the disposal of the appeal. But Mr. Justice Mahmood went further. He agreed, on the authority of the text-books quoted by the learned Pleader for Salima, that, according to Imam Abu Hanifa, Salima could, in spite of consummation of her marriage, refuse to admit her husband to sexual intercourse until her prompt dower was paid and remarked that under a well understood rule of construction of Muhammadan Law in case of difference of opinion between the three Masters (Abu Hanifa and his two disciples are described by Mr. Justice Mahmood as the three Masters), the opinion of the majority must prevail. The only point for consideration before the High Court was, as has already been remarked, whether the suit of Abdul Kadir was maintainable. That point was decided and we think correctly in favour of Abdul Kadir. The further expression of opinion on the question whether Salima could deny herself to her husband because of the non payment of her prompt dower may have been an interesting one, but it did not arise in the case as Abdul Kadir had paid the whole amount of the dower immediately after the defence of Salima had been filed. The view expressed by Mr. Justice Mahmood was at the most an obiter dictum. However, we do not wish to reject the proposition laid down by him on the ground that it was obiter dictum, for an expression of view of such an eminent lawyer is entitled to respect and consideration. Besides, the arguments advanced by Mr. Justice Mahmood are urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant in support of his contention that the plea of the respondent No. 6 in this case based on the non-payment of her prompt dower should not prevent an unconditional decree for the restitution of conjugal rights being passed in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. We, therefore, propose to consider the arguments discussed by Mr. Justice Mahmood in the case of Abdul Kadir. The learned Judge based his opinion, that a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights by the husband could not be resisted by the wife by reason of the non-payment of her prompt dower, on two grounds, namely, first, that it is a general rule of interpretation of the Muhammadan

Law that whenever there is a difference of opinion among the three Masters, the opinion of the two will prevail against the third, and secondly, that under the Muhammadan Law, dower is regarded as the consideration for connubial intercourse and the right of refusal of her person by the wife to her husband till her prompt dower is paid is like the vendor's right of lien on the goods sold till paid for. And as when once the goods are delivered, the vendor's right of lien is lost, so when once consummation of marriage has taken place, the right of the wife to refuse to admit her husband to cohabitation until the payment of her prompt dower is lost. He gives no authority in support of the first ground, the so-called well-understood rule of construction of the Muhammadan Law that in case of difference of opinion among Imam Abu Hanifa and his two disciples, the opinion of the majority will prevail, but refers to a passage in the case of Sheikh Abdul Shukkoor v. Kaheem-un-nissa (3) in support of his view. The passage is as follows:—

"The appellant's Pleader has cited a passage from the Durr-ul-Mukhtar in support of his argument that where on such a point there is a difference between Abu Hanifa and his disciples, the opinion of the latter should prevail." The words "such a point" clearly show that whatever passage was cited was no authority for the proposition that as a general rule and in every case the opinion of the majority is to prevail when there is a difference of opinion between Imam Abu Hanifa and his two disciples.

The rule of interpretation in case of difference of opinion is discussed by the Muhammadan lawyers under the heading of Rasm-ul-Mufti (rules of practice or procedure to be observed by the Mufti.)

I.—According to the author of Durr-ul-Mukhtar, "a Mufti should give his final fatwa in accordance with the opinion of all the ulamas if they agree: but if they differ, the Doctors are not agreed as to the course which is to be followed by the Mufti. The most approved doctrine is that a fatwa should generally be given in accordance with the opinion of Imam Abu Hanifa. This opinion is also supported by the Sirajia and other books. The opinion of Abu Yusuf should be next acted upon, and then that of Muhammad, then that of Zafar and then that of Hasan Ibn Ziad."

It may be observed here in passing that among numerous pupils of Imam Abu Hanifa forty were recognized as Mujtahids—four of whom were pre-eminently such, namely, (1) Abu Yusuf, (2) Muhammad, (3) Zafar and (4) Hassan Ibn Ziad.

II.—In Kitabul Kaza of Durr-ul-Mukhtar it is said that: "a Kazi like a Mufti should generally act upon the opinion of Abu Hanifa, then on that of Abu Yusuf, then on that of Muhammad, then on that of Zafar and then on that of Hassan Ibn Ziad. This is the most correct view and has been held to be correct in Sirajia and Munnia."

III—Rudd-ul-Muhtar has the following passage on the point: "If one of the two opinions be that of the Imam and the other of some one else, preference should not be given to the latter over that of the Imam because when the two dicta conflict, they cancel each other; consequently we must revert to the original opinion of the Imam."

IV.—Fatwa Khairia referred to in Rudd-ul-Muhtar is to the following effect:—

"In the opinion of the Hanafi jurists, it is a settled principle that no fatwa should be given and no opinion acted upon, but that of the Great Imam. One should not act contrary to his opinion and in conformity with their opinions (that is of Abu Yusuf and Muhammad) or one of them or that of any other person except when it is expedient as in questions of Muzara'at (cultivation), and although it may have been explained by the learned in religion that the fatwa is in accordance with their opinions (that is of Abu Yusuf and Muhammad): because the Great Imam is the founder of the religion and the first Imam. It is written in Kitabul Kaza of the Bahr-ur-raik that it is not only allowable but incumbent that a fatwa should be given according to the opinion of the Great Imam although it may not be certain upon what authority his saying was based."

V.—Fatwa Sirajia quoted in Rudd-ul-Muhtar has the following passage on the subject:—

"The fatwa should generally be given according to the opinion of Imam Abu Hanifa, then according to the opinion of Abu Yusuf, then Muhammad, then Zafar and then Hasan Ibn Ziad. Some say that when Abu Hanifa is on one side and Abu Yusuf and Muhammad on the other, the Mufti has the option, but the first opinion is more preferable, when the Mufti is not a mujtahid."

Those authorites contradict the rule of interpretation adopted by Mr. Justice Mahmood. But, apart from these authorities, the texts quoted in the earlier part of this judgment show that the majority of the Mahomedan Jurists have adopted the view of Imam Abu Hanifa on the question of the right of a wife to refuse to surrender herself to her husband on the ground of the non-payment of her prompt dower. The quotation from Fatwa i-Alamgiri referred to by Mr. Justice Mahmood itself shows that Abul Qasim Assaffar used to follow the opinion of Imam Abu Hanifa in one respect, namely, as to going on a journey, and the opinions of his two disciples in respect of the right of the refusal of the wife to surrender herself on the ground of the non-payment of dower after consummation of marriage. Had the alleged rule of construction been such as mentioned by Mr. Justice Mahmood, Abul Qasim Assaffar would not have made a sort of compromise by adopting the view of Imam Abu Hanifa in one respect and of his disciples in another. The more orthodox view seems to be that the opinion of Imam Abu Hanifa should always be followed except in certain cases such as muzara'at and muamilat (cultivation and lease) and some others which are expressly mentioned in the books on Muhammdaan Law. Nor would the other writers, some of whom have already been quoted, have ignored the alleged rule of construction and followed Imam Abu Hanifa in preference to his two disciples had there been any such rule. Some, however, say that in case of difference of opinion between him and his two disciples, the Kazi has the option to choose between the two opinions.

The second ground upon which Mr. Justice Mahmood gives preference to the opinions of the two disciples—that based on the analogy of the lien which the vendor possesses upon the goods for the payment of the price before their delivery—may well be questioned. The reasoning implies that dower is the price for consummation of marriage and as soon as the first connubial intercourse has taken place, the right of the wife to withhold her person from her husband is gone because upon the analogy of sale the delivery of goods has taken place. The learned Judge came to that conclusion presumably on the consideration that a wife's right to dower arises on consummation of marriage. But because the right to dower accrues to the wife on consummation of marriage, it does not necessarily follow that dower is the price for the first connubial intercourse. Dower under the Muhammadan Law is not a consideration for marriage nor the price for the first connubial intercourse. Dower is consideration for the enjoyment of the buza (the private parts) as the Sharah Vikaya says.

According to the author of Durr-ul-Mukhtar, dower is the consideration for all or continuous connubial intercourse during the continuance of the married life as appears from the following passage: —

"It is the wife's right to prevent the husband from connubial intercourse, and that which is implied therein, and from journeying with her, even though after connubial intercourse and retirement to which she has consented, because all connubial intercourse has been contracted with her, and the rendering of some does not imperatively require the rendering of the rest. This right is for the purpose of obtaining what has been stated as prompt dower, whether wholly or partly."

Even on the analogy of the delivery of goods in sale, the first connubial intercourse would not be a complete delivery of goods on the authority just cited. The obiter dictum of Mr. Justice Mahmood is neither supported by authority nor by legitimate inference from any principle of the Muhammadan Law. Indeed the opinion of Imam Abu Hanifa has, as has already been shown from quotations from text-books, been followed by the majority of writers on the Muhammadan Law. It may also be interesting to note here that in a case subsequent to that of Abdul Kadir, the High Court at Allahabad itself did not follow the view expressed by Mr. Justice Mahmood in Abdul Kadir v.

Salima (1)—vide Abdul Karim Khan v. Musammat Chotti (10).

We, therefore, hold that, in spite of consummation of marriage, Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam, respondent No. 6, has the right to refuse to surrender her person to her husband so long as her prompt dower remains unpaid.

The next point for consideration in the appeal is whether the question of the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant to his wife is res judicata. The argument for the plaintiff-appellant is that the plea of res judicata is urged on the basis of the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur and that the decree fixed the amount of prompt dower payable to the respondent No. 6. The plaintiff appellant does not deny that the amount awarded by that decree is the amount of the prompt dower due to the respondent No. 6. But under section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act, the Courts in Oudh are forbidden to award a decree for dower or allow it by way of set-off, lien or otherwise, if the amount of dower is excessive and disproportionate to the means of the husband. The decree of the Shahjahanpur Court does not take away the power by the Oudh Courts given to them by section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act. Moreover, the plaintiff-appellant could not raise any plea with reference to section 5 of the Act in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur. In order to appreciate the argument for the plaintiff-appellant, it is necessary to examine section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act. That section is as follows:—

"Where the amount of dower stipulated for in any contract of dower by a Mahomedan is excessive with reference to the means of the husband, the entire sum in the contract shall not be awarded in any suit by decree in favour of the plaintiff, or by allowing it by way of set-off, lien or otherwise to the defendant; but the amount of dower to be allowed by the Court shall be reasonable with reference to the means of the husband and the status of wife."

It is evident from the language of the section that the power of the Oudh Courts to reduce the amount of dower is limited to the case where it is excessive and where it is claimed on the basis of the contract of dower. The provisions of section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act do not apply to a case where the claim to dower is advanced on the basis of a decree of a competent Court. The fact that the plaintiff-appellant could not avail himself of the provisions of the section in the suit brought by his wife in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shahjahanpur would not enable the Oudh Courts to enforce that section, when the matter has passed out of the stage of contract and dower has become a debt of record. We are of opinion that the question of the amount of prompt dower payable by the plaintiff-appellant to his wife is concluded by the decree of the Shahjahanpur Court.

The third point in the appeal requires no discussion in view of our finding on the second.

The last contention for the plaintiff-appellant relates to the jewelry alleged to have been taken away by Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam when going to her mother. The plaintiff appellant examined six witnesses including himself on the point. They were the plaintiff, his brother Waris Ali, his two cousins, Sarfaraz Ali and Altaf Husain, his sister, Musammat Kutban, and a maid-servant, called Musammat Masuman. Waris Ali admits that he was not present at the time when Musammat Bilkis Jahan Begam left her husband's house for Shahjahanpur. Sarfaraz Ali says that the respondent No. 6 at the time of her departure from her husband's house took away 19 ornaments. She had two ornaments on her person already, put on 12 more in the presence of the witness and placed 5 in a tin box. Altaf Husain says that the lady put on her person 16 ornaments in his presence and placed 5 in her box. These latter differ from those mentioned by Sarfaraz Ali. The plaintiff, who was examined after his brother and his two cousins, improved on their story by stating that his wife had a bath before her departure and before going to bathe, she took off her ornaments and gave them to him for cleaning. According to him, his wife put on 19 ornaments and placed 14 in the box. Musammat Kutban gives a much longer list of the ornaments said to have been taken away by the respondent No. 6. Musammat Masuman gives evidence in support of the case for the plaintiff-appellant, but her list is not so large as that given by Musammat Kutban. The evidence of Sarfaraz Ali and Altaf Husain is false on the face of it, as no woman, however closely related, would put on some of the ornaments mentioned by them on her person in the presence of her husband's male relatives. The witnesses for the plaintiff-appellant do not agree as to the number of the ornaments taken away by his wife or the number or names of those worn by her and those placed by her in her box. The evidence has only to be read to be disbelieved. We find that the plaintiff appellant has failed to prove that his wife, when going to her mother at Shahjahanpur, took away jewelry worth Rs. 4,150 belonging to him.

The result of our findings is that the appeal fails on the merits. We modify the decree of the Court below by awarding the plaintiff-appellant a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights conditonal on the payment of Rs. 10,000, the amount of prompt dower due to the respondent No. 6. As, in our opinion, the claim made by the plaintiff-appellant with respect to the ornaments was untrue, we do not consider it necessary to modify the decree of the Court below in so far as it relates to costs. In this Court as the appeal has failed, we direct that the respondents' costs be borne by the appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

JACOB ELIAS SASSOON AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

DOSSA KALIAN—RESPONDENT.

Master and servant—Pleadings—Point pleaded but not put in issue—Evidence adduced on the point—Reliance on the point—Construction of document—Hardship—One part repugnant to another—"Guarantee," meaning of—Facts justifying dismissal—Waiver of right to dismiss—Agreement to supply work during period of service—Provision of dismissal on notice—Wrongful dismissal—Conversion—Measure of damages—Act of God, when an excuse—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 39, 73.

In an action for wrongful dismissal of a servant, the defendant, the master, pleaded fraud, general misconduct, negligence and breach of contract on the part of the servant.

The lower Court framed a general issue as to the justification for dismissal, in which the question of negligence and breach of contract was not separated from the question of fraud and misconduct. The parties, however, produced evidence on all the points. On appeal, the allegations of fraud and misconduct were abandoned by the master and he sought to rely only on negligence and breach of contract by the servant:

Held, that the master was entitled to drop the allegations of fraud and misconduct and rely entirely on negligence and breach of contract.

The object of any system of pleading is that each side may be made fully aware of the questions that are about to be argued in order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues.

No question of surprise arises if a point is covered by the pleadings and evidence is adduced by both sides regarding it, although no issue on the point has been framed by the lower Court.

The ordinary meaning of the word "to guarantee" is to 'promise' or to 'undertake.'

The argument ab inconvenienti is only admissible in the construction of an agreement where the meaning is obscure. A possibility of hardship to one of the parties under an agreement cannot be allowed to obliterate the terms of such agreement.

If there are two clauses or parts of a deed repugnant to each other, the first will be received and the latter rejected unless there is some special reason to the contrary.

When a man chooses to answer for the voluntary act of a third person, he is held to warrant his ability to procure that act.

Parshotamdas Tribhovandas v. Parshotamdas Mangaldas, 21 B. 23, relied upon.

Where the master does not repudiate a contract which has been broken by the servant, but merely intimates that he would claim damages for the breach of contract and allows the servant to continue to perform his part of the contract, such conduct amounts to a waiver of the master's right to repudiate the contract.

Bentsen v. Taylor Sons & Company, (1893) 2 Q. B. D. 274; 63 L. J. Q. B. 15; 4 R. 510; 69 L. T. 487; 42 W. R 8; 7 Asp. M. C. 335, relied upon.

Ordinarily, it is not necessary that a servant should be dismissed by his master for a valid reason; it is sufficient if a valid reason in fact exists, even if the master be not aware of it at the time of the dismissal. But this rule has no application to a case where the master has knowledge of the facts constituting the justification for the dismissal, and deliberately condones them and waives his right to dismiss the servant on account of them.

JACOB ELIAS SASSOON v. DOSSA KALIAN.

An agreement to retain or employ a servant does not involve an undertaking to supply work unless such an undertaking is expressly contained in or must be necessarily inferred from the whole of the terms of the agreement. But a contract, in which the servant is engaged for a definite period and is to be paid by wages estimated with reference to his work, does ordinarily involve an obligation to supply work and this inference is stronger if the contract contains a stipulation providing for dismissal by giving a specified length of notice.

In actions for wrongful dismissal, the general rule is that the plaintiff may recover damages for the whole unexpired period of service. Where, however, it is provided that the agreement may be terminated at an earlier date by giving previous notice, the parties may reasonably be held to have contemplated the time limit of the notice as attaching to any liability for wrongful termination of the agreement. In such cases, the damages for wrongful dismissal should be limited to the period of notice required under the agreement.

Where the law creates a duty and a party is disabled from performing it, without any default of his own, by the act of God, the law will excuse him; but where a party by his own contract creates a duty, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity.

Nicholas v. Marsland, (1875) 10 Ex. D. 255, relied upon.

The ordinary measure of damages in an action for conversion is the market-value of goods at the time of the conversion.

JUDGMENT.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—The first question raised in this appeal is whether the lower Court was wrong in holding that the defendants-appellants, Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co., were not justified in dismissing the plaintiff-respondent, Dossa Kalian, who was their Muccadam under a written agreement on the 30th June 1907.

The facts and circumstances, under which the dismissal was made, are fully given in the judgment of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Crouch, and need not be noticed in detail.

In the intimation of dismissal (Exhibit 87), no reason is given for it, except that "we have decided to work our own Muccadamage from the 1st July and that we shall have no further need of your services." In the plaint para 8, it is alleged that the dismissal, without giving the previous notice of three months as provided for in clause 21 of the plaintiff's agreement, was illegal and wrongful. In reply to this, para. 2 defendants' written statement pleads that "the plaintiff's services were dispensed with without three months' previous notice under clause 23 of the agreement as the plaintiff failed to carry out the terms and conditions of the agreement and that the plaintiff otherwise misconducted himself in the performance of his duties and was, therefore, rightly dismissed without any notice." It appears that originally clause 21 was referred to in this plea, but this was subsequently corrected to clause 23, on the plaintiff's pointing out the mistake in para. 1 of his rejoinder. Exception was also taken to this part of the written statement on the ground that "the defendants' charges are vague and unsupported by specific instance;" and the defendants were accordingly ordered by the Court to file a supplementary written statement specifying how the plaintiff failed to carry out the terms and conditions of the agreement so as to justify the defendants' rescission of the contract. This was filed on the 14th July 1908 and is as follows:—

"Statement of particulars of the breach of agreement and misconduct.

"First.—Knowingly and fraudulently attempting to ship damaged produce in spite of the protest of the Captain of the S. S. "Glenlee" and the orders given by the defendants and thus failing to obtain clean receipts as required by clause 11 of the agreement.

"Second.—Dishonesty in sampling and analysing produce received from up-country constituents, thus necessitating the employment by the defendants of their own men to do this kind of work.

"Third.—Wilful disobedience of orders in refusing to work between 1st and 5th June and 10th and 17th June 1907, thus causing considerable diminution in the export business of the defendants and also considerable damage to the goods lying at Keamari by exposure to rain, etc., and also not attending to his work after the rains with promptitude and despatch."

The issues raised on the question of justification for the plaintiff's dismissal without three months' notice follow the wording of these particulars, with some immaterial variations; and the learned Judge in the Court below, in paras. 19 to 24 of his judgment, holds that none of the allegations of misconduct contained in these particulars have been proved, that there is no foundation for the charges of fraud and dishonesty brought against the plaintiff or for those of wilful disobedience to orders and general neglect, and that there was, consequently, a wrongful dismissal of plaintiff by defendants.

In this appeal, the learned Counsel who appeared for appellants, abandons the allegations of fraud, dishonesty and wilful disobedience to orders relied on in the defendants' statement of particulars, but contends that the plaintiff was justifiably dismissed under clause 23 of his agreement, (1) because he failed to obtain clean receipts for the shipment made on the SS. "Glenlee" in June 1907, as required by clause 11 of the agreement, and (2) because he was negligent in performing his duties under the agreement after the cyclone on the 6th June 1907. It is contended that the plaintiff thereby committed breach of contract entitling the defendants to dismiss him summarily under clause 23 of the agreement.

Mr. Norton for the respondent argues that the defendants cannot now be permitted to drop their allegations of fraud and rely on negligence or breach of contract, not put forward as the primary justification for the dismissal in the defendants' particulars of 14th July 1908. In support of this contention, he has referred us to the cases of Hickson v. Lombard (1), Guthrie v. Abool Mozoffer Noor-ud-din Ahmed (2) and Rajendra Kumar Bose v. Gangaram Koyal (3). All these are, however, cases of suits brought by plaintiffs on allegations of fraud, which stand on a somewhat different footing to that of a defendant in an action of wrongful dismissal, seeking to justify the dismissal on the ground of a breach of contract entitling him to dismiss without notice. This was the plea distinctly raised in para. 2 of the defendants' written statement; and though the particulars allege fraud and dishonesty on the part of the plaintiff, it is clear that the defendants did not thereby intend to abandon that plea and rely entirely on general misconduct, such as would entitle the defendants to dismiss the plaintiff under the general law of master and servant, apart from the terms of the agreement between the parties. At any rate, as regards the first clause of the particulars, which is the one on which appellants mainly rely subject to the dropping of the charge of fraud, there is a distinct allegation of breach of contract by failing to obtain clean receipts for the shipment per SS. "Glenlee," and the fact that this failure is alleged to be due to fraudulent conduct on the part of the plaintiff, which the defendants have failed to establish, does not debar the defendants from relying on the specific breach of contract mentioned in that clause. This is not a case of the allegation of breach of contract being put forward as a proof of fraud or as a subsidiary matter to the charge of fraud: rather, the fraud is subsidiary to the plea of breach of contract, and is at most alleged as an additional justification for the dismissal. Nor [though the issue 1 (a) does not separate the question of breach of contract from the further allegation of misconduct in regard to such breach of contract, as should, we think, have been done] is there any reason to suppose that the parties were misled thereby or on that account did not adduce evidence which they otherwise might have tendered. The evidence on the record is more than ample to consider the question in all its bearings, nor has any material complaint been made by respondent's Counsel to the contrary. There is, therefore, no good ground for holding that the plaintiff-respondent has been in any way taken by surprise, which is the main principle on which cases like those of Hickson v. Lambard (1) rest: and a case more applicable to the present one is that of Sayad Muhammad v. Fatteh Mahomed (4), where the Privy Council, after pointing out that the object of any system of pleading is that each side may be made fully aware of the questions that are about to be argued in order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues, held that certain questions, though not formally stated in the issues, had been sufficiently open upon the proceedings to give each Court a right to form a judgment upon them See also Order VIII, rule 2, of the present Code of Civil Procedure, which, inter alia, requires a defendant to raise by his pleadings all such grounds of defence as if not raised, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise. For these reasons, we overrule Mr. Norton's contention that the defendants are precluded from justifying the plaintiff's dismissal on the ground of breach of contract, apart from fraud or other misconduct. The general negligence relied on is, we think, also sufficiently covered by the third clause of the particulars; and though no specific issue was raised in the lower Court on the point, yet evidence was adduced by both sides regarding it and there is no question of surprise.

(4) 22 C. 324; 22 I. A. 4.

This latter plea of negligence can first be shortly dealt with. It is sufficient to say that there is no evidence which would justify us in differing from the finding of the lower Court on the point. It is, no doubt, true that clean bills of lading were in certain cases only obtained on a letter of indemnity from defendants, such as that given in the case of the "Glenlee" (Exhibit 169) and that defendants had to pay over $2\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs for allowances on account of inferiority of quality and damage on shipments in July, August and September 1907: but there is no evidence which establishes that this was due to plaintiff's negligence at any rate to an extent which would justify his dismissal on that ground. On the contrary, the evidence of Exhibits 93 and 270 tends to show that the loss was mainly, if not entirely, incurred in respect of shipments with which the plaintiff had nothing to do. The defendants' letter of 20th June 1907, to their London branch (Exhibit 91) also goes against them as it makes no imputation against the plaintiff, but rather puts the blame on the Steamer Captains or owners for unnecessarily refusing to sign clean bills of ladings. The defendants' letters of 17th, 25th and 28th June to the plaintiff (Exhibits 74, 81 and 85), no doubt, do complain of his delay and negligence, but the cyclone and subsequent rain undoubtedly caused exceptional difficulities: and in the absence of more specific and reliable evidence in support of this charge against the plaintiff than that which is afforded by Mr. Booker's testimony (Exhibit 17), we do not consider it in any way substantiated.

Then, was the plaintiff's failure to get clean receipts for the produce shipped on the "Glenlee" a breach of contract on his part, entitling the defendants to dismiss the plaintiff without giving him the three months' notice specified in clause 21 of the agreement? In our opinion, reading clauses 11 and 23 together, we think the answer to this is in the affirmative.

Under clause 11, it is provided, without any reservation, that "the Muccadams" (i.e, the plaintiff) "guarantee to bring to the merchants" (i.e, the defendants) "clean receipts for all produce delivered by them either on board the steamer or to any third party." Mr. Norton contended that the word "guarantee" shows that this was only intended to be a "contract of indemnity" as defined in section 124 of the Indian Contract Act under which the plaintiff became liable for any subsequent loss due to the non-production of clean receipts. But the word "guarantee," which in strict law is only used in relation to the default of a person other than the promisor, is admittedly inappropriate for this purpose. The agreement is one obviously prepared by, or with the assistance of, a legal draftsman: and if it had been intended that the plaintiff should not undertake, as an essential term or condition of the contract, to obtain clean receipts, but only to bear any loss resulting from his failure to obtain clean receipts, this would presumably have been expressed in clear terms. Thus, in the same clause 11, there is a provision under which the Muccadams "agree to make good to" the defendants, any loss arising in a certain case. Similarly under clause 10, relating to the "home guarantee", which was modified by the renewal on the 7th May 1907, it is clearly provided that any loss arising from plaintiff's failure under his "guarantee must be paid for" by him; while under clause 12, he is "responsible for" any difference of weight to the extent mentioned. There is no reason why some such expression should not have been used in the first sentence of clause 11 if it had only been intended to be a contract of indemnity. The word "guarantee" is also used in clauses 13 and 15 without any indication that it is intended to denote a contract of indemnity only. Nor is there anything in the underlying correspondence (Exhibits 2 to 29) which shows that such was the intention of the parties. We think, therefore, that the word must be construed as merely equivalent to 'promise' or 'undertake' as is its ordinary meaning in a Charter Party (See Straud's Judicial Dictionary, 2nd Edition, Volume II, page 842).

The argument that the defendants would not be prejudiced by the failure to produce clean receipts, unless there was some resulting loss, is not entitled to much weight, in face of the absence of any words making such loss, and not the failure to obtain clean receipts, the actual subject-matter of the undertaking. It is quite probable that defendants wished to avoid the trouble and risk entailed by dirty receipts, without reference to the question of ultimate loss. No doubt, the plaintiff might conceivably be prevented from bringing clean receipts by circumstances beyond his control, e. g., the unreasonable refusal of a Captain to give them (Cf. Exhibit 53) but this is not sufficient to outweigh the considerations already mentioned on which our construction of the clause is based. The principle that applies is that when a man chooses to answer for the voluntary act of a third person, he is held to warrant his ability to procure that act—See Pollock's Commentary on the Indian Contract Act, 2nd Edition, page 255, and the case of Parshotamdas Tribhovandas v. Parshotamdas Mangaldas (5). The argument ab inconvenienti is only admissible in construction where the meaning is obscure (Cf. Hardcastles' "Statutory Law", 3rd Edition, page 101): and a possibility of hardship to the plaintiff under his agreement cannot be allowed to obliterate the terms of such agreement. If the plaintiff wished to avoid the possibility of such hardship, he should have seen that an exception was inserted accordingly.

Clause 23 runs as follows:—"In the event of the Muccadams failing to carry out any of the terms and conditions of this agreement, the merchants shall be at liberty, if they think fit, to determine this agreement at any time." This clause is about as wide as it possibly could be and a mere failure by plaintiff to carry out any of his promises renders the agreement terminable thereunder. Clause 11, as already shown, contains an unqualified promise by the plaintiff to bring the defendants clean receipts: and his failure to do so in regard to the produce shipped on the "Glenlee," therefore, did, in our opinion, render the agreement terminable under clause 23.

Having regard to the wording of this clause 23, it is unnecessary to consider whether there was a refusal to perform the promise to bring clean receipts within the meaning of section 39 of the Indian Contract Act or whether the obligation to bring clean receipts should be considered to "go to the root of the contract," (Cf., the cases of Sultan Chand v. Schiller (6) and Rash Behary Shah v. Nrittya Gopal Nundy (7). As pointed out in Pollock's Indian Contract Act, 2nd Edition, page 217, "parties can undoubtedly make any term essential or non-essential; they can provide that failure to perform it shall discharge the other party from any further duty of performance on his part, or shall not so discharge him, but shall only entitle him to compensation in damages for the particular breach." In the present case, for the reasons given above, the mere failure of plaintiff to bring clean receipts, as required by clause 11, gave the defendants a right to put an end to the contract: and even though this may go beyond the terms of section 39 of the Indian Contract Act, it is valid by virtue of the saving in section 1 regarding "any incident of any contract not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act."

At the same time, there is nothing in clause 23 to exclude the ordinary law as to election to rescind for breach of contract: on the contrary, this is implied by the words "shall be at liberty, if they think fit." It becomes, therefore, necessary to see whether (as alleged by plaintiff's Counsel) the defendants waived their right to put an end to the contract on account of the plaintiff's failure to obtain clean receipts in respect of the "Glenlee" shipments. It appears from (Exhibit 190) that the S. S. "Glenlee" was at Karachi from the 11th to the 23rd June. On the 13th June, a survey was held at the request of the steamer owners on the condition of 2008 bags shipped by defendants and the surveyor recommended that they should be discharged and good bags be shipped instead (Exhibit 180). On the 14th June, defendants applied to the Port Trust Authorities for permission to discharge the same and send a fresh cargo accordingly (Exhibit 129). They also apologised to the Steamer owners for not having taken the necessary steps earlier. The discharge appears to have actually taken place on Saturday, the 15th June (Exhibit D. l. 22). On the 17th June, some more bags were rejected as containing damaged wheat and had to be re-landed (Exhibit D. l. 82 and Exhibit E.), and on the same date, defendants wrote to plaintiff a letter in which they gave him notice that should any claim be made by the Steamer owners for demurrage, they would look to him to make good such loss, as the delay was stated to be due to his still sending damaged wheat for shipment (Exhibit 74). To this plaintiff replied on the 18th, repudiating his liability. On the 25th June, defendants again wrote to plaintiff complaining as to his delay in loading and expressing their dissatisfaction with the manner in which he was conducting his business (Exhibit 81). No reference is, however, made in this to the question of clean receipts. The plaintiff replied the same day giving explanations for the delay, etc, and repudiating liability for demurrage or any other loss arising out of the non-fulfilment of any shipment or other contracts of defendants (Exhibit 82). On the 27th June, defendants gave a letter of indemnity to the owners of the S. S. "Glenlee" in consideration of their granting them clean Bills of Lading for their shipment by that steamer (Exhibits 160 and 169). On the 28th June, defendants replied to the plaintiff's letter of 25th June saying that his explanation is by no means satisfactory and making comments thereon (Exhibit 85). This letter contains the following paragraph:—"We have further to complain of your having failed to bring to us clean receipts for our produce shipped by S. S. "Glenlee" and S. S. "Silverdale" in accordance with the terms of your agreement with us, and hereby give you notice that we shall hold you responsible for any loss we may sustain thereby." On the 29th June, plaintiff replied, alleging as regards the failure to get clean receipts, that he was not to blame for this (Exhibit 86) and on the 30th June he was dismissed, as already stated. It also appears that, though the defendants' Manager, Mr. Booker, must have been aware of the breach of contract by failure to obtain receipts for shipments by the S. S. "Glenlee" from about the 17th June (Cf. Exhibits D. and 74), or at any rate the 22nd June, when he says he personally saw the Captain about the shipping of damaged wheat (Exhibit 176 line 435), yet he took no steps before the 30th June to treat the contract as at an end, but on the contrary continued to use the plaintiff's services as Muccadum as if the contract between them still subsisted. Mr. Booker in fact candidly admits in his deposition that though "I made up my mind after "Glenlee" that I would dismiss him, I had to wait until the June shipments were complete" (Exhibit 176 line 501). This is corroborated by Exhibits 187 to 190 which show that the plaintiff received shipping order on the 17th June for steamers which were loaded towards the end of June. The plaintiff was in fact virtually told by the defendants, that, though he had broken the contract by his failure to bring clean receipts, yet he was still bound by the contract and they would only hold him responsible for any loss they might sustain thereby. This is clear waiver of their right to put an end to the contract and amounts to an "acquiescence in its continuance," within the meaning of section 39 of the Indian Contract Act. The case is somewhat similar to that of Bentsen v. Taylor Sons & Co. (8), where the Court of appeal held that the conduct of the defendants in not repudiating a contract which had been broken, but merely intimating that they would claim damages for the breach of contract and allowing the plaintiff to continue to perform his part of the contract, amounted to a waiver of their right to repudiate the contract. We hold, therefore, that the defendants cannot justify the summary dismissal of the plaintiff by his breach of contract in failing to obtain clean receipts.

The defendants' Counsel relied on the rule (as stated in Macdonnell's Law of Master and Servant, 2nd edition, page 184) that "it is not necessary that a servant should be dismissed by his master for valid reason; it is sufficient if a valid reason in fact exists, even if the master be not aware of it at the time of dismissal." This doctrine is also stated by Macdonnell [Loc. Cit. footnote (s)] not to be limited to cases in which the master had no knowledge of the facts constituting the justification at the time of the dismissal; but even so, it obviously has no application to a case where the master has knowledge of such facts and deliberately condones them or waives his right to dismiss the servant on account of them. In this particular case, there can be little doubt that the main reason which induced Mr. Booker to dismiss the plaintiff was his desire to work departmentally instead of through a Muccadum, to which arrangement he had been opposed from the commencement. The correspondence of defendants which has been put in clearly points to this, and Mr. Booker deposes that he had from the beginning determined to work departmentally as soon as he could and that he renewed the agreement in May 1907 only because they were not then ready to work departmentally (Exhibit 176, lines 160-164). We also agree with the view taken in paras. 12 and 13 of Mr. Crouch's judgment as to the arrangements made by the defendants in May and June with the intention of eventually carrying on the work departmentally. In the circumstances, some suspicion necessarily attaches to the evidence in regard to the plaintiff's alleged neglect of duty and supports the finding already given that this ground for his dismissal is not made out. And as the other ground relied on was waived by the defendants, we concur with the lower Court in holding that there was a wrongful dismissal of plaintiff by defendants.

In view of this, it is unnecessary to consider the contention of respondent's Counsel that even under clause 23, three months' notice is necessary (as under clause 21) to terminate the agreement: but we may say that we do not agree with this construction of the agreement. The case is quite different from that of African Association, Limited, v. Allen(9), where the agreement contained a clause for summary dismissal distinct from the particular clause under which the dismissal actually took place. It is true that clause 18 contains a provision for summary dismissal, which is unnecessary in view of the general terms of clause 23, but this is explicable by the fact that clause 18 relates to an act outside the particular duties of the plaintiff as a Muccadum, for which it may have been considered desirable to make special provision and in any case this is not sufficient to justify the construction sought to be put on clause 23 by Mr. Norton.

Coming to the question of damages, the first point for determination is the period in respect of which the loss caused to plaintiff and the compensation for the same, should be calculated. The general rule is that in actions for wrongful dismissal, the plaintiff may recover the wages for the whole unexpired period of service, including wages due at the date of dismissal (Halsbury's "Laws of England", Volume X, section 624 at page 339): and the lower Court has on this principle held that the plaintiff is entitled, under section 73 of the Contract Act, to such compensation as represents the loss caused to him by the defendants' failure to retain plaintiff in their employment until the end of the 12 months of the agreement (para. 25 of the judgment.) Admittedly, however, the claim of Rs. 30,000 for damages in para. 17 of the plaint is based on his probable profits if he had worked for the three months following his dismissal; and though there is nothing in the plaint, which clearly limits his claim in that way, yet the reference to the termination of the agreement without due notice, indicates a restriction of the damages to those sustained through his having been dismissed without three months' previous notice, as required by clause 21 of the agreement. This is corroborated by the notice of 11th March 1903 (Exhibit 157), where complaint is made of the wrongful termination of the agreement "without giving our client three months' previous notice as provided for, at a time and season when our client could have made large profits out of the business and our client estimates the loss thereby sustained at the lowest at Rs. 30,000." Under section 73 of the Contract Act, the plaintiff is entitled to compensation for any loss or damage caused by his summary dismissal (a) which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such dismissal or (b) which the parties knew, when they made the contract, to be likely to result therefrom. As pointed out in Pollock's Indian Contract Act, 2nd edition, pages 312-313, the latter mode of estimating damages is generally the simpler and more easily ascertainable of the two; and in the present case we think that the clause requiring three months' previous notice does supply a time limit which the parties may reasonably be held to have contemplated as attaching to any liability for wrongful termination of the agreement. This is borne out by the fact just mentioned that the plaintiff himself adopts this time limit in estimating his damages. The fact that the plaintiff was not dismissed under clause 21 is immaterial. And though there is no invariable rule that damages for wrongful dismissal should be limited to the value of the notice lost, see Maw v. Jones (10), this is, in our opinion, clearly a case in which having regard to the length of the notice and the other circumstances attending the plaintiff's employment and dismissal, the three months' notice affords a proper measure of the damages to be awarded, so far as regards the period for which compensation should be given. Mr. Pugh contends that as clause 21 also gave the defendants the right to "stop deliveries" to the plaintiff at once, this also is a condition attaching to the liability for wrongful dismissal, so that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages, except in regard to work actually done by him prior to his dismissal This point is considered and overruled in paragraph 25 of the lower Court's judgment. Without endorsing all the grounds on which that ruling is based, we think that the contention is clearly inadmissible. No doubt, an agreement to retain and employ does not involve an undertaking to supply work unless such an undertaking is expressly contained in or must be necessarily inferred from the whole of the terms. But a contract, such as this, in which the servant is engaged for a definite period and is to be paid by wages estimated with reference to his work, does ordinarily involve an obligation to supply work and this inference is stronger if the contract contains a stipulation (as does the present one) providing for dismissal by giving a specified length of notice (see Mayne on Damages, 7th Edition, page 243). The exact meaning and validity of the stipulation allowing defendants to "stop deliveries" in such a case is uncertain: but so far as it may be repugnant to the implied obligation to supply work until the expiry of the period of the agreement or of the three months' notice, it would, I think, probably be held of no legal effect under the general rule that "if there are two clauses or parts of a deed repugnant to each other, the first will be received and the latter rejected, unless there is some special reason to the contrary" (Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume X, section 759, at page 456). But, for the purposes of the present case, it is sufficient to say that such a restriction on the ordinary measure of damages in such a case cannot reasonably be held to have been in contemplation of the parties. The whole effect of the provision for three months' notice is nullified if the defendants could stop supplying him with work by which to earn his remuneration during that period; and the loss of such remuneration is clearly loss in respect of which compensation is recoverable under section 73 of the Contract Act.

The next question arising is how the compensation for plaintiff's loss of remuneration in respect of the three months of July, August and September 1907 should be calculated. Leaving aside for the present the bags in stock on the 30th June, in respect of which the plaintiff had already done some work, we have to consider first the general claim of Rs. 30,000 in respect of new stock shipped during those three months, which has been awarded him by the lower Court. No exception was taken by appellants' Counsel to the calculation of the learned Judge under which it is held that plaintiff would have been entitled to Rs. 52,730 less his actual expenses in preparing and shipping the 4,60,216 bags, representing the new stock shipped during that period. The point at issue is what deduction should be made on account of such actual expenses. The learned Judge has taken Rs. 5 per 100 bags as a fair average of such expenses and deducted Rs. 23,010 accordingly, as well as a sum of Rs. 1,500 on account of the costs of supervising staff at Rs. 500 per mensem, or Rs. 24,510 in all, leaving plaintiff a net profit of Rs. 28,220. The extra Rs. 1,780 has been awarded as due in respect of bags wholly or partly prepared for shipment, but not shipped by the 30th September.

In arriving at this estimate of Rs. 5 per 100 bags, the learned Judge proceeds on certain evidence as to the actual cost to defendants of carrying out the work which the plaintiff would otherwise have done and the actual cost to Ralli Brothers of doing similar work during the three months in question. The figures, on which his conclusions as to such actual cost are based have been attacked as erroneous, and this point will be considered later on. A more important point is whether such evidence affords a proper, or at any rate the best, method of estimating the expenses which should be deducted. As to this, we agree entirely with the contention of Mr. Pugh that a more reliable estimate would be obtained from evidence showing what the plaintiff's actual expenses and profits were during the whole or part of his employment prior to his dismissal, and that such evidence, if available, should have been adduced by the plaintiff in order to put the Court in a proper position to determine the question of damages. In support of this, reference may be made to the case of Devonald v. Rosser & Sons (11), where in a case of dismissal of a workman paid by piece work, the measure of what was a reasonable amount of compensation was held to be the average amount of the workman's earnings previously to his dismissal. But quite apart from any such authority, it is obvious that evidence as to the actual expenses and earnings of the plaintiff affords a much safer basis to go on than evidence of the expenses incurred by the defendants under different conditions and still more than evidence of the expenses of other firms in Karachi, whose arrangements and circumstances may differ considerably.

The plaintiff admittedly kept a set of account books at Kiamari from which full details as to his earnings and expenses could be collected, but the books in question have not been produced, and the plaintiff says that he cannot tell how much profit he made (Exhibit 199 line 375). The excuse given for the non-production of these accounts is that the roznama and khata, which were the principal books, were missing, when the plaintiff took inspection of them; and it is suggested by Mr. Norton that they were purposely removed and suppressed by Mr. Booker, or one of his subordinates, for the purpose of preventing the plaintiff using them. In support of this, reliance is placed on Exhibits 98, 99, 112, 117, 120, 121, 122, regarding the breaking of the seal which was placed on the cupboard containing the Kiamari books on the 30th June and the removal of the cupboard to the defendants' town office on the 6th August. But there is no evidence that the seal was in fact broken by one of defendants' employees or that the missing books were removed by or at the instance of Mr. Booker. The suggestion that the seal had been broken by one of defendants' men was at once denied (Exhibit 113), and Mr. Booker deposes that the plaintiff's men had access to the books, while the key of the cupboard was in his possession (Exhibit 177, line 515). This is to some extent corroborated by the witness, Narayen, who says that after the 30th June he had to be in the defendants' office making out an account and he "may have had to refer to the Kiamari books" (Exhibit N. line 105). In any case, there is no evidence that the two books were missing when the cupboard was opened and inspected on the 7th August, nor does the correspondence, which plaintiff had with defendants prior to the suit, contain any complaint as to the books being missing. It is also clear that the defendants gave the plaintiff every facility for inspecting the books. Plaintiff says (Exhibit 199, line 616):— "We went on taking inspection for 2 months and we got all the information we required." The witness Chutturbuj, who did the main inspecting work, says (Exhibit 219, line 85): "I was inspecting the books at the office for 6 or 7 weeks. The books required for reference were all there except those containing entries with regard to Palls." He further deposes that the "general expense" account book, which presumably shows the items of plaintiff's expenses, was among the books: and, when questioned by the Court regarding any books being missing, says that this book and the book containing a list of people on daily wages "appear missing," since he inspected the books at defendants' office. This evidence certainly does not corroborate the plaintiff's statement (Exhibit 199 line 377); that they could not find the roznama and khata when they had inspection; on the contrary, it shows that there was a book from which plaintiff's expenses could be ascertained. It is also difficult to believe that if those two books had been missing, the plaintiff would not have made a specific complaint about it in his correspondence with the defendants, which shows him to have been far from backward in making complaints as to his treatment by the defendants. The inspection of the Kiamari books appears from Exhibits 126, 127 and 132 to have taken place in about November 1907, and even as late as the 27th January 1908 (Exhibit 149). the plaintiff merely complains of the books being handled by defendants' office in the absence of any representative of his, and of the seal of the cupboard having been removed, and not of any books being missing. Again, it is very improbable that, if Mr. Booker had wanted to do away with evidence which might assist the plaintiff in advancing his claim against the defendants, he would have suppressed only the two books which might have been useful to defendants and left all the books required by plaintiff, for making out his claim in detail: the probabilities are rather in favour of plaintiff having suppressed those two books. In view of all this, we think that there is no foundation for the charge now brought against Mr. Booker, but not apparently put to him when he was examined in Court; and that all the surrounding circumstances point to the evidence in question having been deliberately withheld by the plaintiff.

That being so, there is legitimate ground for drawing the presumption mentioned in illustration (g) to section 114 of the Evidence Act, viz., that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it. The presumption that his Kiamari accounts would show that he was not in fact making a profit of Rs. 10,000 a month out of his contract, which is the rate at which his claim for Rs. 30,000 works out, is borne out by the figures given by the witness Chatturbuj (Exhibit 219) as to plaintiff's expenses on Muccadamage as shown in his kothi accounts. These figures were not given by him in examination-in-chief, but obtained in cross-examination, and they do not appear to have been checked or audited in any way. And though he says they include all that was spent on the Muccadami account, this does not really appear to be the case. Thus he admits that the pay of Walji, who was a superivsor on Rs. 100 a month employed by plaintiff (Exhibit 199 lines 392, 43), has not been debited to this account, nor did it contain all the sewing charges and the cost of gunny bags bought at Kiamari (Exbibit 199 lines 679, 685). It is also possible that money expended from cash advances received from the defendants on account would not be shown in the kothi accounts. The figures given, cannot, therefore, be accepted as absolutely reliable. But taking them for what they are worth, they show that plaintiff's profits during May and June could not have exceeded Rs. 2,147 and 4,672 respectively. His profits under the one anna and 5 pies rate of commission were, no doubt, larger, but we are not concerned with these. Accordingly, there is every reason to believe that plaintiff's Kiamari books would have shown that his profits were considerably lower than he asserts, and that the damages claimed at Rs. 10,000 a month are excessive.

Another thing, which goes against this claim is the plaintiff's estimate of the expenses which he would incur (Exhibit 202), viz., Rs. 9-6 per 100 bags or 9 pies per cwt. This was given by him to defendants in January 1906 when the negotiations were going on about his employment, and constitutes an admission by him on which the defendants are entitled to rely. It is not, of course, conclusive against him, but it is certainly entitled to weight, and cannot properly be ignored as it has been by the lower Court. To get rid of the effect of this admission, it was open to the plaintiff to adduce evidence showing what in fact were his actual expenses, but, as already stated, he has deliberately refrained from doing so. The plaintiff's bare statement that his expenses amounted to Rs. 4 or 4-8 per 100 bags, including every thing except palls, (Exhibit 199, line 245) is insufficient to rebut the inference arising from this admission: and his further statement that he considered that 50 per cent.

of what was paid should be profit (ib, line 365) requires to be effective, some evidence that his profits actually were at that rate. In the absence of such evidence, we think that more weight must be given to this admission than to ex parte statements made after the suit was filed, and that special consideration must be given to it n estimating the damages due to plaintiff. t may, no doubt, be the case that plaintiff purposely over-estimated his probable expenses (Cf. Exhibit 36), but there is nothing which indicates that the excess was anything like what he now asserts. Even with an expense of 9 pies per cwt, the plaintiff would make a profit of 18 per cent. and it is extremely unlikely that a firm like the defendants, with its Bombay experience and the inquiries made from Karachi (Cf. Exhibits 11-A to 15), would make an arrangement which gave the plaintiff a profit of 50 per cent. or over, even at the reduced commission of 11 pies.

The rate of Rs. 5 per 100 bags allowed by the learned Judge is under 5 pies a cwt., so that, this actually gives the plaintiff a profit of more than 50 per cent. This rate is based mainly on the evidence of Apostolides (Exhibit 159) as to the cost to Ralli Brothers of doing the work in June to September 1907. But it is to be noted that the figures he gives of the bags handled and actual expense during the three months (lines 30-40) work out to over Rs. 5 per 100 bags, viz., Rs. 5-4-0 for July, Rs. 5-15-0 for August and Rs. 7-3-10 for September. It also seems that the cost of sampling, patching (annas 7 to Rs. 1-5-0 per 100 bags, line 52) and removing (annas 12 per 100 bags, line 80) is not included in his rates. But in any case, as already noted, such evidence is a very unreliable method of estimating the plaintiff's probable expenses, and we do not think that any deduction as to the latter can be safely based on it.

The expenses actually incurred by defendants in doing the work departmentally during the three months, no doubt, afford a more trustworthy basis. But, unfortunately, the exact amount of such expenses is in dispute and uncertain. The learned Judge has taken Rs. 30,348-1 as the cost to defendants of carrying out the work which the plaintiff would otherwise have done This is based on the Commissioner's report, Exhibit 96, where, after an examination of the defendants' account books, he holds that that amount is shown to have been spent on (1) emptying, (2) weighing, (3) piling, (4) sewing, (5) mixing, (6) sampling and (7) loading at Kiamari during the months of July, August and September 1907, and Rs. 16,254-8-10 on "the rest of the work at Kiamari during the same period" This is in accordance with the Court's order of 5th April 1909 and assumes that the expenses that would have fallen on the plaintiff are all covered by the seven heads mentioned. But this is by no means certain, and, in our opinion, it would have been better if the Commissioner had been asked to ascertain and report what proportion of the total expenditure was properly debitable to Muccadumage charges, which the plaintiff would have had to bear, instead of tying down the Commissioner to specified heads. In the circumstances, we do not think, defendants are now precluded from contesting the lower Court's view that only Rs. 30,343 are so debitable. But we are not in a position to say with any accuracy what amount should be debited, though we think that some of the charges included in "the rest of the work at Kiamari" must probably be debitable. For instance, the charges for "unloading" shown in the summary of defendants' accounts (Exhibit Q) would seem to have been wrongly excluded, so also the plaintiff would be liable for at any rate some of the "jamadari" under clause 9 of the agreement. This summary was attacked by Mr. Norton as not being properly proved, but we see no sufficient reason to doubt its general correctness as an abstract from the defendants' accounts without necessarily relying on the particular amounts entered in it. The first portion of it also agrees substantially with the figures contained in the Commissioner's report, Exhibit 96, which deals with the same accounts, as will be seen by comparing the figures for the seven heads already referred to and the totals. The only large difference is as regards the sewing charges, which are some Rs. 1,400 higher in Exhibit Q, apparently owing to the sewing of tarpaulins and ground-palls being excluded in the other account (see Exhibit O, line 39). Accordingly, it may be taken that the defendants' expenses, which would otherwise have been borne by plaintiff, amounted to some figure between Rs. 30,348 and Rs. 46,662: but the exact amount is not ascertainable from the evidence on the record. It may be noted that, even taking the expenses at Rs. 30,348, the rate per 100 bags works out to Rs. 6-8-0 and not "slightly over Rs. 5 per 100 bags," as stated in the lower Court's judgment.

In the circumstances, we think that the proper basis for estimating the plaintiff's probable expenses is the rate of 9 pies per cwt., which he himself put forward as a true one (though, no doubt, a rough one) in the negotiations prior to the agreement. If it errs unduly in favour of the defendants, he is himself to blame for this, by his conduct in refraining from adducing evidence as to his actual expenses and profits prior to his dismissal. It is in his favour, so far as it is under the rate of 10 pies a cwt., which is the defendants' estimate of working departmentally (Exhibits 32 and 49) and which is nearly what it did actually cost the defendants, taking their expenses at the amount of Rs. 46,662. It is also to be borne in mind that in these three months, there was a scarcity of labour and enhanced wages had to be paid (Exhibit 159, line 90, Exhibit 199, line 247). At the rate of 9 pies per cwt., the expenses in regard to the 9,20,432 cwts. in respect of which the payment of Rs. 52,720 is due, come to Rs. 43,145, leaving a balance of Rs. 9,585 in the plaintiff's favour. This gives him an average profit of nearly Rs. 3,200 a month, which substantially agrees with his average profits for each of the month of May and June 1907, viz., Rs. 3,400. The plaintiff is clearly not entitled to anything in respect of goods not actually shipped by the end of September, although partly prepared for shipment as his commission was not earned until the goods were actually shipped (see clauses 8, 9 and 17 of the agreement) and the case must be treated as if his services had been rightly dispensed with on the 30th September. The remainder of the claim to damages for wrongful dismissal relates to the 2,55,285 cwts. in stock on the 30th June 1907, in respect of which the plaintiff claims Rs. 14,625-11-3 at the full remuneration of 11 pies a cwt. [para. 10 of the plaint and Schedule (G).] The further expenditure which plaintiff would have had to incur before the goods were actually shipped, so as to earn his Muccadamage commission, must, of course, be deducted in estimating his actual loss in respect of these goods and plaintiff's full claim was rightly disallowed by the learned Judge. On the other hand, the deduction of Rs. 1-4-0 per 100 bags on account of plaintiff's further expenditure on the pucca bags, was accepted by the appellants' Counsel, and there is no ground for thinking this to be excessive, especially as plaintiff in Exhibit 202 puts down the costs of loading at Re. 1 per 100 bags and this is corroborated by the Commissioner's report, Exhibit 96, which shows that the cost of loading 6,42,015 bags in July, August and September 1907 came to Rs. 7,044-6-5 or a little over Re. 1 per 100 bags. We accordingly confirm the finding of the lower Court that Rs. 5,108 are due to the plaintiff in respect of the pucca bags. As to the kutcha bags, the learned Judge's finding that plaintiff had expended annas 8 per 100 bags on them may be accepted (not being contested or shown to be erroneous), but his deduction must be increased on our finding that the total cost to plaintiff of preparing the goods for shipment must be taken to have been at the rate of Rs. 9-6-0 and not Rs. 5 per 100 bags. The amount to be deducted would, therefore, be $\frac{1,51,249 \textit{ plus } 3,963}{2 \textit{ by } 100}$ by Rs. 8-14-0$=\frac{1,55,212}{200}$ by $\frac{142}{16}$=Rs. 6,887. The difference between this and the Rs. 8,892 due on shipment is Rs. 2,005 and we accordingly reduce the Rs. 5,400 awarded by the learned Judge to this amount.

The total amount awarded to plaintiff as damages for his wrongful dismissal came to Rs. 9,585 plus 5,108 plus 2,005 equal to Rs. 16,693 as against his claim for Rs. 44,625 and the Rs. 40,508 allowed by the lower Court. Mr. Norton did not dispute that interest could not be awarded prior to the suit in respect of the claim for damages, and the order allowing interest on the amount of damages from the 1st October 1907 to date of suit is, therefore, reversed.

We now come to the various items of account in dispute between the parties. The first is as to the rate at which the bill for April 1907 is payable, viz., at 1 anna and 5 pies as under the agreement, or at 1 anna as Mr. Booker asserts. There is no doubt that the modification of the rate to 1 anna was discussed between the parties, but we concur with the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in holding that there is no sufficient evidence to establish that he actually agreed to the rate being reduced. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to the Rs. 6,133-13-9 claimed by him for that month. His claim for the months of May and June must also be allowed, as Mr. Pugh did not contest the finding of the learned Judge in para. 34 of his judgment as to the difference in dispute of Rs. 114-5 3.

The next item in dispute is the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 3,600 (originally Rs 6,000) as the value of 600 ground palls belonging to him which were made use of by the defendants (see Schedule H to the plaint and para. 5 of respondent's cross-objections). The defendants admit to have taken over 25, for which they have allowed the plaintiff Rs. 125 (Exhibit 153 A). The learned Judge in para. 35 of his judgment holds that on the 30th June 1907, there were about 550 palls for which plaintiff could reasonably have asked to be paid, and has allowed Rs. 2-8-0 each for 525 of these, and annas 4 each for 50, plus Rs. 125 admitted by the defendants, in all Rs. 1,450. The evidence, however, on which these conclusions are based is certainly not such as can be regarded as affording very reliable data for the figures arrived at. The plaintiff's own statement that on the 30th June he had 600 or 700 serviceable palls, in addition to old ones, cannot be relied on in the absence of corroboration from his account books or other documents. Nor in the absence of similar corroboration, is Blackwell's statement as to there being 700 or 800 in April (Exhibit 176) more reliable: he was discharged from the defendants' service for acting contrary to instructions (line 132) and may be biased against them. The supposed corroboration afforded by a comparison of Exhibit 216 and defendants' answer to interrogatory No. 6 of 11th August 1908, is somewhat indefinite, though, no doubt, it does support the plaintiff's estimate of 600. The proper way in which to prove the number of palls left behind and their value was from the plaintiff's account books, as these admittedly contained entries with regard to palls and the purchase of bags for making them, and there was also a book kept specially for ground palls (Exhibit 199, lines 659-701, Exhibit 216, lines 87-89). But, as in the other case, these have "mysteriously disappeared." For the reasons already given, there can be little doubt that the plaintiff has deliberately kept back this source of information, and he has not even produced the notes and calculations made by his clerk, Chutturbuj, as to the number of palls supplied by plaintiff (Exhibit 199, line 580; Exhibit 219, lines 90-97). We must, therefore, presume that his books would not support the claim made by the plaintiff and that it is exaggerated. It has, however, been considerably reduced by the learned Judge, and, having regard to all the circumstances, we do not think any sufficient ground is shown for interfering with the amount of Rs. 1,450 allowed by him on this account.

The defendant's Counsel contended that nothing should be allowed on account of these palls, as they were the property of defendants under clause 15 of the agreement. Such palls cannot, however, reasonably be held to constitute "contents of the godowns" within the meaning of that clause; and defendants themselves have put a contrary construction on this clause by their admission that Rs. 125 are due to the plaintiff for 25 palls.

The cross-objection taken to the reduction of the claim in respect of the other items specified in Schedule H to the plaint from Rs. 210-12 to Rs. 150 was not pressed at the hearing of the appeal.

The only remaining part of the plaintiff's claim, apart from interest, is that for extra work done by plaintiff in re-drying and re-bagging on account of damage done by the cyclone of June 1907. The lower Court has allowed Rs. 500 as a "fair allowance" on this account, on the ground that "the extraordinary damage caused by the cyclone was not in contemplation of the parties when they made the agreement and not provided for." But there had been previous cyclones in Karachi (e. g., two in 1902, see Gazetteer of the Province of Sind, Volume A, pages 7, 8) and there is nothing to justify the assumption that the possibility of one happening again was not in contemplation of the parties when they made the agreement. If the plaintiff wanted to exempt himself from liability for extra expense caused by a cyclone or other "act of God", this should have been specially provided for in the agreement; and the case falls under the general rule that "when the law creates a duty, and the party is disabled from performing it, without any default of his own, by the act of God, the law will excuse him; but where a party by his own contract creates a duty, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity" [per Mellish, L. J., Nicholas v. Marsland (12).] We, therefore, disallow this sum of Rs. 500.

As regards the plaintiff's claim to interest, that in regard to the damages awarded him has already been dealt with. As regards the Muccadumage bills for April, May and June 1907, it was the duty of the plaintiff, under clause 17 of the agreement, to submit his accounts first to the defendants, and the practice, assented to by the plaintiff, appears to have been for the defendants to make an advance of a substantial amount against any such bill and to settle it finally within a month or so (cf., Schedule A to the plaint and Exhibit 153A which, e.g., shows the bill for March 1907 as settled on the 1st May). His bill for April was submitted on May 16th (Exhibits 194 and 203); and as the defendants have been held to have wrongly disputed the amount claimed by the plaintiff at the rate of 1 anna, 5 pies a cwt. and there was no sufficient excuse for the non-payment of the full amount at any rate by the 1st July 1907, we think interest at the rate of 6 per cent., on the excess due to the plaintiff from that date to the date of suit has been rightly awarded by the lower Court, (para. 39 of the judgment). The case is, however, different as regards the bills for May and June. These are not shown to have been submitted by the plaintiff by the 1st July and 1st August 1907, from which dates interest has been allowed up to the 14th February 1908 (para. 40 of the judgment); and in Exhibits 127 and 134 the defendants expressly throw the blame for non-payment on plaintiff owing to his not having submitted his bills. This non-submission is not denied by plaintiff either in the correspondence prior to the suit or in his deposition: and from Exhibit 134, it appears that the bills had not been submitted even on the 26th December 1907. In the absence of evidence as to when the bills were tendered, there is nothing which points to unreasonable delay on the part of the defendants in not settling them prior to the 14th February 1908. We, therefore, disallow the interest awarded by the lower Court in para. 40 of its judgment.

The interest awarded on the sums allowed for ground palls and miscellaneous articles from 1st July 1907 to date of suit (para. 41 of the judgment) must also be disallowed, as no demand in writing for payment giving notice to defendants that interest would be claimed is shown to have been made and in its absence, interest is not allowable under the terms of Act XXXII of 1839.

The case, however, really falls under 3 and 4 Will. IV, Ch. 42, section 29, which authorizes the giving of damages in the nature of interest over and above the value of the goods at the time of conversion (See Mayne on Damages, 7th Edition, page 423). This section has not been extended to India like section 28 of the same Statute, which is re-produced in Act XXXII of 1839. It is agruable, therefore, that the Courts in India have no power to award interest in cases falling under section 29. But, putting this objection aside, there does not appear to be sufficient reason for departing from the ordinary measure of damages in an action for conversion, viz., the market-value of the goods at the time of conversion, especially as plaintiff has not proved by evidence, which should have been adduced, the actual market-value, and the amount awarded to him is a rough estimate which may be excessive.

As to the claim for interest at the rate of 9 per cent. on the deposit of Rs. 50,000, we agree with the view taken by the lower Court that there was no unreasonable delay in its return and that plaintiff is not entitled to more than the agreed rate of 5 per cent.

Of the items claimed by the defendants against plaintiff, the only ones regarding which any arguments were addressed to us are Nos. 1 and 16, viz., the haulage charges included in the "wharfage fees" paid by the defendants to the Port Trust. It is contended that these form part of the shipping (12) (1875) 10 Ex. D. 255.

charges to be borne by the plaintiff. But in view of clause 9 of the agreement, which expressly excepts "monies paid for wharfage fees", we agree with the lower Court that this claim is inadmissible. There is no sufficient reason shown for not taking the expression "wharfage fees" as covering all the charges levied by the Port Trust under that name. Nor do we think the accounts between the parties prior to the end of March 1907 can be re opened in the way proposed by defendants, Cf., Magniram v. Laxminarayen (13). We, therefore, see no reason to differ from the findings of the learned Judge as to these, or any other items, included in the defendants' claim to a set-off.

We refer the appeal to the Court of Commissioner to take accounts on the basis of the above conclusions. Final orders will be passed on receipt of his report to be submitted within a week.

PRATT, J. C.—In accordance with the report submitted by the Commissioner, we order that plaintiff do recover from the defendants the sums of Rs. 27,958 7-2 with interest on the said sum at 6 per cent. from the date of suit to date of payment.

Plaintiff to recover costs in proportion from the defendants in the lower Court and the defendants to recover costs in proportion in the Appellate Court.

The proportion to be the proportion of the amount awarded in this Court to the amount claimed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.
Civil REFERENCE No. 1 OF 1910.
November 25, 1911.
Present:—Mr. Justice Macleod.
In re PESTONJI JEHANGIR HORMUSJI —CLAIMANT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 3 (b), 11, 31—"Person interested", meaning of—Duty of Collector—Court's duty—Apportionment—Poundage and fees—Liability of Government.

Under section 3 (b) of the Land Acquisition Act, the expression "person interested" includes all persons claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of the acquisition of the land.

A person may be interested in the compensation money without having an interest in the land in the legal sense of the term.

The Collector has, under section 11, to inquire into the value of the land and into the respective interests of the persons claiming the compensation, and after awarding a sum for compensation, he has to apportion the compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land of whom or whose claims he has information.

What the Collector and the Court have to do is to apportion the sum awarded amongst the persons interested as far as possible in porprotion to the value of their interests. It is impossible to lay down any general rule which can be followed. The market-value of an interest, if ascertainable, may afford some guide towards ascertaining the amount to be apportioned in respect of that interest, but that can only be considered in relation to the total sum awarded as compensation.

It is the duty of Government, under section 31, to deposit in Court the whole of the compensation money which it may be required to deposit by the Act, free from any deduction. When a demand is made by Court Officials under Court Rules for poundage and fees in respect of such deposit, Government has to pay such poundage and fees in addition to the compensation money. The Court has no power to direct that a portion of the compensation money deposited should be refunded to Government as representing the poundage and fees paid by it when the money was deposited in Court. As the money is compensation in respect of land acquired under the Act, the Court has power only to direct payment of such money, without any deduction, to the person or persons interested.

When land is acquired for a Company, the poundage and fees, which may become payable during the course of proceedings, may be recovered by Government from the Company as costs of acquisition.

JUDGMENT.—A certain plot of land, abutting on Hornby Road, known as "The Dispensary Plot," was vested in the City of Bombay Improvement Trust under Schedule C of Bombay Act IV of 1898. Thereafter, Government sought to acquire this plot for the extension of the Victoria Terminus Station of the G. I. P. Railway, and notified their desire to acquire it under the Land Acquisition Act, in August 1908. Proceedings followed before the Collector for ascertaining the amount of compensation payable, in which the parties appearing were the Improvement Trust and one Pestonji Jehangir, who was in occupation of the premises under an agreement with the Improvement Trust. The Collector fixed the compensation payable at the rate of Rs. 80 a square yard, and though Pestonji disputed the award, on the ground that that figure was inadequate and asked for a reference to the High Court on that account, he did not pursue the matter when it came before the Court and so far the reference is dismissed with costs against him.

Out of the compensation money so fixed, a certain sum was awarded to Government in respect of their reversionary rights to the land and there is no dispute now regarding that part of the award.

The Improvement Trust then claimed from the Collector the balance of the compensation to the complete exclusion of Pestonji Jehangir on the ground that he had no interest in the land. Pestonji claimed that he was in occupation of the land under an agreement with the Trust, with a right to obtain a lease for ninety-nine years when certain buildings had been erected according to the terms of the agreement on the land. Mr. Delves, a witness for the Improvement Trust, in answer to this, conceded that a purchaser from the Trust would make a deduction due to Pestonji being in occupation and the consequent risk of litigation. He fixed such deduction at Rs. 25,000; and the Collector, adopting this method of valuing Pestonji's interest, awarded to Pestonji Rs. 25,000, and the balance to the Improvement Trust. As the Improvement Trust were not persons competent to alienate within the meaning of the Act, the Collector was bound to deposit this amount awarded to them in Court under section 31 (2) of the Act. Pestonji dissatisfied with the apportionment effected by the Collector asked that this question also should be referred to the Court.

After the hearing had been proceeded with for some time, an arrangement was arrived at between Pestonji and the Improvement Trust with regard to the apportionment; so I am no longer concerned with the question what is the value of Pestonji's interest. But, I think, it is competent to me to remark that the method adopted by the Collector at the suggestion of Mr. Delves was absolutely and entirely wrong.

The Collector has under section 11 to inquire into the value of the land and into the respective interests of the persons claiming the compensation and after awarding a sum for compensation he has to apportion the said compensation, among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land of whom or of whose claims he has information. Under section 3 (b), the expression 'person interested' includes all persons claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of the acquisition of land under the Act. It is quite possible that a person may be interested in the compensation money without having an interest in the land in the legal sense of the term. The Act does not indicate how the Collector is to effect the apportionment, and sections 20 to 28, which deal with the proceedings of the Court when a reference has been made under section 18, are also silent on the question.

It was suggested in argument that in apportionment, the market-value of each interest has to be ascertained but with only a fixed sum to apportion, this would obviously lead to difficulties. The various rights of female members of a Hindu undivided family in the joint family property have no market-value though such members would be persons interested in the compensation-money. Again, even if the market-value of the various interests could be ascertained, their total value would not be likly to coincide with the sum to be apportioned. I think what the Collector and the Court have to do is to apportion the sum awarded amongst the persons interested as far as possible in proportion to the value of their interests and it is impossible to lay down any general rule which can be followed. The market-value of an interest, if ascertainable, may afford some guide towards ascertaining the amount to be apportioned in respect of that interest, but that can only be considered in relation to the total sum awarded as compensation. There remains a question as regards the refund to Government of the poundage and fees which they paid when they deposited the money in Court under section 31. It is clearly the duty of Government to deposit in Court the whole of the compensation-money which they may be required to deposit by the Act free from any deduction, and when a demand is made by Court Officials under the Court Rules for poundage and fees in respect of such deposit, Government have to pay such poundage and fees in addition to the compensation-money. They now ask that when a decision is arrived at regarding who is entitled to the money so deposited, the poundage and fees should be paid back to them out of the said money. There is no doubt that this course has been followed by this Court in the past, though as far as I know, the question whether Government are, as a matter of right, entitled to such a refund, has never been argued. But in considering what is the character of the money so deposited by Government in Court, and what are the powers of the Court under the Act with regard to that money, it seems clear to me that the money is compensation in respect of the land acquired under the Act and that the Court has only power to direct payment of such money without any deduction to the person or persons interested therein and consequently that the Court has no power to direct that a portion of such money should be refunded to Government as representing the poundage and fees paid by them when the money was deposited in Court.

When Government are acquiring land for a Company, as in this case, the Company have to execute an agreement under section 41 of the Act with the Secretary of State for India providing, inter alia, for the payment to Government of the costs of acquisition, and the poundage and fees which may become payable during the course of the proceedings should be included in the costs of acquisition. If Government are acquiring land for their own purposes, then the payment of poundage and fees to the High Court is not a payment out of pocket to Government. It is merely the debiting of a certain sum to one account and crediting it to another. But, however that may be, as long as the Act is silent on the question and the Court is only authorized to apportion or pay out the compensation-money which has been deposited in Court under the Act free of all deductions to the person or persons interested, then if Government consider that the poundage and fees should be paid out of the money so deposited, they can take steps to get the Act amended.

Therefore, there will be an order in terms of the consent decree between claimants Nos. 2 and 3 and the Improvement Trust. Costs of Government, exclusive of poundage and fees, awarded against claimants Nos. 2 and 3 to be paid out of the money to which they are now entitled.

Practice—Court finding value of suit beyond its jurisdiction—Plaint presented to a competent Court—Trial de novo—Evidence taken by first Court, inclusion of.

A suit for dissolution of partnership was brought in the Court of a Munsif first class. In order to decide whether the suit was within his jurisdiction, the Munsif held an inquiry, found that the value of the suit exceeded his jurisdiction and returned the plaint for presentation in a competent Court.

The Sub-Judge, in whose Court the plaint was presented, ordered that the case should be tried de novo and refused to include in the evidence before him the evidence recorded by the Munsif:

Held, (1) that the order was correct:

(2) that as the Munsif decided that he had no jurisdiction, he could not proceed to decide any point other than that of jurisdiction and no finding by him that a certain amount was due by one party to the other could be treated as a finding on the merits.

Petition for revision of the order of the Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Amritsar, dated 1st February 1911, (directing that the case be tried de novo), under section 70 (a) of Act XXV of 1899.

The Hon'ble Mr. Shadi Lal and Rai Bahadur Lala Sukh Dial, for the Petitioners.

BAI PARSON v. BAI SOMLI.

Mr. Oertel, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order refusing to include in the evidence before the Court below evidence recorded by the Munsif with the object of deciding whether the suit was cognizable by him. A preliminary objection was taken that no revision lay, the alleged error being on a question of law and being, moreover, an interlocutory order from which an appeal would lie on appeal from decree. Arur Singh v. Bua Ditta (1); Arur Singh v. Dayal Singh (2) and Umar Ali v. Nasib-un-nissa (3) were cited.

For the petitioner, Pandit Rama Kant v. Pandit Ragdeo (4) and Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. v. Hardhian Singh (5) were cited for the proposition that an erroneous refusal to admit evidence was a material irregularity and that unless the petitioner's remedy was granted at once, the Court below would proceed to record fresh evidence in place of that recorded by the Munsif and remedy by appeal from decree would be too late. This is possibly a case in which the remedy is by revision at this stage, but in my view of the correctness of the order attacked, the respondents will lose nothing by the decision that revision lies.

The suit instituted in the Munsif's Court was for dissolution of partnership and for such sum as might be found due on dissolution. The Munsif had to decide whether the suit was within his jurisdiction and for this purpose, he issued a commission for the examination of account-books. There was no question of under or over-valuation in his Court. The valuation was tentative only. Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (6) and Manna Lal v. Samandu (7) are ample authority for holding that it was the duty of the Munsif, on finding that the value of the suit exceeded his jurisdiction, to return the plaint for presentation in a competent Court. Inasmuch as the Munsif decided that he had not jurisdiction, he could not proceed to decide any point other than that of jurisdiction, and no finding by him that a certain amount was due by one party to the other can be treated as a finding on the merits. The proceedings before him were coram non judice so far as the eventual decision of the question of the indebtedness of the one party to the other one was concerned and the order of the lower Court attacked by the petitioner was correct. This view is supported by Prabhakarbhat v. Vishvambhar Pundit (8) and by Kalian Dayal v. Kalian Narer (9). I decline to refer this case to a Division or a Full Bench for a consideration of the respective correctness of Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (5) and Sudarshan Das Shastri v. Ram Prasad (10), as I see no reason for holding that the former is incorrect and the latter correct.

The application is dismissed with costs.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 463 OF 1911.

January 16, 1912.

Present:—Sir N. G. Chandavarkar, KT., Judge, and Mr. Justice Russell.

BAI PARSON—APPELLANT

versus

BAI SOMLI—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Mayukha—Stridhan—Sons inheriting from mother—Tenancy-in-common—Joint Tenancy—Basic principle of co-parcenary—Obstructed and unobstructed succession—Interpretation—Silence of Nilkanth—Self-acquired property—Joint property.

Under the law of the Vyavahara Mayukha as also under that of Mitakshara, property inherited by sons from their mother descends to them, not as a joint tenancy, but as a tenancy-in-common.

Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan, 27 M. 309, followed.

The basic principle of joint tenancy as distinguished from tenancy-in-common under Hindu Law explained.

A joint tenancy is created where property is inherited by unobstructed succession called rikhta. In such a case, heirs take the property as co-parceners.

BAI PARSON v. BAI SOMLI.

A tenancy-in-common is created where property is inherited by obstructed succession. In this case, the idea of inheritance and the idea of partition go together; one is a necessary complement of the other, so that, at the very moment the inheritance falls in, the heirs take by partition, that is, as owners of defined shares and, therefore, as tenants-in-common.

Heritage in the case of stridhan is obstructed succession.

Where Nilkanth is silent on any point, his silence must be regarded as assent to the proposition laid down in the Mitakshara.

Self-acquired property is that which is acquired by a member of a joint family by his own exertions without detriment to the joint property and not thrown into the common stock.

Property, originally self-acquired, becomes joint when it is thrown into the common stock and is mixed up with the joint estate.

Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge of Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 121 of 1910, varying the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Borsad, in Civil Suit No. 279 of 1909.

Mr. L. A. Shah, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision on this second appeal arising under the Vyavahara Mayukha is, whether the sons of a woman who inherit her Stridhan property take it jointly as co-parceners or severally as tenants-in-common.

The lower Courts have held that they take it severally as tenants-in-common, on the authority of the Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court in Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (1). That decision has been followed by a Division Bench of this Court, consisting of the learned Chief Justice and Batchelor, J., in Dattambhat bin Appinbhat v. Yamnabai kom Rambhat (2). Both these decisions are under the law of the Mitakshara. It is urged in support of this second appeal that the law of the Mayukha is otherwise. Reliance is placed on the passage in that authority, where the word dayi (heritage) is defined and then explained by the author, Nilakantha (Chapter IV, section 2, placita 1 and 2, pages 45 and 47, of Stokes' Hindu Law Books). There, after defining daya as "wealth not re-united, nor put back again into a common stock and (still) admitting of partition," Nilakantha goes on to quote from the Smriti Sangraha which says:—"That which is received through the father, and that received through a mother is described by the term Heritage." Upon this, it is argued that, since property inherited by sons from their mother is put by the text quoted from the Smriti Sangraha upon the same footing as property inherited by them from their father, and since the law of co-parcenary undoubtedly obtains as to the latter, the same law ought to prevail as the former also.

Before discussing the soundness of this argument, it will be convenient to consider first the basic principle or root-idea of the term co-parcenary or joint tenancy under the Hindu law, and then to determine whether that principle is common to both the Mitakshara and the Mayukha.

One of the cardinal principles of Hindu Law, borrowed from its Shastras, is that a son is his father re-born. This principle rests on a passage from the Vedas quoted by Baudhayana, in which a father thus addresses his son:—"From my several limbs thou art distilled; from my heart thou art produced; thou art indeed myself but denominated son." Every son is, therefore, identified in interest with his father and all the sons together with him constitute one body, so to say in the eye and for the purposes of law and the Shastras. So Vijnaneshvara tells us that when a father brings a suit as to his own property, his son or sons can appear for him and prosecute the suit even when he is living, and that, because the word plaintiff includes the sons and grandsons of the man suing, "their interests being identical" (Mit., Moghe's Edition No. 3, page 113). Starting with that idea of identity, the law has engrafted on it the principle that every son takes an interest by birth in his father's property. Hence the injunction that a man shall not give away the whole even of his self-acquired property, when he has sons, because "procreating sons, the father must perform their initiatory ceremonies and provide for their livelihood." (See the Chapter on Gifts of the Mitakshara, Moghe's Edition No. 3, page 225; West and Buhler's Digest, 3rd Edition, page 759, Note). The same injunction is given in the Mitakshara in placitum 27 of Ch. I, s.: "Though immoveables have been acquired by a man himself, a gift or sale of them should not be made without convening all the sons. They, who are born, and they who are yet un-begotten, and they who are still in the womb, require the means of support, no gift or sale should, therefore, be made." (Stokes, pages 374 and 376.)

The doctrine that sons take property in their father's estate by birth is propounded by the Mitakshara in a highly learned disquisition (Chapter I, s. 1, pl. 17 to 22) in answer to those who maintain that the "property" of the sons "is not by birth but by demise of the owner, or by partition." According to the latter, all property, whether inherited from the father or other relations, is of the same character, the man inheriting getting ownership in it on the death of the person from whom it is derived. The Mitakshara and those who follow it hold otherwise. They distinguish between property inherited by sons from their father and property inherited from others. The former they call unobstructed succession; the latter obstructed succession. According to the opposite school, all inherited property is obstructed succession. The Vyavahara Mayukha discusses the question and upholds the view of the Mitakshara. The passage in the Mayukha (Chapter IV, section 1, pl. 3, Stokes) is as follows:—

"According to Dhareshvara Acharya, 'the ownership of sons and the rest, in the wealth of the father, is not generated previously during his life, but is produced by partition.' And the author of the Smriti Sangraha says the same. But it is not so."

It will be perceived from these discussions in the Mitakshara and the Mayukha that their view is that sons take interest in their father's property by birth, and that the opposite view which they combat is that the sons' interest arises by partition. The contrast between these two expressions, by birth and by partition, is significant, because in them lies the root-idea or basic principle of the co-parcenary system as distinguished from a tenancy-in-common. To take ownership in an estate by partition is to take a defined share in it as a severalty at the very moment that it falls in as an inheritance. When the father dies, the estate at once of itself comes to the sons by partition in shares. To take the estate by birth means to have an inchoate, undefined interest, and all the sons take it as an aggregate of persons standing as the father re-produced; so when the estate falls in an inheritance on the father's death, no son can say "this is my share," but all take what was a joint interest from the time of their birth.

Hence it is that the right of sons to inherit their father's property is termed unobstructed succession (apratibandha daya). They are the primary heirs, whose interest arises when they are born and that interest ripens in its joint condition when the father dies and inevitably comes to them as heirs for enjoyment without any obstruction. They take jointly and the joint interest continues until they by common agreement effect a partition. And partition in this case does not create a fresh interest of ownership, for that existed from the time of their brith; only it substitutes defined ownership of a part for an undefined ownership of the whole.

It is because of this nature of the right of the sons that the word rikhta, which means inheritance, is defined as unobstructed succession (apratibandha daya). After pointing out that a man becomes owner of property in one of five ways, by inheritance, purchase, partition, seizure, or finding, Vijnaneshwara in the Mitakshara brings out the contrast between inheritance and partition. He says: "Unobstructed heritage is here denominated 'inheritance,' rikhta" (Chapter I, s. 1, pl. 13). And he then states of partition: "Partition intends heritage subject to obstruction." Explaining these definitions given by Vijnaneshwara, the Viramitrodaya points out accordingly that sons become "owners" of their father's property by birth, not by partition, and he quotes the Mitakshara, which contrasts the right of ownership acquired by partition with the right acquired by sons to their father's property from their birth (Viramit. Ch. I, s. 36, Sarcar's Edition, page 19).

Here, again, we have the root-idea or basic principle of a joint tenancy as distinguished from a tenancy-in-common brought out very prominently. When we are told that unobstructed heritage is rikhta or inheritance proper and that obstructed succession (apratibandha daya) is partition, the plain meaning is this: In the case of obstructed succession, the idea of inheritance and the idea of partition go together; one is a necessary complement of the other, so that, at the very moment the inheritance falls in, the heirs take by partition, that is, as owners of defined shares, and, therefore, as tenants-in-common. But it is not so with unobstructed succession. There the sons inherit as a united body of heirs in virtue of right pre-existing (from the time of their birth) without the idea of partition being a natural incident of the inheritance at the moment it falls in. Obstructed succession, in other words, is partitioned succession; unobstructed succession is unpartitioned heritage, subject to partition at the option of the sons inheriting.

This division of heritage into unobstructed and obstructed succession, adopted in the Mitakshara and followed in the Mayukha and the Viramitradoya, who belong, generally speaking, to the Mitakshara school, is not recognised by another school of Hindu lawyers, which maintains that it is only on the death of a propositus, whether father or not, that the property of the heir arises and that "heritage is in all cases obstructed and never otherwise": (Viramitrodaya, Sarcar's Edition, Ch. I, s. 22, page 13).

This contrast between unobstructed and obstructed succession is further brought out by Vijnaneshwara in other portions of the Mitakshara. For instance, in the Chapter on Debts, he first deals with the liability of sons and grandsons of a deceased Hindu to pay his debts. Then he discusses the question—Who is liable to pay them, if the deceased has left no sons or grandsons? Yajnyavalkya's text answers that in that case the person who takes the deceased's property as heir must pay the debts. That person is termed in the text rikhta grahaka, i. e., the person who takes the rikhta or inheritance. But we have seen that the term rikhta, as explained by Vijnaneshwara, means primarily not all but only unobstructed inheritance, i. e., the inheritance of sons and grandsons and great-grandsons. How then does it come to be applied here by Yajnyavalkya on the subject of Debts to the case of obstructed succession? To remove ambiguity on that score, Vijnaneshwara explains what the term rikhta grahaka, as used by Yajnyavalkya in the text in question, means. Vijnaneshwara explains: "(The term) rikhta grahaka (means) he who takes the inheritance by means of partition as the door (vibhagadwarena)." That is to say, the person so taking enters into the inheritance through or by means of partition—at the very moment it comes to him it comes partitioned, so that if there are several heirs to the property in the case of obstructed succession, they take it by division as a natural and inherent incident of their right attached by law.

These considerations do not apply to property inherited by sons from their father. The term unobstructed succession (apratibandha daya) is exclusively used of that property and is out of place in the case of all other property such as that inherited by the sons from their mother or from other relations. In the latter case, the heir inheriting does not take any interest in the property by birth; and the basic principle of a co-parcenary is essentially absent with reference to the right to inherit. When it comes to the heirs on the death of the propositus, it comes not in virtue of a right pre-existing from their birth but in virtue of the character of partition annexed by law to it as obstructed succession.

So far, then, as the Vyavahara Mayukha is concerned, it agrees expressly with the Mitakshara in maintaining that sons take interest in their father's property from their birth, and not by partition. As to the other considerations derived from the Mitakshara, that is, as to its definition of rikhta or heritage as unobstructed succession and of samavibhaga or partition as obstructed succession, it is true that Nilakantha is silent. But on the established principle of this Court, his silence must be regarded as assent to the propositions laid down in the Mitakshara and dealt with in the foregoing part of this judgment, unless we find in the Vyavahara Mayukha anything which either expressly or by necessary implication shows that Nilakantha intended to apply the law of co-parcenary also to property inherited by sons from their mother.

It is urged for the appellant that Nilakantha does so intend, because in explaining the definition of daya (heritage), he quotes the Smriti Sangraha which says that that term applies both to paternal and maternal heritage. That definition of daya, it must be remembered, is from a Smriti or text, and, seeing that a Smriti is generally meant to be the condensed expression of a rule, it is in every case a question whether the subjects or objects specified in it are exhaustive or whether they are illustrative. Now, in the case of the text quoted by Nilakantha from the Smriti Sangraha, on which the appellant's Pleader strongly relies in support of his argument, we have Nilakantha's own explanation to make it clear beyond doubt that the text in question is illustrative, not exhaustive. After quoting that text, he goes on to quote also from the Nighantu where it is said:—"The learned define heritage to be the wealth of a father, which admits of partition." Here is an apparent contradiction between the text from the Smriti Sangraha and the text from Nighantu. The former says heritage means paternal and also maternal property. The latter says it is paternal property. Nilakantha cites both. How are they to be reconciled? He reconciles them by explaining that "the word father is merely put to denote relations in general, as a part for the whole." In Nilakantha's view, daya means heritage derived from any relation father, mother, brother or so forth, the word "father" being merely illustrative. So the word "mother" in the text from the Smriti Sangraha comes in by way of description, not enumeration.

It must be observed here that though the words daya, and rikhta, are sometimes used indiscriminately to mean heritage in general, their strictly legal connotations are different and even popular language recognises that. A dayada in popular language is one who takes a deceased's estate by obstructed succession. That is its strictly legal sense also. The word rikhta primarily means in law he who takes by unobstructed succession. Often they are used as if they were interchangeable, but that is not strictly legal, according to Hindu Law. Vijnaneshwara points this out in pl. 33 Ch. I, s. 11, of the Mitakshara (Stokes), where he says:—"The word 'heir' (dayada) is frequently used to signify any successor other than a son."

If, then, both the Mitakshara and the Mayukha so far agree, is there anything in their treatment of the subject of stridhan and of devolution to it to support the argument of the appellant's Pleader? According to both those authorities, heritage in the case of stridhan is obstructed succession; so partition is its natural incident. According to both again, as interpreted by this Court, when daughters, and, in default of them, their daughters, inherit the mother's estate, they take as tenants-in-common. The same law must apply to the sons also, when they in their turn inherit, in the absence of any express rule that the law as to unobstructed succession applies. No distinction is made as between daughters and sons with reference to the character of their right to inherit their mother's stridhan. They all stand forth as heirs; and if daughters take as tenants-in-common, the sons ought to take as such on the principle of the canon called nyaya samya (rule from equity). And that the canon was intended to apply is clear from the gloss of the Mitakshara on a text of Manu quoted in the Chapter on Stridhan (Ch. II, s. 11, pl. 19 and 20, Stokes, pp. 462 and 463). Manu's text is: "When the mother is dead, let all the uterine brothers and the uterine sisters equally divide the maternal estate." On this the Mitakshara's gloss is:—"All the uterine brothers should divide the maternal estate equally; and so should sisters by the same mother." Both brothers and sisters are put on the same footing, so far as the nature of the right is concerned. In the case of both, the right of inheritance accrues when the mother dies; that is the point of time; and it is at that point that the division takes effect, whether sisters take or brothers take. The inheritance and the division are simultaneous in either case.

As held by a Full Bench of this Court in Dayaldas Laldas v. Savitribai (3), the Mayukha interprets the above-mentioned text of Manu with reference to anvadheya stridhan differently from the Mitakshara. While the latter takes it to mean that brothers form a class of heirs separate from the sisters and that the division mentioned is of brothers inter se and of sisters inter se, the Mayukha interprets the text as meaning that both the brothers and the sisters inherit together as one class and the division mentioned is of the mother's estate among them all equally. This difference of interpretation does not affect the question before us. Both the Mitakshara and the Mayukha agree so far that, whether the brothers and the sisters form one class or two distinct classes, they take, when they take at all, by division. Nay, the Mayukha's interpretation serves as a cogent reply to the appellant's argument. If the anvadheya stridhan is inherited by brothers and sisters together as one class, and the sisters take as tenants-in-common, it follows the same rule must apply to the brothers, as they stand in the same category of heirs. This is on the rule of Hindu law laid down by Baudhayana (according to the Viramitrodaya), and by Ushanas (according to the Mitakshara), that "what is affirmed of even one among many that have a common property, the same is to be extended to all, since they are declared to be similar" (see the Viramit., Sircar's Edition, Chapter II, pl. I, s. 10, page 59; the Mit., Mogbe's Edition No. 3, page 397).

But it is urged for the appellant that, in dealing with the question of partition, both the Mitakshara and the Mayukha make no distinction between property inherited by sons from their father and property inherited by them from their mother. It is argued upon that, that both the authorities intended to put both the properties on the same footing and treat them as joint and subject to partition among the sons holding both as co-parceners. This argument overlooks the fact that even in the case of property which is inherited by the sons from their mother, the law must lay down what its character is as a succession coming in a partitioned condition as a tenancy-in-common. It would not have done for the law simply to have said that the estate falls in as an estate divided in interest, because, that gives rise to the question--What interest does each son take? How is that interest to be determined? Hence the necessity of dealing with the property as a subject of partition. Because, in so dealing with it, the law givers and the commentators deal also at the same time with the mode and time of partition of the property inherited from the father, when this partition is made by the sons by mutual agreement after the estate has come to them as joint in character, it does not follow that the mother's property is also inherited as a joint estate. To give to the estate inherited from the mother that character, it must be an unobstructed succession, which it obviously is not.

In dealing with the subject of self-acquired property, Vijnaneshwara, no doubt, explains that self-acquisition is that which is acquired without detriment to the paternal or the maternal estate inherited by sons. It may be argued that he would not have mentioned the maternal estate there with the paternal estate, if, in his opinion, the former were not joint like the latter. The argument, however, puts on Vijnaneshwara's gloss a construction which makes it practically contrary to the substantial meaning of Yajnyavalkya's text defining self-acquired property and to the meaning of Vijnaneshwara's gloss thereon. The question of self-acquired property arises and can arise only with reference to a family the members of which are or were joint in estate. Yajnyavalkya's text refers only to such a family. Now, property held by a family as joint need not necessarily be only paternal. It may be property originally inherited from other relations, or it may be property originally acquired by one or more of the co-parceners by his or their own exertions, and both these may have been thrown into the common stock and turned into joint property. The established law is that self-acquired property is that which is acquired by a member of a joint family by his own exertions without detriment to the joint property and not thrown into the common stock. When Yajnyavalkya speaks of self acquired property as property acquired without detriment to the paternal estate and Vijnaneshwara in his gloss speaks of it as property acquired without the help of the paternal and maternal estate, both mean in substance by such estate all estate which is joint in character, whatever its derivation. If the argument we are noticing is sound, we must take Yajnyavalkya's text and Vijnaneshwara's gloss in their literal sense and restrict self-acquired property to that which is acquired without detriment only to the paternal or to the maternal estate of the joint family and we must exclude all other property, acquired by inheritance or otherwise and then thrown into the common stock. Such exclusion is not sanctioned by Hindu Law—Yajnyavalkya's text defining self-acquired property—and the glosses of Vijnaneshwara and of Nilakantha do not warrant it. The sensible way of interpreting Vijnaneshwara's gloss is, therefore, to take the word maternal estate as standing for all property, which, though not inherited from the father but acquired otherwise by the members, has been nevertheless thrown into the common stock and so has become joint by being mixed up with the paternal estate.

The paternal estate is the determining and dominant factor of the joint tenancy. When other estate is mentioned with it with reference to a joint family, the meaning is that that other estate has become joint by becoming, through the volition of the co-parceners, mixed with the paternal estate and, therefore, partaking of its character. In other words, the words paternal estate in Yajnyavalkya's text and paternal and maternal estate in Vijnaneshwara's gloss must be treated as illustrative and refer to all property treated as joint, though at the time of acquisition by inheritance or otherwise, it had been self acquired.

On these grounds, we must hold that, under the law of the Vyavahara Mayukha as also under that of the Mitakshara, property inherited by sons from their mother descends to them, not as a joint tenancy, but as a tenancy-in-common. This conclusion is in accordance with the view of the learned authors of West and Buhler's Digest (see note c, pages 710 and 711).

The decree must, therefore, be confirmed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION NO. 158 OF 1911.

MISRA SINGH AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS

Execution of decree—Attachment—Effect of want of proper attachment—Sanction, effect of absence of—Sale, validity of.

The law requires that after every attachment of a share in a mauza, there should be a fresh sanction from Government to the sale of the property attached.

Where a certain share in a mauza is attached but a larger share is put up to sale and sold, the sale is invalid and must be set aside. It cannot be upheld to the extent of the share actually attached.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge of Hardoi, dated 2nd August 1911, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Unao, dated 6th March 1911.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. Rowlin, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the District Juge of Hardoi in certain execution proceedings. Having regard to the painful history of this case, I feel extremely reluctant to interfere with any order which would help the unfortunate decree-holder towards the realization of some of the money which has been owing to him for a period extending over nine years. However, in view of the points of law which are raised, I am afraid I shall have to direct that the decree-holder must wait a little longer before he is entitled to any relief. The history of the execution proceedings began away back in August 1903. It appears that the decree-holder made an application for attachment and sale of 12 biswansis odd share belonging to his judgment-debtor in mauza Kewana. Attachment was made to this extent and at a later stage, that is to say, somewhere at the end of 1905, a sale statement was submitted for sanction to the Government in order to enable the property to be sold in execution. Unfortunately, it appears that the statement which was sent up for sanction to the Government related to a share of some 15 biswansis odd. The reason of this appears to have been that after the date of the attachment, the judgment-debtor, in some way or other, acquired an additional 3 biswansis share over and above the 12 biswansis share which had already been properly attached. In pursuance of the application made to Government, sanction was granted to the sale of the 15 biswansis odd share and the property was sold. An objection was then lodged to the sale and it was set aside on the ground that there had been a material irregularity inasmuch as there never had been any valid attachment of the 15 biswansis odd share. With this order setting aside the sale, there was also coupled a further order dismissing entirely the application for execution which the decree-holder had made in 1903. An appeal from this order, which was passed by a Deputy Collector in the Unao District, was lodged in the Court of the District Judge of Hardoi. By his order of the 20th March of 1907, the learned District Judge held that the sale and attachment were irregular. He was also of opinion that there was no justification for the Deputy Collector's order directing the application for execution to be dismissed. He ordered, therefore, that the application for execution should be restored and that the decree-holder should be asked to attach the property de novo to whatever extent he desired. An appeal against this order of the District Judge of Hardoi was preferred in this Court and was dismissed by Mr. Chamier on the 21st of August 1907. After this, what happened appears to be as follows:—The decree-holder went back to the Revenue Court in Unao and applied for execution against a 12 biswansis share exactly. An order for attachment was served in April 1908 and proceedings in the usual dilatory fashion began again in the Revenue Courts with a view to obtaining sanction of Government to a fresh sale of the property which had been attached. Some two years more had elapsed from the date of this attachment when it suddenly appears to have occurred to the Deputy Collector in charge of these proceedings that there was no need to obtain the sanction of the Government to the sale of this share inasmuch as the Government had, on a previons occasion, sanctioned the sale of a larger share, namely 15 biswansis odd. This was a strange decision of the Deputy Collector to come to, considering that he had been handling the case for more than two years and considering also the fact that both in the Court of the District Judge and in this Court the opinion had been expressed that it would be necessary to take proceedings afresh and to apply for a fresh sanction of Government. However, no sanction was obtained and eventually after some further delay property was put up for sale and purchased on the 23rd of December 1910. So far as can be ascertained, the property which was sold at that auction was not a 12 biswansis share exactly but a 12 biswansis, 5 kachwansis, etc., share. The result, therefore, is that property in excess of the property which was attached was offered for sale and was purchased by the decree-holder himself. The judgment-debtor, as may be well imagined, was not slow to avail himself of all the technical objections which these proceedings gave him an opportunity of raising and he promptly made an application to the Deputy Collector to have the sale set aside. The learned Deputy Collector, who dealt with this matter, accepted this application of the judgment-debtor and ordered the sale to be set aside apparently on the ground that there had been no fresh attachment of the property and also on another ground, namely, that fresh sanction should have been obtained. Again, the decree-holder found himself driven to the Court of the District Judge in appeal. He protested against the sale being set aside and the learned District Judge, having accepted his appeal, directed that the sale should be confirmed in his favour. This order of the learned District Judge is now attacked upon three grounds in this Court. One is, that the Court below failed to notice that the property, which was offered for sale and which was purchased, was 12 biswansis, 5 kachwansis odd share and not the exact share of 12 biswansis which the decree-holder had brought under attachment. There can be no doubt that this mistake did occur and so far as this is concerned, the decree-holder appears to be in a measure to blame himself for there is on the record a distinct application made by him in which he asks for the sale of 12 biswansis, 5 kachwansis and odd share I have been disposed to think that this objection was of a purely technical nature and was one in which there was no substantial force. However, I do not see what is to be done in the matter because, although it might be said that the sale was good to the extent of the property attached, namely, 12 biswansis exectly, there yet remains the fact that the property actually brought to sale and purchased by the decree-holder was in excess of 12 biswansis. I do not see how I could make any declaration that the share purchased by the decree-holder was 12 biswansis only or how I could make any reduction in the price which was paid by the decree-holder, a reduction proportionate to the extent by which the property sold would be reduced to a share of 12 biswansis. Another point taken is, that the learned Judge was in error in thinking that the sanction of Government, which had previously been given to the sale of the property, was a good and subsisting sanction which covered the transaction now in question. I should myself have been inclined to agree with the opinion of the learned District Judge, but for the fact that both in the proceedings taken in the District Judge's Court in 1907 and in this Court in the same year, it seems to have been held that the only remedy open to the decree-holder was to apply for a fresh attachment and, having obtained that attachment, to apply for a fresh sanction. Strictly speaking, I think the law intends that after every fresh attachment, there should be a fresh sanction from Government to the sale of the property attached. The third objection which is taken to the order of the learned District Judge is this, namely, that the learned District Judge passed an order confirming the sale whereas certain other objections to the validity of the sale had been raised by the judgment-debtor before the Deputy Collector and had not been decided by him. It is urged, and I think very properly, that in the circumstances, all that was open to the learned District Judge was to remand the case to the lower Court for decision of certain other objections which had been raised by the judgment-debtor. The result of my examination of all these grounds put forward in revision is that I am constrained to set aside the order of the Court below. It seems to me that all that can be done at present is to hold that the decree-holder has obtained a valid attachment of a 12 biswansis share belonging to the judgment-debtor. If he desires to have this 12 biswansis share brought to sale, his proper course is now to go to the Revenue Court and to ask that this property be notified for sale after proceedings have been taken to obtain the sanction of the Local Government to the sale of the share in question. It is to be hoped that if he persists in these execution proceedings, the unfortunate decree-holder will be more successful than he has been up to the present and that when the case comes up in the Revenue Courts in Unao, it will be handled by some officer who possesses a moderate amount of intelligence which will be sufficient to prevent the recurrence of these most regrettable blunders. I do not think that I should be justified in saddling the decree-holder with the costs of this application. I, therefore, make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

CHANDAVARKAR, J.—There were only two points urged by the learned Counsel in support of this appeal in his opening address, first, that there was a valid contract as between the Government and the plaintiff, who is the appellant, in consequence of his application to the Commissioner to purchase this land, and the acceptance by him of the conditions which were imposed by the Commissioner in consequence of that offer. It was urged that after the Commissioner had accepted the plaintiff's proposal to purchase this land by receipt of the money, it was not competent to Government to rescind the Commissioner's order, because, it was said the acceptance vested the title in the appellant. It is not necessary to go at length into the reasons for disallowing this argument, because the learned Counsel has himself given it up in his rejoinder.

It is clear from the provisions of the Land Revenue Code, and from the correspondence which passed between the different officers of Government, at the time the proposal of the plaintiff to purchase this land was considered, that the Commissioner was acting under section 60 of the Land Revenue Code and that there was a Resolution of Government at that time in force, which required that in respect of land of this description the Commissioner and the Collector could sell it only after obtaining the sanction of Government. Plainly, upon the facts this was Railway land, not required just then for Railway purposes, and, therefore, according to the evidence of Exhibit 44, the Commissioner could not dispose of it, in the way he did, without obtaining the sanction of Government.

The point on which the learned Counsel has laid special emphasis is his second argument; it is this. He urges: If the plaintiff has not acquired any title in virtue of the Commissioner's order, he has a right to fall back upon his old kabuliyat (Exhibit 15). Under that kabuliyat, the occupancy had been granted to him by the Collector subject only to this condition that it should be competent to Government to resume the land whenever it should be required for Government purposes, i. e., for Railway or other purposes. It is urged that the sale of the land to defendant No. 2, a private individual, is not such a purpose.

Now, the correspondence, which had passed before the kabuliyat, Exhibit 15, was executed, makes it clear that what was intended by the contracting parties was that the land was to be resumed by Government whenever it was required by them for Railway or other purposes. The words in Exhibit 15, no doubt, enlarge those terms, because in Exhibit 15, it is stipulated that the Government could resume the land whenever they liked, for their purpose, either for a Railway or other Government purpose. These words are not to be found in the previous correspondence upon the subject. But even assuming that these words embodied the terms agreed upon, they are consistent with what was the real contract between the parties. The words in Exhibit 15, on which Mr. Weldon has laid so much stress, do not mean more than that Government as proprietors of the land could resume it whenever they required it for their proprietary purposes. Any other construction would be inconsistent with the condition of the tenure on which this land was held at the time by the plaintiff. This land was not held, under the kabuliyat Exhibit 15, on the ordinary ryotwari tenure, because it was not subject to the thirty years' settlement. Government still remained the proprietors of the land, like any private owner, and were not merely the State entitled only to the assessment and having the right to enhance that assessment at the end of the usual period of the thirty years' settlement. They were full proprietors who could deal with the land in any way they liked like any private owner. They granted this land under the terms of the kabuliyat Exhibit 15. They dealt with the plaintiff like any ordinary proprietor with this difference that the provisions of the Land Revenue Code, and the Rules made under it, applied to the case so far as they could apply. But the provisions of the Land Revenue Code and the terms of the kabuliyat did not take away the proprietary character of the title of Government.

If, then, Government were proprietors, then Government purposes must be construed as meaning that they were purposes of Government as the State proprietor, purposes which Government alone were entitled to prescribe in the exercise of their discretionary powers.

On these grounds, I think, the decree must be confirmed with costs. There must be separate sets of costs.

BATCHELOR, J.—I agree. It seems to me that so far as concerns the Commissioner's order of October 1906, upon which reliance was placed for the appellant, the appellant can get no advantage from that order seeing that it was first suspended by Government and then finally annulled under the power vested in the Government for that purpose by section 211 of the Land Revenue Code. It may be added that no kabuliyat was given to the appellant in order to vest in him any right of occupancy. As to the old kabuliyat (Exhibit 15), that must be read and interpreted by the light of the appellant's application (Exhibit 36) upon which it was based, and by the light of the local officers' reports and decisions connected therewith. So reading it, it appears to me quite clear that the manuscript phrase added to the margin of this kabuliyat means only that the appellant undertook to surrender this land whenever Government in their discretion required him to do so.

Decree confirmed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1566 OF 1910.

April 23, 1912.

versus

GANGADHARAM SITAYYA— RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 3 (e)—Inam village carved out of a permanently settled estate —Applicability of the Act.

The provisions of Madras Act I of 1908 apply to an Inam village carved out of a permanently settled estate, which was owned by certain Agraharamdars and was afterwards purchased by the zemindar.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore, in A. S. No. 418 of 1910, presented against the decree of the District Munsif of Ellore, in O. S. No. 188 of 1907.

FACTS.—The facts appear from the following judgment of the Subordinate Judge:—

1. The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted by the Receiver of the Nidadavole Estate for recovery of possession of the plaint land with Rs. 60 on account of profits.

2. The defendant contended, inter alia, that by virtue of the sale-deed from one Swami in 1904 and in virtue of his long possession and enjoyment thereof, he is not bound to quit the land.

3. The District Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence this appeal by him.

4. The only points arising for determination in this appeal are:—

(i) Whether the plaint village of Vegaram is an estate coming within the purview of the Estates Land Act I of 1908? and,

(ii) Whether the defendant is bound to quit the plaint land or not?

5. The two points:—The plaint village is certainly one to which the provisions of the Madras Lands Act apply. It is an Inam village carved out from the permanently settled estate of Nidadavole. It was owned by certain Agraharamdars and afterwards purchased by the Nidadavole zemindar. It comes under clause (e) of section 3 of the above Act I of 1908 and the tenants, therefore, in the village have permanentoccupancy-rights.

6. The defendant became owner of the land by purchase in 1904 from the original owner Swami. This Swami and the defendant have had possession of the land for over twenty-five years paying a uniform rent even according to the evidence of Bhadriah, examined on plaintiff's behalf as his 1st witness. The evidence of the defendant's witnesses besides corroborating it shows that they were in possession for a long period.

7. The defendant, no doubt, agreed to quit the land after the expiry of the period fixed in the muchilika, Exhibit A, passed by him in favour of the estate. He contended that it was passed under fraudulent misrepresentation by the plaintiff's servants and that the clause relating to quitting of the plaint land was not read out to him. He purchased the land paying his hard earnings therefor, in 1904 and it is not reasonable to say that he would have consented to the clause in question if really it was read out to him. Certainly, the muchilika must have been signed on fraudulent suppression of the existence of the clause relating to surrender.

Further, the plaintiff gave him no notice to quit.

7. In the result, finding the two points for the defendant, I dismiss this appeal with costs of both Courts.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Courts.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is no foundation for the view that the village is not an estate within the meaning of the Estates Land Act.

That being so, the plaintiff is not entitled to eject tenant. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 34 OF 1912.

April 11, 1912.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

MANILAL MOHANLAL—ACCUSED.

Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890), s. 3 (e)—Street, definition of—"Accessible to the public"—"Access to."

The definition of "street" in section 3, clause (e) of the Bombay District Police Act, 1890, is inclusive in its terms, and includes a place accessible to the public. The words "accessible to the public" mean that any member of the public as such has access to the land: and "by access to" would ordinarily be understood unimpeded entrance upon the land.

Criminal application for revision from the decision of the Magistrate, First Class, Ahmedabad.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Accused.

Mr. G. S. Rao, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the revision of an order passed by the learned first Class Magistrate of Ahmedabad, who found the accused persons guilty of assembling for the purpose of wagering in a street and sentenced them to the payment of a fine. The only question involved in the application is whether the piece of land upon which the accused persons were assembled is a street within the meaning of the definition in clause (e) of section 3 of the Bombay District Police Act IV of 1890. That definition is inclusive in its terms, and "street" is said to include, among other things, any road or square, court, alley or passage accessible to the public. That this place is a square or a court within the meaning of the definition is not denied. What is denied is that it is accessible to the public. The only question, therefore, at issue is whether this place is or is not accessible to the public; by that, as it appears to me, is meant whether any member of the public as such member of the public, has access to this land: and by "access to" would ordinarily be understood unimpeded entrance upon the land. Whether the members of the public have such access or not is a question which must be answered upon the evidence. There is no evidence directed to this point, nor does the Magistrate appear to have directed his own attention in this way. The record, therefore, as it stands, is not sufficient to enable us to decide the question arising. We reverse the conviction and sentence and remand the case for disposal on the evidence with reference to the observations in this judgment. Both sides to be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence with a view to showing whether or not the land in question is accessible to the public within the meaning of the definition quoted.

Case remanded.

Re application by VISHINDAS, ON BEHALF OF VARANBAI, WIDOW OF DEWAN HASSASING, UNDER SECTION 13, LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT

versus

M., PLEADER.

Pleader—Professional misconduct—Misbehavior—Sale of client's shares in private capacity—Appropriation of money to fees as Pleader—Wrongful conversion—Lien—Set-off—Undue influence—Consent—Burden of proof—Practice of not reducing agreements to writing—Sind Courts Act (XII of 1866), s. 16—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 217, 221.

M., a pleader of 20 years' standing, received, in his private capacity, certain shares from a lady client with instructions to sell them, and realize the proceeds on her behalf.

He appropriated the proceeds, without her consent, to the payment of his fees as a pleader. The client repeatedly insisted on the payment of the money realized as sale-proceeds; but her consent to the appropriation of the money was obtained owing to a desire on her part to avoid a quarrel with her pleader:—

Held, (1) that in appropriating to himself the sale-proceeds of the shares, M. was guilty of wrongful conversion of his client's money, and was liable to be dealt with under section 16 of the Sind Courts Act for his misbehaviour;

(2) that M. had no right to pay himself for his fees out of the sale-proceeds of the shares, irrespective of his client's wishes;

(3) that M. had no lien or right of retainer under section 221 or 217 of the Contract Act, for that would only attach in respect of services rendered in the matter of sale;

(4) that M. could have no general lien as a factor for sale in respect of a general balance due to him as pleader;

(5) that M. had not even a right of set off, for the shares were given to him in his private capacity;

(6) that M. stood in a fiduciary relation to his client and it was for him to show that she consented to the appropriation without undue influence on his part;

(7) that, under the circumstances, M. should be given an opportunity to atone for his misconduct by making restitution to his client.

The practice of special agreements of engagements of Pleaders for the conduct of important cases for heavy fees not being reduced to writing, strongly deprecated.

The Government Pleader, in support of the Rule.

Mr. Eardley Norton, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—A Rule has been issued in this case on M., a Pleader of the Court, to show cause why he should not be dealt with under section 16, para. (2), of the Sind Courts Act for misbehaviour.

The charge against him is that he wrongfully withheld or refused payment of monies due to his client, Varanbai.

The facts out of which the charge has arisen are briefly as follows:—

One Hassasing died at Hyderabad on the 25th November 1909, leaving a Will by which he bequeathed to his widow, Varanbai Rs. 16,000, a fixed deposit in the Bank of Bombay, Rs. 4,000 due on a policy of insurance and 20 shares in the Indian Specie Bank of the face value of Rs. 50 each. Disputes arose between Varanbai and the sons of Hassasing by a predeceased wife. The Will was in the possession of Varanbai, but three days after the death, her step-sons deprived her of the safe and boxes and a few days later, her mother's brother, Vishindas, and her grandmother, Bhagbai, were beaten by the step-sons and driven out of the house (pages 38, 73, 234). Varanbai, however, made over the Will to Bhagbai who sought the advice of a law agent, Lilaram. By his advice, the Will was read on the 27th January 1910 at a meeting at a temple. The step-sons denounced it as a forgery and successfully opposed an attempt by Lilaram to get it registered.

On the 9th February, a suit was filed by one of the sons for a declaration that the Will was a forgery and for an injunction restraining Varanbai from dealing with the securities and monies bequeathed to her and a temporary injunction to that effect was issued the same day.

Lilaram then engaged Mr. Parsram, Pleader, according to instructions received from Varanbai (page 59).

A week or two later, it was ascertained that a Karachi firm of Pleaders had been engaged by the step-sons and so Lilaram in consultation with Rattonsingh, Vishindas and with Varanbai's consent, engaged Messrs M. & Co. to represent Varanbai. This engagement was made somewhere about the end of February and the first instalment of the fee settled was paid Rs. 350 on the 2nd and Rs. 150 on the 9th March.

The suit was in April referred to the arbitration of two Pleaders, Mr. Harchandrai for the plaintiff, and Mr. Hiranand of Messrs M. & Co., for the defendant, Varanbai. Nevertheless, the ill-feeling between Varanbai and her step sons grew so acute that on 21st May, Mr Santdas of the firm of M. & Co. arranged for her removal to her maternal grandfather Rattonsingh's house.

The arbitration proceedings fell through and when the Courts re-opened in July after the vacation, there followed negotiations for arbitration without the interventon of the Court. No progress was, however, made towards the disposal of the suit except that in August a guardianship application was filed by M. & Co. in the District Court on behalf of Varanbai, and on the 19th September, an appeal was filed in this Court against the temporary injunction that had issued against Varanbai.

Now, this interim injunction had by some oversight omitted the Indian Specie Bank shares. Vishindas says that in June, Mr. Santdas paid a visit to his house and suggested that the shares should be sold to keep them out of the reach of the step-sons.

It is admitted that the scrip was made over by Vishindas and Mr. Santdas to Mr. M. as the latter said he had a friend Narayendas in Bombay who would sell them. The share transfer application was signed by Varanbai on the 8th June and the shares were sold on the 8th July.

Vishindas says that the first intimation of sale was given to him by Mr. Santdas in October and that he then went to Mr. M. in order to receive the sale-proceeds. Mr. M., at this and subsequent interviews, admittedly refused to part with the money.

It is this refusal that is the subject of the charge against Mr. M.

Now, according to Vishindas, Mr. M. was engaged at a fee of Rs. 2,000 inclusive of all but Court-fee expenses to conduct the suit in all Courts—Rs. 500 to be paid at once and the balance Rs. 1,500 on the successful termination of the suit. If this is the true version of the agreement, Mr. M.'s appropriation of the sale-proceeds before the termination of the suit was nothing less than a criminal breach of trust. But, according to Mr. M., the terms of the engagement were a fee of Rs. 2,000 exclusive of expenses for conducting the suit in the original Court only—Rs. 500 to be paid at once and Rs. 1,500 "as soon as monies came into Varanbai's hands." It is difficult to see how even this agreement would justify the refusal to part with the sale-proceeds. It would, however, mitigate the offence and reduce it to something less than criminal breach of trust. This is a matter which will have to be considered later—but the first question for decision is what were the trems on which Mr. M. was engaged. According to Vishindas, the persons present at the time of the engagement were Mr. M., the law agent, Lilaram, Rattonsingh, the grandfather, and Vishindas, the uncle of Varanbai. According to Mr. M., the persons present were himself, his partner Mr. Hiranand and Liiaram.

It is much to be regretted that the firm, when coming to a special agreement about the conduct of an important suit for a large fee, should not have recorded the terms of the engagement in writing. The only evidence of the terms of the agreement is oral testimony and that testimony is hopelessly conflicting.

It is, no doubt, improbable that the agreement should have been as Vishindas and Rattonsingh assert to include work in all Courts and all expenses except Court-fees—for the items of expense were uncertain and might have been heavy. But this improbability is discounted by the fact that it was expected that the case would soon be settled by a compromise or by arbitration. And the probabilities in favour of the truth of Vishindas' version are (1) the fact that an engagement of such importance is not likely to have been effected in the absence of the clients, (2) the numerous visits of protest that were paid when Mr. M. refused to give up the money, and (3) the fact that Messrs. M. & Co. did, as a matter of fact, work in the other Courts besides the original Court.

Now as to (1), the probability that Vishindas and Rattonsingh were present at the engagement is enhanced by the fact that Mr. Parsram was not engaged without being confronted with his clients and it does seem curious that Mr. M. can call no direct evidence in support of his story, but that of his partner and of the man Lilaram who appears, from Mr. Lalchand Chuharmal's evidence, to be little better than a tout. Again, as to (2), the visits are admitted and it is much more probable that they were visits of protest than visits of supplication. Dr. Wassanmal, who was present on one occasion, told Mr. Santdas that it was his duty to pay the money out of his own pocket if Mr. M. did not pay it. This incident is admitted by Mr. Santdas and Dr. Wassanmal is admittedly a disinterested witness. It is difficult to reconcile this language with Mr. M.'s version.

As to (3), there is scarcely an attempt to explain the appearance in the District Court in the guardianship application filed on behalf of Varanbai. Mr. M. says it was because his clients asked him to take it up free (page 212). His partner, Mr. Hiranand, says it was a small matter (page 174), the third partner Mr. Santdas frankly admits that he cannot give any explanation (page 126). But the case of the appeal filed in this Court is a more serious matter for it involved a good deal of trouble and expense. Mr. M. explains that this work was undertaken out of pity for his client. He says that intimation of the sale of the shares reached him at the end of August or the beginning of September (page 201); that a day or two later, Vishindas came and asked for the money and that he then replied that he would appropriate it to the balance due to his firm; that Vishindas wanted part at least of the money for domestic expenses but that he refused to let him have it; that subsequently Varanbai sent word to him by Lilaram that she would agree to his appropriating the money to his fees if he would give her a written receipt and file the appeal in the Judicial Commissioner's Court without making an extra charge. He says that he consented, gave the receipt and filed the appeal not under the terms of the original agreement, but as a concession.

If this explanation is true, the whole incident must have taken place in the first week of September for the vakalatnama for the appeal is dated the 8th September. Mr. M.'s evidence on the point is that of himself, his partners and the law agent, Lilaram. Another Pleader, Mr. Motiram, who is in the employ of the firm, says he did the clerical work of writing the receipt and another witness is a dismissed police-man who says he happened to be present when the receipt was signed.

The only documentary evidence is the accounts of the firm, which show a credit to Varanbai of the sale-proceeds on the 3rd September and a debt against her of the payment to the firm on the 9th September. But these accounts, the District Judge has described as looking fresh and newly written. The documentary evidence that would have been more convincing is the correspondence between Mr. M. and Naraindas as to the sale of the shares. This omission has given rise to the suggestion that the accounts are forged; that the sale-proceeds were received even earlier than September and that Mr. M. was concealing the fact in the hope that the suit would be compromised and that he would then be able to pay himself his fee without further trouble. On the other hand, as soon as Varanbai broke with Mr. M. in December and Mr. McInerny demanded an explanation, Mr. M. did plead the receipt in a letter written on the 22nd December. This raises a probability that the receipt was actually given and the non-production of the receipt leads to an inference that the date on it would not assist Varanbai's case.

Instead of producing the receipt, Varanbai's legal advisers, at a very late stage of the inquiry before the District Judge, produced a letter which is said to have been written by Lilaram at Varanbai's instructions to Mr. M. but which is said to have been retained by Vishindas as he suspected Lilaram of colluding with Mr. M. In this letter (Exhibit 128, page 319), Lilaram states that Varanbai assents to the appropriation of Rs. 1,000 of the sale-proceeds to Pleader's fees, but asks as a favour that the appeal in the Judicial Commissioner's Court should be filed gratis and further that the balance should not be taken for expenses, but should be returned to her. The letter is dated the 14th October. The letter was shown to Lilaram's son and when he first saw it, he recognized it as his father's writing. But, even assuming that the letter was written by Lilaram, it is difficult to believe that the letter is a fabrication in Mr. M.'s interest. The letter, no doubt, recites that Varanbai had assented to the appropriation—but a forgery in Mr. M.'s interest, dated the 14th October, would have recited the appropriation and the filing of the appeal as past events and would have merely asked that the balance of the sale-proceeds should be returned to Varanbai and not taken for expenses. It would have been quite easy to construct a letter which would have accorded with the date of the filing of the appeal. The letter really conflicts with Mr. M.'s case that the appropriation was prior to the filing of the appeal and looks more like a clumsy attempt to attribute through Mr. Lilaram to Mr. M an admission that the incident was not closed in October and the fact that the letter was not shown to Mr. M., when he was in the witness-box, does not raise an inference favourable to Varanbai.

On the whole, therefore, in spite of several circumstances which do not admit of a satisfactory explanation such as the alleged absence of the clients at the time of the engagement, the non-production of the correspondence with Narayendas and the visits of indignant protest alleged to be in the very week in which the vakalatnama was filed—I do not think I can safely come to the conclusion that the agreement of engagement has been proved to be other than that which Mr. M. alleges it to have been. I take this opportunity of expressing my strong disapproval of the practice of special agreements of engagement of Pleaders for the conduct of important cases for heavy fees not being reduced to writing It is a loose system which leaves a wide margin for malpractice on both sides—and in the present case, it has led to this deplorable result that an influential Pleader is charged with criminal breach of trust, perjury, and forgery of his accounts and I can come to no more decisive conclusion than that the weight of testimony on either side is so equally balanced that the charge is not proved. There now remains the question as to whether on the agreement Mr. M. alleges, he was justified in refusing to deliver the sale-proceeds to Vishindas from whom he had received the scrip.

Mr. Norton, who argued the case for Mr. M., said he did not rely on Varanbai's alleged acquiescence—and here he was, no doubt, right, for if the retention could only be justified by a subsequent ratification, then the retention must have been in violation of the terms of the original agreement. Mr. Norton sought to justify the refusal to deliver the sale-proceeds both under the agreement of engagement and under the instructions with which the scrip was delivered to Mr. M. It is obvious that if the right arose under the agreement, there was no necessity to rely on the instructions and conversely if the right arose under the instructions, it was unnecessary to plead the agreement. And I think it quite clear that there was no right either under the agreement or under the instructions.

The agreement stated by Mr. M. was that Varanbai should pay the balance of the fee as soon as money came into her hands. Therefore, as soon as the money was realized by the sale of the shares, the balance of the fee became payable. But the fact that the debt had become due, did not give Mr M. the right to pay himself or his firm irrespective of the wishes of his client and this was especially the case as the scrip had been given to him for a particular purpose. He had no particular lien or right of retainer under sections 221 or 217, Indian Contract Act, for that would only attach in respect of services rendered in the matter of the sale. He could have no general lien as factor for sale in respect of a general balance due to him as Pleader. He had not even a right of set off for the shares were given to him personally for sale and not to the firm.

It is faintly contended that the shares were given to the firm for sale. But it is no part of the business of a Pleaders' firm to sell stocks and shares. Mr. Santdas said he had never sold a share in his life—and the evidence that the shares were given to Mr. M. personally is quite conclusive. This is Mr. M.'s own account of the transaction (page 201):—

"One day, Mr. Santdas brought the shares to me and said that they had to be sold and he did not know how to do it. I said I have a friend at Bombay, and, if you will allow me, I will send the shares to him to be sold. Vishindas was with him. He said that this might be done. The shares were handed over to me and I sent them to Bombay to Seth Narayendas." It is quite clear that Vishandas requested Mr. M. to sell the shares privately through a personal friend of Mr. M. When the shares were sold, Mr. M. says:—"Seth Narayendas said that he was crediting me with the amount and I wrote agreeing to this." He had asked whether he should send the money and I said he might credit it to my account. Again, the account (page 134) shows that Mr. M. had a personal account with Naraindas and Mr. M. admits this for he says (at page 214) of the balance, Rs. 1,499-10 9 was spent on my behalf and Rs. 204-8 0 on behalf of my partner.

Under the agreement, therefore, Mr. M. had no lien or other right to appropriate the money to fees and if Varanbai had sued for the money, he would not even have had a right to set-off to this personal claim the balance of fees due to his firm.

Now, as to the instructions under which the scrip was received for sale. There is on this point also a faint suggestion that the scrip was given for the purpose of realizing money to pay the fees of Mr. M.'s firm. The only evidence on which this suggestion rests are two statements one by Vishindas and the other by Mr. Santdas. Vishindas, when first examined, stated that Mr. Santdas came to his house and advised him to sell the shares which had been omitted from the temporary injunction and "use the money as they had no other money with them to incur household expenses and Pleader's fees." On the next day, Vishindas explained that by Pleader's fees, he meant the debt already incurred in paying the first instalment of Rs. 500 and the fee paid to Mr. Parsram. That he did mean this is evident from the fact that in the next few lines of his deposition on the first day, he stated that Mr. Santdas, when informing him of the sale of the shares, advised him to go and get the money from Mr. M. (page 35) and that when he failed to get the money from out of Mr. M., Mr. Santdas told him that he was ashamed of his partner's conduct (page 36).

Mr. Santdas (page 115) says that a similar expression was used to him when the shares were given to him, but he evidently did not construe the phrase as an authority to appropriate the sale-proceeds, for he says (at page 122): "I could not say what Vishindas was thinking about when he asked me to sell the shares, or whether he thought that we should appropriate the money. I did not then suggest, nor did any member of the firm, that the money would be so appropriated. The money was appropriated after settlement. No such suggestion had been made up to the time of the receipt of intimation of the sale from Bombay."

It is clear, therefore, that no authority to appropriate the sale-proceeds to the balance of the fees was given at the time of the delivery of the scrip. There was no occasion at that time for Varanbai to pay or for the Pleaders to press for payment. Rupees 500 had already been paid and no work was being done. This was in June when the case was still with the arbitrators to whom it had been referred by the Court in April, Mr. M.'s own admission, however, settles the matter for he has said at page 205 :—

"When the shares were made over, there was no suggestion from me or from any body else that we might appropriate the money. Vishindas may have been once to the office to inquire about the money before I got intimation from Seth Naraindas. He must have been to office several times between June and August. He may not have met me. When he came to me, I did not tell him that when the money came, I should keep it for fees. There was no talk at all of such appropriation before the intimation of sale was received. The thought never crossed my mind, when I received the certificate, that this would be security for my fees. I first conceived the idea when I got the intimation. I first credited the money to Varanbai: then Vishindas came and I gave him the information and when he asked me for payment, I said my claim was first."

The defence that the sale proceeds were appropriated under instructions received at the time of the delivery of the shares is purely an afterthought. It was not set up before the case reached this Court. There is no suggestion of it in the letter of Mr. M. to Mr. McInerny of the 22nd December—nor in the written statement—nor in the deposition of Mr. M. Throughout his deposition, Mr. M. seeks to justify his retention of the sale-proceeds solely on the agreement; and on this all he can say is:—"She was my client and owed me money; and so I thought I was right in appropriating it; I still think so." It is time Mr. M. revised his conceptions of right and wrong. He probably was not consciously dishonest, but he was guilty of wrongful conversion in appropriating to himself the sale-proceeds of the shares. In doing so, he abused the confidence of this client for the shares were given to him in the confidence that he would sell them and pay the proceeds to his client.

This is misconduct which, in my opinion, would merit suspension; the matter is aggravated by the fact that Varanbai was at the time a destitute widow dependent on the charity of her maternal relations.

I do not wish, however, to deal harshly with Mr. M., who is a Pleader of 20 years standing. I would, therefore, give him an opportunity to atone for his misconduct by making restitution to Varanbai and for this purpose, I would defer passing final orders to this day week.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—I concur with the conclusions of the learned Judicial Commissioner and shall only deal with some further points which seem to me to require consideration.

The following facts are, in my opinion, established by the evidence in this case:—

(1) the scrip was made over by Vishindas to Mr. Santdas for sale in order that the proceeds might be given to Varanbai, as she was hard up and wanted money for various expenses (pages 34, 115);

(2) Mr. M. agreed to arrange for the sale through his friend Seth Naraindas, in a purely private capacity and as an act of friendship, and not in any way in his capacity as Varanbai's Pleader (pages 115, 204, 206, line 500);

(3) there was no idea or suggestion of the proceeds being appropriated towards Messrs. M. & Co.'s fees when the transaction took place and Mr. M. did not think of doing this until after sale or the receipt of intimation of the sale (pages 122, 206) :

(4) the money realized by the sale, instead of being remitted to Mr. M. for payment to the vendor of the scrip, as should have been done in the ordinary course, was with Mr. M.'s consent placed to his credit in a private (or at any rate mainly private, cf., page 214) account between him and Seth Naraindas (page 201);

(5) there was considerable delay in informing Vishindas of the sale which took place on the 8th July, but was admittedly not communicated to him till the end of August or beginning of September (page 201) and this delay is not adequately explained nor the alleged reason for it supported by evidence which was available as to the date when Seth Naraindas informed Mr. M. of it (Cf., Judge's report, lines 450-490, at pages 24-26);

(6) when Vishindas was informed, he demanded payment of the amount from Mr. M. (page 201, line 223, page 206, line 529); and Mr. M. either then or the next day declined to pay him the amount, saying he would appropriate it towards the firm's fees (page 35, line 149, page 201, line 229);

(7) subsequent to this refusal of Mr. M. to pay over the proceeds, considerable efforts were made by Vishindas to get Mr. M. to alter his mind and pay over the money, but without success (pages 36, 37, 69, 71, 72, 82, 83, 117, 118, 175, 182, 205, 206, 262, 263, etc., etc.; Cf., Judge's report, lines 345 to 378, pages 20, 21);

(8) Varanbai's consent to the appropriation, if obtained at all, was not a "free consent" but an unwilling acquiescence in a completed act of which she did not approve and to which she only consented through "undue influence" on the part of Mr. M.

The last point requires more detailed notice than the others which are sufficiently established by the evidence referred to under each head.

There can, I think, be no doubt whatever that Varanbai wanted the money herself and was not disposed to consent to its appropriation for fees. Lilaram, whose evidence is entirely in favour of Mr. M and cannot be suspected so far as it contains any admission in Varanbai's favour, clearly implies this when he deposes "I told Varanbai that we should not quarrel with the Pleaders: it would be better to be quiet and make other arrangements to raise the money. She said that her Rs. 100 maintenance had also been stopped and she wanted money for the marriages" (page 263, lines 401-409). This is corroborated by the admitted fact that Varanbai subsequently sent for Mr. Parsram and complained of want of money and asked him to get her some money out of the sale-proceeds of her shares from Mr. M. (page 224, line 251, page, 325, line 265, page 264, lines 443-458). In view of this and the other efforts made to induce Mr. M. to part with the money, there can, I think, be no reasonable doubt whatever as to the correctness of the District Judge's view that there was not merely a plea for mercy, but that she and Vishindas strongly objected to the appropriation (page 21). No doubt, it would have been better if Varanbai herself had been examined on the point but in view of the fact that all the arrangements with Mr. M. were made not personally, but through intermediaries and the well known reluctance of respectable women to give evidence, I do not think this sufficient to throw any doubt on the above conclusion; and it was perfectly open to Mr. M. to have applied for her examination, had he thought this would in any way benefit his case.

I am quite prepared to accept the evidence that Varanbai did eventually consent to the appropriation, but this does not, in my opinion, put an end to the whole matter. Even taking Lilaram's account of the circumstances under which that consent was obtained, it is clear that it was due to a desire to avoid a quarrel with Mr. M's firm, who were acting as her Pleaders in the litigation and could seriously prejudice her by their conduct of the litigation, and to his definite refusal to part with the money, in spite of the efforts made to induce him to do so. There was an "element of coercion" in his conduct as well as "an unconscientious use of power arising out of the circumstances;" and the case, in my opinion, clearly falls under section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, in that Mr. M. was "in a position to dominate the will of" Varanbai and "used that position to obtain an unfair advantage over" her; cf. Ganesh v. Vishnu(1), and the other case there cited.

Mr. M. stood in a fiduciary relation to Varanbai, and must, therefore, under sub-section

(1) 32 B. 37 at pp. 44, 45; 9 Bom. L. R. 1164.

(2) of section 16 be deemed to be in a position to dominate the will of Varanbai. And under section 111 of the Evidence Act, the burden of showing that the consent was not due to undue influence on his part lies on him. Cf. In re Mid-Kent Fruit Factory (2) and In re Baylis (3). Not only has he failed to discharge this burden, but the circumstances point all the other way.

In any case, even supposing that there was no "undue influence" within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act, Mr. M.'s conduct seems to me to have been clearly improper and to amount to "misbehaviour" under section 16 of Bombay Act XII of 1866. The scrip was given to him for sale in the confidence that he would hand over the proceeds on receipt, and he abused that confidence in order to gain an advantage for himself, to which he was not entitled. He contravened the principle that a trustee shall not derive any personal advantage of profit from the trust (Lewin's Law of Trusts, 10th Edition, page 296; Indian Trusts Act, 1882, section 51). Taking the case as merely one of principal and agent, he infringed the rule that agents are not permitted "to deal validly with their principals in any case except where there is the most entire good faith, and full disclosure of all facts and circumstances, and an absence of undue influence, advantage, or imposition" (Snell's Principles of Equity, 12th Edition, page 545). And this applies a fortiori to the case of a Solicitor or Pleader and client [ib., page 534, citing Tyrrell v. Bank of London (4)].

In this particular case, no attempt was made by Mr. M. to carry out the trust in a straight-forward and honest way. He at once had the proceeds credited to himself in a private account and gave Varanbai no opportunity of handling them or acting as a free agent in regard to their disposal. He actually appropriated the money before telling her or Vishindas of the sale and even making a pretence of obtaining their consent. This was a clear breach of trust and the subsequent forced and reluctant consent of Varanbai induced by his refusal to give up the money and the objection to quarrelling with her Pleader, does not, in my opinion, mitigate the improper conduct preceding it.

There can also be no question that by this conduct he gained an unfair advantage. Admittedly, he had no lien on the money for his costs, or right of set-off in regard thereto; and his agreement with Varanbai certainly did not entitle him to appropriate the money towards his costs nolens volens in the way he did. Even to a charge of theft, it is no sufficient answer that the accused took the property in satisfaction of a debt due to himself (Mayne's Criminal Law of India, 2nd Edition, page 725); and his act technically amounted to "wrongful conversion," for which Varanbai could claim damages even though the act were done under a mistaken but honest and even reasonable supposition of being lawfully entitled (Pollock's Law of Torts, 7th Edition, page 350). By his conduct he secured payment of his costs in full at a comparatively early stage of the litigation and in direct contravention of the terms on which the scrip had been entrusted to him for sale. And the result in this case is that his firm have been paid their costs in full for the obligation on their part of carrying on litigation which they have only discharged in part and cannot now perform.

If Mr. M. had tendered the money and merely requested Varanbai to pay him the balance of costs in full or in part in accordance with her agreement, so as to leave her a free agent to decide, there would not have been any ground for objection. But his conduct has been quite the reverse and throughout of an improper character. Even if he made a concession to Varanbai in agreeing to conduct her case in the Appellate Court as well as in the original Court, this does not justify his breach of trust and the undue pressure he put on her in the matter.

It is recognized as the duty of a Solicitor to keep clear and accurate accounts of all monies received by him for and on behalf of his client and to keep such monies apart from his own (Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, Volume XI, page 590), and it is important that conduct, which is a breach of the relations of confidence and trust which should exist between client and Solicitor—or in this country client and Pleader—should not be allowed to pass unnoticed by a Court which is authorized

CRIMINAL REFERENCE No. 43 OF 1912.
May 25, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Heaton and

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

JANI HIRA—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 420—Cheating—Immoral and illegal contract—Advance on such contract by false representation.

A. agreed to let her daughter on hire to B. for concubinage for a period of one year in consideration of B. paying her Rs. 70.

B. paid A. Rs. 35 in advance. Subsequently, A. refused to deliver her daughter to B. or to return the sum of Rs. 35 advanced by him.

On these facts, A. was convicted of cheating:

Held, that the conviction should be set aside, as a party should not be allowed to prosecute on a charge of cheating when he would not be entitled to obtain from a Civil Court any relief for breach of the contract.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge of Nasik.

FACTS.—The accused agreed to let her daughter on hire to the complainant for concubinage for one year in consideration of the complainant paying her Rs. 70. The complainant paid Rs. 35 in advance. Subsequently, the accused refused to allow her daughter to go to complainant or to refund the money advanced to her. The accused was convicted of cheating on these facts.

GROUNDS.—"It is submitted that the conviction and sentence are not sustainable. There is no evidence to show that there was any fraudulent or dishonest intention on the part of accused at the time she took the amount of Rs. 35 from the complainant. On the other hand, it is most probable that at that time she intended to let complainant have her daughter, Sundri, and only changed her mind later.

That being so, if the arrangement had been an ordinary contract instead of being merely a void agreement, no criminal prosecution would have been successful and the complainant would have had to sue in the Civil Courts for specific performance or compensation or refund.

In this case, however, a suit for specific performance or compensation or refund would not lie as the agreement was void from the beginning for immorality.

It seems to me to be opposed to public policy to allow a person, who has parted with money under an agreement which the law lays down is void for immorality, to harass the other party to the agreement in the Criminal Courts when he could not do so in the Civil Courts. I am, besides, of the opinion that the offence of cheating was not committed."

Mr. R. V. Desai, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—For the reasons stated by the Sessions Judge in his statement of the case, we think that this is not a case for a Criminal Court. The accused and the complainant had entered into a contract which was clearly void for immorality. Therefore, the complainant would not be entitled to obtain any relief from a Civil Court for its breach. That is no reason why he should be allowed to prosecute the accused on a charge of cheating. Therefore, we think that the Magistrate's conviction and sentence must be reversed and the accused acquitted and discharged.

Conviction and sentence reversed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), s. 488 (9)—Residence of accused—Settled abode of mistress—Mistress not shown to have permanent residence anywhere.

For the purposes of section 488 (9) of the Criminal Procedure Code, a man may be said to reside with the mother of his illegitimate children at the place of her settled abode, if he visits her there occasionally, so long as he has the intention of continuing to so visit her.

Where a mother of illegtimate children is not shown to have a permanent residence anywhere, her stay for two months at a place where she is occasionally visited by the father of the children, is sufficient to constitute that place as her residence for the purposes of the section.

Fernandez v. Wray, 25 B. 176; 3 Bom. L. R. 291; Bright v. Bright, 36 C. 964; 4 Ind. Cas. 419, relied upon.

Ananthu Narayana v. Periyana Kone, 5 M. H. C. R. 101, referred to.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this application is whether or not it was in the District of Larkana that opponent last resided with the mother of his illegitimate children, within the meaning of section 488 (9), Criminal Procedure Code.

The facts, as they appear from the record, are that applicant was formerly the kept mistress of opponent, Mahomed Hiat, and bore him two children, a boy and a girl. Mahomed Hiat belongs to the Jacobabad Taluka. The ordinary place of residence of applicant is in Larkana, but, during the period of her connection with opponent, she used to stay from time to time in his otak at the village of Naoro in the Taluka of Jacobabad; after her last visit to that place, she returned to Larkana and lived, for two months, in an otak belonging to a relation of opponent's, and she and her children were there maintained by him. During the two months opponent visited her occasionally, and it appears from her deposition that, on one occasion, he must have stayed at least two days. It was there that the connection ceased, and the two children were deserted by the father.

Now, the word "reside" has a variety of meanings according to the Statute or document in which it is used. [Per Erle, C. J., Nuef v. Mutter (1)]. It is an "ambiguous word," and may receive a different meaning according to the position in which it is found. [Per Cotton, L. J., Re Bowie (2).]

To reside means, primarily, to have a settled abode for a time. But a man may reside, or have a settled abode, at a place where his family, or his servants eat, drink and sleep, [per Bayley, J., Regina v. North Curry (3)]. In Fatima Begam v. Sakina Begam (4), it was held that a soldier, who travels about from place to place with his regiment, has his dwelling place where his family lived, and whither he had the intention of returning. A man may, therefore, be said to reside or to reside with his wife, at any place where his wife has a settled abode; and it is not necessary that he should himself live there permanently, or ordinarily, provided that he has the intention of going there and living there when opportunity occurs. [See also Ananthu Narayana v. Periyana Kone (5)].

Though "reside" connotes a stay of some time, no minimum has been laid down as a qualification. In Fernandez v. Wray (6), it was held that where a man has no fixed dwelling, any place where he is staying at any particular time may be treated as his residence; and in Bright v. Bright (7), the parties were held to have last resided together, for the purposes of the Divorce Act, at a Calcutta hotel where they had stayed for about a fortnight, they having no permanent residence.

In considering the case of a kept mistress, we cannot reasonably demand that the nature of residence on the part of the man should be more permanent than is required in the case of a lawful husband. I would, therefore, hold that a man may be said to reside with the mother of his illegitimate children, if he visits her only occasionally at her settled abode, so long as he has the inten-

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 257—Practice—Defence witnesses—Refusal to examine them—Evidence of witnesses considered unnecessary.

After an accused person was called upon to open his defence, he named thirteen witnesses, eight of whom were examined by the Magistrate and as to the remaining five, the Magistrate recorded: "All these people repeat the defence story; I shall dispense with their evidence as unnecessary":

Held, that the refusal of the Magistrate to examine the remaining witnesses was not justified; unless he had declined to issue process for the attendance of the defence witnesses under section 257, Criminal Procedure Code, he was not competent to decline to examine them on the ground that their evidence was unnecessary.

Mr. Robertson, with him Mr. P. D. Bhide, for the Accused.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Complainant.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—The petitioners here have been convicted of the offence of rioting under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced each to a small fine. They apply in revision on the ground that a serious illegality was committed by the learned second Class Magistrate, before whom this trial was heard. Fortunately there is no dispute as to the facts underlying this contention. These facts are: that after the petitioners had been called upon to open their defence, several witnesses were called by them. Eight of those witnesses' depositions were recorded by the learned Magistrate, though in regard to six of them, it is clear that their story has been seriously abbreviated, possibly mutilated. However that may be, when the Magistrate had exhausted these witnesses, it would seem that he had also exhausted his own patience. For, concerning five other witnesses, who remained to be examined, he writes only: "all these people repeat the defence story; I shall dispense with their evidence as unnecessary." It does not appear upon what grounds the learned Magistrate stated that these people, who had never been heard, would, if they were heard, repeat the defence story. And the Magistrate should have borne in mind that, although the evidence of these witnesses may have appeared to him to be unnecessary, those witnesses' attendance was needed, not in the Magistrate's interest, but in the interests of the accused persons. If, therefore, the accused persons regarded them as necessary witnesses, it was not for the Magistrate to pronounce them to be unnecessary before he had heard them. It is quite clear that procedure such as this cuts at the very root of the fairness of a criminal trial. The case might have been different if the learned Magistrate had brought himself within the provisions of section 257 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which empowers a Magistrate to decline to issue process where he considers that application for such process is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Where the Magistrate so considers and records in writing his ground for so considering, it is competent to him to decline to enforce the attendance of witnesses. In this case, however, the Magistrate has not brought himself or his procedure within the provisions of section 257. And there is no justification for his action in refusing to hear the witnesses whom the defence desired to call. I think, therefore, that the petitioners are entitled to have their conviction set aside.

Mr. Kelkar, who appears on the other side, has urged that if the conviction be set aside, a re-trial ought to be ordered. But having regard to the triviality of the offence, said to have been committed by these accused persons, as disclosed by the punishment which the Magistrate saw fit to award, and having regard also to the harassment which these proceedings, protracted for such a long period, must have already caused to the petitioners,

I think it unnecessary that a re-trial should be ordered. The fines, if paid, to be refunded.

HEATON J.—I concur.

THE MUNICIPAL BOARD OF CHAPRA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B.C. of 1884), ss. 217, 273, 353—Prosecution—Offence under Act—Institution of prosecution—Consent of Commissioners—Evidence of sanction what is—Public authority—Consent in writing—Tabular form—"I have seen," "prosecute," whether valid consent.

The only evidence of sanction of prosecution by a public authority, is a writing under the seal and signature of that authority.

In a tabular form, called the form of prosecution, there was the name, whether of the accused or the complainant was not shown, the second head "prosecute," presumably the charge which was laid against the man, the cause; names of witnesses; the date; and column of remarks; the Chairman or Vice-Chairman (of the Municipality); and in this column of remarks were the words: "I have seen myself" signed S. C. G. In another similar form, in the column of remarks, was the word "prosecute:"

Held, that this was not authority, written or otherwise, showing the consent of the Commissioners or the Vice-Chairman on their behalf to a prosecution within section 353 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884.

The authority which the Vice-Chairman has is to convey the sanction of the Commissioners, and not to pass any order of any kind, and he must convey that sanction under his own seal and signature to the Magistrate.

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Chapra, dated January 19th, 1912, convicting the petitioner under section 217 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, and sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 30 which order was, on appeal, modified by the Sessions Judge of Saran, on April 20th, 1912 by altering the conviction to one under section 273.

Mr. Huque, Counsel, Babus Manmotha Nath Mukherjee, Chandra Sekhar Banerjee and Moulvi Nuruddin Ahmed, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute on the first ground on which it was issued. It was not necessary for the learned Magistrate to put forward the plea that the powers of the Chairman had been delegated to the Vice-Chairman because that was not the point on which the Rule was issued. But if he did put forward such a plea, he should have stated having regard to the ruling in Kherode Prosad Paul v. The Chairman of the Howrah Municipality (1), that this delegation had been lawfully made in writing; possibly as the first ground of the Rule had to do with the sanction in writing he may have meant that this delegation was made according to law. However, the Rule did not call upon him to show cause on that ground.

The point in this case is that, supposing the Vice-Chairman to have authority, we have no reason to suppose he has not, he must sanction the prosecution in writing; and there is no such sanction on the record. The only evidence of sanction of prosecution by a public authority is a writing under the seal and signature of that authority. We are wholly unaware of any procedure by which the complainant can come before a Magistrate and say, 'I have got the sanction of the public authority for this prosecution, and not be required to produce any writing showing that such sanction has been given. Here there is a tabular form which is called the form of prosecution. There is the name, whether of the accused or the complainant is not shown; the second head "prosecute," presumably the charge which is laid against the man; the cause; names of the witnesses; the date: and column of remarks; the "Chairman or Vice-Chairman;" and in this column of remarks are the words,—"I have seen myself," signed Shama Churn Ghosh. Who Shama Charn Ghosh is we do not know and we do not wish to inquire. But this certainly is not authority, written or otherwise, showing the consent of the Commissioners or the Vice-Chairman on their behalf to a prosecution.

On this ground, the order of the lower Court must be discharged. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

In Rule No. 747, the order of Shama Churn Ghosh is different. Instead of saying, "I have seen myself", he says, "prosecute". This does not seem to meet the law any more than the other. The authority which he has is to convey the sanction of the Commissioners and not to pass any order of any kind, and he must convey that sanction under his own seal and signature to the Magistrate.

(1) 20 C. 448.

This Rule will also be made absolute on the same ground. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 14, 15, 19 (f)—Possession of gun—Servant—Master having license, dead—License not renewed—Servant continuing to retain possession of gun.

A. was licensed to possess a gun: the gun was kept by his servant the accused. A. died and B., who succeeded to the management of A.'s property, failed to renew the license.

Two years after A.'s death, the quarters belonging to the accused were searched and the gun found therein.

The accused contended that the responsibility could not be attributed to him but ought to be attributed to B.

Held, that the accused had possession and control of the gun in contravention of the provisions of sections 14, 15 of the Arms Act and was, therefore, guilty of an offence under section 19 (f).

Criminal application for revision from conviction and sentence recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, first class, Kaira.

Mr. L. A. Shah, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. S. Rao, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of a sentence passed upon one Jafu Bapu under clause (f) of section 19 of the Indian Arms Act of 1878. That clause provides a penalty for any person who has in his possession or under his control any arms in contravention of the provisions of sections 14 and 15. The accused was the servant of one Chhotabhai, who was exempted from the provisions of the Arms Act; in other words, was licensed to bear this particular arm, a gun. Chhotabhai, however, died two years ago, and the search of the quarters belonging to the accused has revealed the existence of the gun in those quarters. It is said the responsibilty cannot be attributed to the accused but ought to be attributed to Vithaldas who succeeded Chhotabhai in the management of the property, and whose business it was, it is said, to renew the license which Chhotabhai had enjoyed. It appears to me that whatever may be the value of that argument on the question of moral responsibility, it has no value when the question is as to the meaning of section 19 (f) of the Arms Act. The gun in this case is an unlicensed gun, that is to say, it was possessed in contravention of the provisions of sections 14 and 15. It appears to me impossible to say that the gun was not in the possession or under the control of the accused person, for his master, who alone had been exempted, died two years before this discovery. For over two years, the gun had remained with the accused, and he was the only person who can properly be said to have had the possession and the control of this weapon; in my opinion, therefore, this application must be rejected, so far as regards the point of law.

We observe, however, that the sentence inflicted was a fine of Rs. 50 or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment. We have asked the learned Government Pleader whether he has instructions to defend this sentence on the ground that for some particular reason its apparent severity was necessary. He has told us, however, that he has no such instructions, and he leaves the point entirely to us. That being so, we think that the sentence is unnecessarily harsh and we reduce it to a fine of Rs. 10, or in default one week's rigorous imprisonment. The excess fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Sentence reduced.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145—Dispute relating to land likely to cause breach of the peace—Discretion of Magistrate.

Where a dispute relating to possession of immoveable property is likely to cause a breach of the peace, a Magistrate has a discretion to proceed either under section 107 or under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Sheoraj Roy v. Chatter Roy, 32 C. 966; 2 Cr. L. J. 769; 10 C. W. N. 288, Emperor v. Ram Baran Singh, 28 A. 406; A. W. N. (1906) 61; 3 Cr. L. J. 323, followed.

Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge of Ghazipur.

Mr. Ahmad Kareem, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—A Magistrate of the first class, after taking evidence, came to the conclusion that there was great probability of a breach of the peace.

There is apparently between the parties a dispute relating to immoveable property, and according to the Magistrate, one party is trying to set aside a possession of long standing on their own authority with the result, the learned Magistrate says, that a great riot will take place in Pargana Duaba; he accordingly bound down the petitioners before me and required that they should give security for keeping the peace for one year.

I am asked to interfere with this order on the ground that the dispute being a dispute in regard to immoveable property, the Magistrate should not have acted under section 107, and in support of this contention I am referred to the case of Mahadeo Kunwar v. Bisu (1). In that case, an order has been passed under section 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, without any of the procedure prescribed by section 145 being adopted, and that order was set aside as an order passed without jurisdiction. The learned Counsel relies upon certain dicta contained in the judgment in which it was laid down that where a report was made by the Police that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed between the parties concerned regarding certain land, the Magistrate should have proceeded in the manner prescribed in section 145 and not under section 107, but the learned Judge has been careful to add that "it was not necessary to decide, for the purposes of this case, whether the fact of the Magistrate having been informed that a dispute existed in regard to land, ousted his jurisdiction to take proceedings under section 107."

I was also referred to the case of Balajit Singh v. Bhoju Ghose (2). The learned Judges in that case holding that as the language of section 145 was mandatory and that of section 107 contained words which were discretionary, the order passed under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, when there was a dispute relating to land, was an order which should be set aside. I find, however, in the case of Sheoraj Roy v. Chatter Roy (3), the learned Judges of same High Court held that where a dispute relating to possession of land is likely to cause a breach of the peace, a Magistrate has a discretion to proceed either under section 107 or under sections 144 and 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In Emperor v. Ram Baran Singh (4), the learned Judge of this Court held that a Magistrate under similar circumstances might legally take action under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. With that view, I entirely concur.

It is a matter of experience that cases coming under section 145 are, as a rule, cases long drawn out, and in the interval it is more than probable that owing to the hot blood excited over the matter, a breach of the peace might occur. The Magistrate often does well to take action under section 107. It is open to the petitioners in the present case to move the Magistrate having jurisdiction to take action under section 145, if they make out a proper case. I have no doubt that the Magistrate will take the necessary steps.

I find no cause for interference and dismiss the application.

CRIMINAL REVISION APPLICATION No. 1 OF 1912.
March 21, 1912.
Present:—Mr. Justice Batchelor and Mr. Justice Heaton.
In re KHANDERAO YESHWANT—APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—False recital in panchnama—Case committed to Magistrate—Magistrate finding case to be false—Sanction against Police officer preparing panchnama but not appearing as witness in the case—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211.

The test for the necessity of the sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, is the character of the offence and not the character of the offender.

Sanction is necessary under the section when an offence punishable under section 211, Penal Code, is committed in or, in relation to, any proceeding in any Court.

A Police constable, A., prepared a panchnama in regard to an offence said to have been committed by a certain Talukdar under the Arms Act. The investigation into the alleged offence was not made by A. but by the village constable who sent the case up to the Sub-Inspector, by whom in turn it was committed to a Magistrate. The Magistrate found that certain recitals in the panchnama were false and that the charge imputed to the Talukdar was false. He discharged the Talukdar and directed the prosecution of A. under section 211 of the Penal Code. A. did not appear before the Magistrate in the case against the Talukdar.

A. applied to the Sessions Judge, who found that the order of the Magistrate was an order for sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, but that no such sanction was necessary in the circumstances of the case before A. could be prosecuted:

Held, that A. could not be prosecuted without preliminary sanction because

(a) the offence imputed to A was the instigation of the false charge against the Talukdar, which took the form of a trial;

(b) even if the offence of instigation was committed before the proceeding in Court was begun, the instigation was an act committed in relation to the proceeding held by the Magistrate against the Talukdar.

Mr. L. A. Shah, for the Applicant.

Mr. G S. Rao, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—The petitioner here is a Policeman who, on the 20th February 1911, was at a village, named Dhanchi occupied in work about the census. On that day in that village a panchnama was made in regard to an offence said to have been committed by a certain talukdar under the Arms Act. The investigation into this alleged offence was not made by the petitioner but by the village constable Shamserkhan, who sent up the case to the Sub-Inspector by whom in turn it was committed to a Magistrate.

In the course of trying this alleged offence of the talukdar's, the learned Magistrate found that certain recitals in the panchnama were false. The talukdar was discharged, the Magistrate being of opinion that the charge imputed to him was false. In that view, he issued notice to the village constable Shamserkhan to show cause why sanction for his prosecution should not be granted under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. After hearing Shamserkhan, the Magistrate issued notice also against the present petitioner, and ultimately on the 8th of September 1911, the Magistrate made an order directing the petitioner's prosecution under section 211, Indian Penal Code. The petitioner applied for a certified copy of that order but the Magistrate refused it on the ground that the order formed part of an official correspondence between himself and the District Police.

Thus rebuffed by the Magistrate, the petitioner applied to the Sessions Court and there the learned Judge has taken this view, that the order which the Magistrate made was really, whether the Magistrate knew it or not, an order for sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. But the learned Judge was of opinion that no such sanction was necessary in the circumstances of this case, and upon that ground, he rejected the petitioner's application.

It seems to me that there can be no doubt that the order made by the Magistrate is an order for sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The order has been read to us, and though it is couched in Gujarati, the English word "sanction" is used to describe it The false charge in connection with which the sanction is given is also set out. And the order seems to me to contain all that is necessary under section 195. Next, I am of opinion that in the circumstances of this case, the petitioner could not be prosecuted without a preliminary sanction being granted against him It is, no doubt, the fact that the petitioner himself did not appear before the Magistrate who was trying the case against the talukdar. But as I understand section 195, the test for the necessity of the grant of sanction is not the character of the offender but the character of the offence. Sanction is necessary under the section when an offence punishable under section 211, Indian Penal Code, is committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any Court. Now the offence imputed to the petitioner here was the instigation of the false charge against the talukdar, the charge which, in the ordinary course of criminal procedure, took the form of a trial. It may be that the instigation was committed before the proceeding in Court was begun but, none-the-less, I am of opinion, that the instigation was an act committed in relation to the proceeding held by the Magistrate against the talukdar.

In that view of the case, the order made by the learned Sessions Judge must be set aside and the petition must be remanded to him to pass such order as he deems fit in the light of this judgment.

HEATON, J.—I concur.

Order set aside.

Confession—Police officer—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 25, 26.

A confession made to a foreign Police officer is inadmissible in evidence according to sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act.

Queen-Empress v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose, 1 C. 207; 25 W. R. Cr. 36; Queen-Empress v. Naglakala, 22 B. 235, followed.

Appeal under section 413 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the judgment of acquittal passed on the accused in Sessions Case No. 9 of 1911, by the Sessions Judge of South Arcot.

The accused Veeraraghava Pillai, who is a resident of Chinnababusamudram, a village of South Arcot district, was charged with having murdered his step-brother on the 14th December 1910. The boy was seen alive till noon of the 14th and his body was discovered the next morning floating in a well near Chinnababusamudram, which is nine miles from Pondicherry. The accused confessed his guilt to the Police at Pondicherry on the evening of the same day, i. e., 14th December, and made a detailed statement of the same before Monsieur Duru, Assistant Procureur, on the 16th, while he was in the custody of the Police. Monsieur Duru was not called as a witness nor was any record of the statement taken by him attempted to be filed as evidence by the prosecution. The Sessions Judge disallowed the confession made to the Police on the 14th December and held that Monsieur Duru was not a Magistrate according to British law, as he cannot try an offender and has to prosecute offenders before the French Criminal Courts, and that the statement, recorded by him on the 16th December 1910, may not be proved and the accused was accordingly acquitted. The Government preferred an appeal against the said acquittal on the ground that the Sessions Judge erred in holding that the confessions made to the French Police authorities and to the French Magistatrate could not be proved.

In the course of the hearing of the appeal, it was contended by the Public Prosecutor that the expression "confessions made to a Police officer" in section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act should be restricted to those made to a British Police officer and not to those made to the Police of a Foreign Country, and that the comprehensive interpertation, given to the expression "Police officer" in Queen-Empress v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (1) by Garth, C. J., should not be extended to Police Officers of a Foreign Country, while the defence argued to the contrary. The other question as to the admissibility of the confessional statement recorded by M. Duru was argued for a while, and given up by the Public Prosecutor for the reasons given in the judgment.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. I. V. Ramanuja Rau, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the decisions reported in

(1) 1 C. 207; 25 W. R. Cr. 36.

Queen v. Hurribolechunder Ghosh (1) and Queen-Empress v. Nogla Kala (2) as to the meaning of the words "Police Officers," in sections 25 and 26 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Mr. Devadoss for Public Prosecutor is unable to refer us to any document recovered by Mr. Duru, which the Sessions Judge improperly refused to admit as evidence, nor can he say that Mr. Durai, or any one else, was tendered as a witness to prove a confession made before Mr. Duru. There is, therefore, no ground for interference with the acquittal. The appeal is dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Statement made after discovery of property—Evidence—Pointing out property—Evidentiary value.

A statement by accused, not leading to discovery of property and made after discovery and production of the property, is irrelevant under section 27 of the Evidence Act. That section has reference only to statements made prior to the discovery of property and in consequence of which such property was discovered.

It is a question of fact whether the pointing out or production of property by a person does or does not raise a presumption of guilt. The production or the pointing out may indicate that the accused was in possession or that he had innocent knowledge that the articles had been left there by some one else.

Mr. Achulsing M. Advani, for the Appellants.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The two accused have been convicted in the alternative of an offence under secti n 395 or section 412, Indian Penal Code.

The evidence on which they have been convicted refers to the production of property by them—and statements made by them at the ime of the production.

Accused No. 1 produced Rs. 10 and made a statement that it was part of the stolen property. The statement is irrelevant, for section 27 has reference only to statements made prior to the discovery of the property and in consequence of which such property was discovered. Here it is clear that the statement was made after the production and discovery of the property. The Rs. 10 cannot be identified as part of the stolen property and there is, therefore, no evidence to support the conviction of accused No. 1.

Accused No. 2 also produced Rs. 10 under similar circumstances, and though this production is, for the reasons just stated, not evidence of his guilt—there is as against accused No. 2 further evidence of his production of a blanket and a head-sheet. These two articles are identified by the complainant's wife and daughter as theirs.' Mr. Achalsing argues that these witnesses did not state in so many words that these articles were stolen. But we think this is the clear implication arising from the evidence and it was so understood in the lower Court for there was no cross-examination to suggest that these articles had not been stolen. Accused No. 2 produced these articles from a cattle pen where they had been buried. It is argued that mere production does not raise a presumption of guilt. This, however, is merely a question of fact. Does the production or the pointing out indicate that accused was in possession or that he had innocent knowledge that the articles had been left there by some one else? The latter inference is negatived by the fact that accused falsely denied having pointed out the property. The most probable inference, therefore, is that the accused was in possession and had kept the articles in the place where they had been concealed for it was, moreover, a place to which he had daily access. The accused was, therefore, in furtive possession of articles stolen in a dacoity and he must have been aware of the nature of the property for he lived close to the house of the complainant where the dacoity had occurred.

The conviction in his case under section 412 must be confirmed, but as he was not identified as being one of the dacoits, we think his sentence may be reduced.

We reverse the conviction and sentence of accused No. 1, Photo.

We alter the conviction of accused No. 2 to one under section 412, Indian Penal Code, only and reduce the sentence to one of rigorous imprisonment for one year.

A., a contractor engaged by the Public Works Department, quarried metal in a place pointed out to him by that Department. The place was within the area of a Reserved Forest and the permission of the Forest Department had not been obtained to the quarrying. A. was convicted of an offence under section 32 (a), (b) and (c) of the Forest Act, read with sections 40 and 114 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the principle of section 79 of the Penal Code applied to the case. The conviction and sentence were accordingly set aside.

Criminal Reference made by the acting Sessions Judge of Satara.

FACTS.—The accused was convicted of an offence under section 32 (a), (b) & (c) of the Forest Act read with sections 40 and 114 of the Penal Code.

The accused was a contractor engaged by the Public Works Department and quarried metal in a place pointed out by that Department. The place was, however, within a Reserved Forest, and the permission of the Forest Department had not been obtained to quarrying the metal.

The case was referred to the High Court by the following ORDER:—"The conviction does not appear to me to be bad in law, the fact that metal had previously been quarried in Forest without any objection beirg taken does not excuse the accused in the present case. It is argued that he had reason to believe that the Public Works officials had obtained the necessary possession, but that is not supported by the evidence. From the accused's statement it appears that he did not know that permission was necessary but ignorance of the law is no excuse. Nor is he excused by the fact that he quarried metal under the orders of the Public Works Department. The maxim 'The King can do no wrong' must be applied to the case, and a person who commits an offence cannot plead the orders of a Government official in excuse of his conduct.

"But, in the circumstances of the case, I think that the sentence should be a nominal one. The accused appears to have acted in good faith, quarrying in the place pointed out to him by the Public Works officials. The latter are quite as responsible as he for the failure to obtain the necessary permission, and it seems unjust that he should be punished for an offence which, in the circumstances, is only a technical one."

Mr. P. B. Vinekar, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—Applying the principle of section 79 of the Indian Penal Code, the Court reverses the conviction and sentence and directs the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Section 181 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, applies only when the offences referred to therein are committed in British India; it has no application to an offence committed in a Native State.

Where the offence of criminal breach of trust was committed in Jodhpur in a Native State but part of the property was retained by the accused in Hyderabad (Sind):

Held, that the Hyderabad Court could not take cognizance of the offence except on a certificate of the Political Agent under section 188, Criminal Procedure Code.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, complaint has been filed against the accused for an offence of criminal breach of trust under section 408, Indian Penal Code, committed at Jodhpur.

The complaint has been filed in Hyderabad and the Court of the Special First Class Magistrate, Hyderabad, appears to have assumed jurisdiction under section 181 (2), as part of the property was retained by the accused in Hyderabad.

But this section only applies as between Courts of different local areas whose jurisdictions have been limited under section 12, Criminal Procedure Code, and to which the Code of Criminal Procedure applies. It has no application to an offence committed in a Native State, and of such offence the Magistrate cannot take cognizance except on a certificate of the Political Agent given under section 188.

As the Magistrate had no jurisdiction, we reverse his order taking cognizance of the complaint.

When a Magistrate is satisfied that an accused has committed the offence of theft from a Railway train, the sentence should be of a deterrent nature, especially where the accused had already been convicted of theft and had been repeatedly bound over for good behaviour.

Criminal Reference made by the District Magistrate of Nasik.

Mr. K. D. Sathaye, for the accused.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the accused was convicted by the Second Class Magistrate of Nandgaon for having committed theft under section 379, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. Notice was issued by the High Court against the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced as it appeared that the Magistrate had taken too lenient a view of the case. We must deal with the question of enhancement on the footing that the accused was properly convicted and that the Magistrate found correctly that the accused had committed the theft in a Railway train. This is an offence of a peculiarly heinous character, extremely difficult to discover, and, therefore, profitable to those who are engaged in committing such thefts, and it is desirable, we think, that when the Magistrate is satisfied that an accused has committed such an offence, the sentence should be of a deterrent nature. In this case, it appears that the accused had already been once convicted of theft in 1907, and had been three times bound over for good behaviour. Taking all these facts into consideration, we think that the proper sentence in this case should be one of twelve months' rigorous imprisonment. Therefore, we enhance the sentence accordingly. We may point out that we could not enhance the sentence to a greater extent than two years, although the District Magistrate has suggested that three years would be the proper punishment.

Sentence enhanced.

EMPEROR v. MAHRAM DHANIBUX.

Interference by revision in criminal cases is purely discretionary. Rule 3, Chapter XV, of the Court Rules, which requires that revision applications are not to be admitted unless presented within sixty days of the decision under objection, indicates that the Court will refuse to interfere in the case of a belated application.

The object of the rule is to prevent stale applications being made and to obviate the hardship that would ensue to accused persons if the finality of a criminal order were left in doubt for a long time.

Mr. P. V. McInerny, for the Applicant.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. Wadhumal Oodheram, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the District Magistrate on the 24th July refusing under section 437 to order further inquiry into a case of cheating which had been discharged by the Resident Magistrate, Larkana, on the 5th April.

By the rules of this Court, revision applications are not admitted unless presented within sixty days of the decision under objection. The object of this rule is to prevent stale applications being made and to obviate the hardship that would ensue to accused persons if the finality of a criminal order were left in doubt for a long time. Interference by revision in criminal cases is purely discretionary and the rule indicates that this Court will, in the exercise of that discretion, refuse to interfere in the case of a belated application.

Here the application, if treated as a revision of the District Magistrate's order, is made only one or two days within the period of 60 days. But it is in substance an application to revise the order of the Resident Magistrate—for this Court has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Magistrate under section 437. Regarded as such, the application is made nearly six months after the decision under objection.

On this ground alone, we think it our duty to refuse to entertain the application, which is, therefore, dismissed.

Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case—Discharge of cross-case.

The fact that a Magistrate has discharged a cross-case between the same parties is not per se a sufficient ground for transferring a case from his Court.

When the Magistrate has heard evidence in both cases, which he is not keeping distinct in his own mind, and has discharged the one case on the evidence that he has heard in both cases, that is not a sufficient reason for transferring the other case from his Court.

Crown v. Kamil, 1 S. L. R. 37; 8 Cr. L. J. 159, explained and distinguished.

Rajani Kanta v. Emperor, 36 C. 904; 10 Cr. L. J. 244; 3 Ind. Cas. 88, distinguished.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Applicant.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The District Magistrate has transferred this case which was instituted in the Court of the City Magistrate, Shikarpur, on the ground that the Magistrate had discharged a cross-case between the same parties.

This was not per se a sufficient ground for transfer in view of the ruling of this Court in Crown v. Kamil (1). But there the Magistrate adopted a procedure which indicated that he was not keeping the evidence in the cases distinct in his own mind for he heard the prosecution evidence in the one case after the prosecution evidence in the other and appeared to decide the one case, which he discharged, on the evidence that he had heard in both cases. This fact distinguishes the case from Crown v. Kamil (1) and from that of Rajani Kanta v. Emperor (2).

Further, as the City Magistrate has been transferred from Shikarpur, the case will have, in any event, to be heard by another Magistrate.

We do not, therefore, think it necessary to interfere and dismiss the application.

MESSRS. DONALD GRAHAM AND CO.—PLAINTIFFS

versus

KEWALRAM GHANSHAMDAS AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Sanction to prosecute—Object being to enforce payment of debt.

Sanction to prosecute should not be granted if it appears that it is not to be used bona fide for the purpose of obtaining a conviction, the object being to enforce payment of a decree.

Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Wadhumal Oodharam, for Defendant Harbhagwandas.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, for sanction to prosecute Harbhagwandas Ghanshamdas for making certain false statements when giving evidence in Suit No. 253 of 1909 on the 3rd August 1910.

Plaintiffs had obtained awards against two firms Bhagwandas Assanand and Co., and Bhagwandas Kewalram and Co., for large sums. Harbhagwandas objected to the filing of the awards as against himself on the ground that he was not a partner, but merely a manager on commission.

The statements, in respect of which sanction to prosecute is sought, are all, directly or indirectly, to the effect that he was not a partner. It was found by the Court (Waley Cohen, A. J. C.) that he was a partner. The judgment is dated 17th August.

An appeal was filed, but was rejected on the ground that no appeal lay. An application of revision was also rejected, the order being passed on the 8th June 1911.

This application was filed on the 3rd August 1911.

No order was passed by Mr. Waley Cohen, under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, nor does it appear to have been suggested by the plaintiffs that such order should be passed. As all the evidence in proof of the alleged offence is under the direct control of plaintiffs, or their guarantee brokers, the Court would have naturally been disinclined to order a prosecution, even if perfectly satisfied that perjury had been committed, unless assured that the plaintiffs would do their utmost to obtain a conviction.

Not only was no such assurance given, but there was ground for supposing that there would even be a reluctance on the part of plaintiffs to press a charge; for, Bhagwandas, one of the partners in both debtor firms, is the guarantee broker who introduced the business, and who is, either solely or as a partner, actually responsible to make good any loss. It was stated in argument by Mr. Wadhumal and not contradicted, that the real creditors are not Messrs. Graham & Co. but the guarantee brokers. It is, therefore, at least possible that Mr. Cohen felt that a prosecution would probably end in an acquittal, through no proof being offered.

On the 25th October 1910, all the members of the two debtor firms, including Hurbhagwandas, signed a reference to Arbitration in favour of Messrs. Nebhundas Nichumal and Dipchand T. Ojha. In the reference, the order of the Court filing the award appears to have been treated as conclusive; but Hurbhagwandas contended that he was at any rate liable only for his proper share. No stay of execution had been granted. Mr. Dipchand, who was acting throughout as Pleader for the judgment-creditors, appears to have spent the year in half-coaxing, half-threatening Hurbhagwandas to settle up. The latter stipulated that he should receive an absolute quittance of the judgment-debt in return for a lump sum representing his alleged share. Mr. Dipchand was urging him to withdraw his appeal, and to produce the books which were expected to contain conclusive evidence of the partnership. To such good effect did Mr. Dipchand act as the kind friend that he states that Harbhagwandas admitted to him that he was a partner.

The present application has clearly been filed as a last resource. The guarantee brokers want their money, and if it be in their power to hold over their debtor the threat of imprisonment, it is probable that he will make far more earnest endeavours than he has hitherto to satisfy their decree. But I feel no confidence whatever, that the sanction, if granted, will be used, bona fide for the purpose of obtaining a conviction. It will on the contrary, I feel sure, be used for the purposes of enforcing payment, and if payment be obtained, it will probably be on the understanding that the prosecution is not pressed.

I consider, therefore, that the sanction should not be granted. Application rejected.

Application rejected.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 147, 296—Causing disturbance to a religious procession—Right of members of a community to pass in procession along the public streets—Assaulting members of procession—Rioting—Common object.

The members of a religious community or denomination have every right to pass through the King's Highway in procession for purposes of religious worship.

Kandasawmy Mudali v. Sabraya Mudali, 32 M. 478, 1 Ind. Cas. 716; 19 M. L. J. 617 and Mannada Mudali v. Nallaya Goandan, 32 M. 527; 19 M. L. J. 467; 6 M L. T. 285; 4 Ind. Cas. 870, referred to.

Assaulting a religious procession with the common object of disturbing it, amounts to rioting.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the 1st Class Magistrate of Karur, in Criminal Appeal No. 59 of 1911, confirming the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioners by the Stationary 2nd Class Magistrate of Karur, in C. C. No. 279 of 1911.

FACTS.—The facts of the case are clear from the following judgment of the Appellate Magistrate :—

The appellants have been convicted of rioting, causing disturbance of a religious assembly, and hurt, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six weeks each by the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Karur.

2. On 5th May 1911, the Vettuva Goundens of Pogalur conducted a worship, and carried a procession of their Kandiamman along the streets. When the procession turned into the south street, stones are alleged to have been pelted by a large body of Pallas assembled in their mandai and in one or two lanes in the neighbourhood. Two of the Vettuva Goundens, viz., 5 and 9 P. Ws., were hit by the stones, some of the drums were torn by the stones that fell on them and the procession had to be given up owing to the confusion engendered by the riot.

3. The origin of the disturbance, as abundantly proved, is this. There was a dispute between the Pallas, to which community the appellants belong, and the Goundens regarding the employment of Chuklers by the former to beat drums. The Parayas, who had always been beating drums for the Pallas, refused to do service in funerals, and the Pallas had in consequence to discard the Parayas altogether and employ Chuklers in their stead. The Vettuva Goundens had either real or fancied grievance is not having been consulted about the change. It is in the evidence that after one marriage had been celebrated by the Pallas with Chuklers' music, the Vettuva Goundens took it in their heads to object to a second wedding procession marching in their streets with Chuklers playing the drums. This was some little time before the present riot. There were petitions and counter-petitions about it. Meanwhile, the Vettuva Goundens arranged this procession of their deity. The Pallas, exasperated by the opposition which they had encountered from the Goundens, were apparently determined to revenge themselves by throwing stones at, and scattering this, procession.

4. There can be no doubt that a riot did actually take place on the night of the 5th May last. The case for the appellants is that the Goundens organised the procession in order to afford a pretext for attacking them, and that as soon as the procession turned down the south street, the P. Ws. set down the deity and went back armed with sticks to the Pallas' mandai, fell upon them and wounded three or four of them. I consider it very probable that the Goundens did attack the Pallas. But as a defence to this case, I regard it as unimportant, as the evidence makes it quite clear that the Pallas pelted stones first at the procession and disturbed a religious assembly which was perfectly lawful.

5. The appellants' Vakil has taken an important objection to the conviction, viz., that the Sub-Magistrate has failed to specify the common object of the rioters. I should hold this objection valid but for the fact that both in the charge and in the judgment, unlawful common object has been sufficiently indicated and the appellants do not appear to have been prejudiced in their defence by the omission to specify it in terms. The common object, to state it precisely, was voluntarily to disturb an assembly lawfully engaged in the performance of a religious worship. In pursuance of this common object, it is proved that stones were pelted, and hurt was caused to two of the prosecution witnesses Nos. 5 and 9, and 14th P. W. proves that the drums beaten by the pirayas were torn.

Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. J. L. Rosario Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—In the face of the rulings in Kandasawmy Mudali v. Subraya Mudali (1) and Mannada Mudali v. Nallaya Goundan (2), I cannot say that the prosecution party was not lawfully engaged in religious ceremonies when going along the public road in procession. Besides, I may observe that there can be no doubt on the findings that the accused combined with the object of assaulting and causing hurt to the prosecution party. That would be sufficient to justify their conviction for rioting. I am unable to say that the sentence is excessive. I dismiss the revision petition.

Culpable homicide—Wife detected in act of adultery and killed—Sentence.

Wife-murder is so common an offence in Sind that deterrent sentences should be passed in all such cases, even where the husband has killed his wife in the provocation that he detected her in the act of committing adultery.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused has been convicted on his own plea of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and has been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused killed his wife because, as he alleges, he detected her in the act of committing adultery. Ordinarily, the sentence inflicted would be sufficient having regard to the provocation. But wife-murder is so common an offence in Sind that we think it necessary that deterrent sentences should be passed in all such cases. It is important that the impression should not be formed that the life of a woman can be lightly taken under any circumstances.

We, therefore, enhance the sentence to one of rigorous imprisonment for five years.

Where the accused is only guilty of negligence, he is not liable to be convicted of mischief, for that offence imports that the act was done wilfully.

Queen-Empress v. Shaikh Raju, 9 B. 173, followed.

Sentences of imprisonment in default of fines imposed for two or more offences cannot be directed to run concurrently as not being justified by section 35, Criminal Procedure Code.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused has been convicted of rash and negligent driving under section 279, Indian Penal Code, and also for mischief under section 427 in respect of damage caused by such rash driving. As the accused was only guilty of negligence, he was not liable to be convicted of mischief —for that offence imports that the act was done wilfully—see Queen-Empress v. Shaikh Raju (1). Again, the Magistrate has imposed a fine for each offence and has directed the terms of imprisonment in default of the fines to run concurrently. Such an order is not justified by section 35, Criminal Procedure Code. In case of part payment of the fine, it would be difficult to estimate what portion of which term of imprisonment should terminate under section 69, Indian Penal Code.

We, accordingly, confirm the conviction and sentence under section 279, Indian Penal Code, and reverse the conviction and sentence under section 427.

The Authorities of a Native State made a requisition to the Political Agent, who was also the District Magistrate of Bijapur, for the surrender of an accused. The Political Agent issued a warrant under section 7 of the Extradition Act, for the arrest of the accused, who surrendered of his own accord and the warrant was accordingly returned unexecuted. Then, upon the application of the accused, the Political Agent issued in his favour a certificate under section 188, Criminal Procedure Code, to the effect that the accused should be tried in British India. Subsequently, the Authorities of the Native State pressed for the man's surrender and the Political Agent, yielding to that pressure, finally ordered that the accused be tried in the Native State:

Held, that the Political Agent had no power to cancel the certificate already granted and that the subsequent order for the trial of the accused in the Native State must be set aside.

Rule 3 of the Rules under the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council 1902 and under section 22 of the Extradition Act does not control section 188, Criminal Procedure Code.

The Rule contains a reminder to Political Agents of their duty to consider the admissibility of issuing a certificate prior to issuing any warrant.

A certificate under section 188, Criminal Procedure Code, can be issued even after a warrant has already gone out.

Criminal Reference made by the District Judge of Bijapur.

Mr. D. A. Khare, for the applicant.

Mr. G. S. Rao, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Bijapur who submits for the orders of this Court the petition of one Vazirsaheb valad Allisaheb, who prays that he may be tried by the First Class Magistrate of Bijapur for the offence imputed to him under sections 395 and 109, Indian Penal Code, and may not be sent for trial to the Authorities of the Jath State. It appears that in September 1911, the authorities of that State made a requisition to the Political Agent, who is also the District Magistrate of Bijapur, for the surrender of Vazirsaheb in reference to this charge. On the 21st September, the Political Agent issued a warrant under section 7 of the Extradition Act (XV of 1903) The accused, however, surrendered of his own accord and the warrant was returned unexecuted.

Then, upon the application of Vazirsaheb, the Political Agent issued in his favour a certificate under section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to the effect that Vazirsaheb should be tried in British India.

Subsequently, however, the Jath Authorities pressed for the man's surrender, and the Political Agent yielding to that pressure passed his final order in these words:—"As the Chief wishes the case to be tried in his Court, it must be tried there." It is against that order that Vazirsaheb's petition is directed, and the learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that the petition was well founded and should be allowed. I am also of that opinion. No point was taken at the Bar as to this Court's jurisdiction, and we must, therefore, decide the matter on the assumption that we have jurisdiction. I mention this so that it may be clear that no question of jurisdiction has been argued or determined. The case, as the learned Judge observes, resembles In re Hormusji Nasarwanji (1) in all material particulars, and the Government Pleader conceded that unless he could distinguish that case, the decision must go against him. He sought to distinguish it by reason of the rules issued by the Governor-General in exercise of the powers conferred by the Indian (Foreign Jurisdiction) Order in Council, 1902, and by section 22 of the Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903). These rules will be found at page 1831, Vol. III, of the General Statutory Rules and Orders. Rule 3 provides that "if the accused person is a British subject, the Political Agent shall, before issuing a warrant under section 7 of the said Act, consider whether he ought not to certify the case as one suitable for trial in British India." Relying upon these words, Mr. Rao has contended that the rule in substance provides that if a certificate has to be issued at all by the Political Agent under the first Proviso to section 188, Criminal Procedure Code, that certificate must be issued before and cannot be issued after a warrant has already gone; in other words, that any certificate issued, as was the certificate here, after the issue of the warrant, is bad in law. I am, however, unable to take that view. It appears to me that the directions or admonitions contained in rule 3 neither control nor purport to control section 188, Criminal Procedure Code. I rather read rule 3 as containing a reminder to Political Agents of their duty to consider the advisability of issuing a certificate prior to issuing any warrant. But I cannot import into this admonition any rule of law that a certificate issued after the warrant would be of no effect. It appears to me, therefore, the ground fails upon which In re Hormusji Nasarwanji (1) was sought to be distinguished. It follows that we must abide by that decision and affirm the Sessions Judge's view with the result that Vazirsaheb will be tried by the Magistrate in British India.

HEATON, J.—I agree in this order, because I have no doubt whatever that, if we have jurisdiction to make an order at all, that is the right order to make, and I agree that it is a right order to make for the reasons which are given by my learned colleague. Nobody raised the question of jurisdiction and I say nothing about it, but I wish this to be understood that I do not for myself assume that it is certain that we have jurisdiction.

Decision affirmed.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—We see no reason to disagree with the finding of the Sessions Judge and the two Assessors that all the four accused took part in the assault which resulted in the deceased's death. We concur in considering the main prosecution evidence reliable and in disbelieving the defence of alibi set up.

On the evidence, the accused No. 1 has been rightly convicted of murder and we also see no reason to interfere with the convictions and sentences in the case of accused Nos. 2 and 4.

As regards accused No. 3, the view taken by the lower Court is that the fact of his striking the deceased after he had fallen from the blows with the hatchet inflicted by accused No. 1, shows that his intention was similar to that of accused No. 1. We think, however, that there is a reasonable doubt whether the common intention of the accused, when they came up at Chakar's instigation, was more than one to cause grievous hurt to the deceased. Having regard to the fact of accused No. 1 being armed with a hatchet, a common intention to inflict grievous hurt with it, is a legitimate presumption in the circumstances but the evidence does not appear sufficient to justify a finding that there was a common intention to kill the deceased and we concur with the Sessions Judge in considering it unsafe to rely on the statements that Chakar actually told the accused to kill him. The fact that the accused No. 3 subsequently struck deceased with a stick does not, in our opinion, suffice to make him guilty of murder under section 302 read with section 34, Indian Penal Code, Cf. Gouridas Namasudra v. Emperor (1). We accordingly alter the conviction in his case Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 401—Gang associated for habitual theft—Evidence—Previous convictions of individual, relevancy of.

When, under section 401 of the Penal Code, it has to be determined whether a party of accused persons constitute a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitual theft, evidence that each individual of the party is a convicted thief, is relevant evidence for the purposes of that question.

That evidence can be tendered whether before or after the prosecution have established the association.

Bonai v. Emperor, 38 C. 403; 9 Ind. Cas. 555; 15 C. W. N. 461; 12 Cr. L. J. 97, referred to.

Mr. Branson, with him Mr. D. W. Pilgamkar, for the Accused.

Mr. G. S Rao, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The 21 appellants before the Court were charged before the Sessions Judge, together with one other accused person who was No. 15, under section 401 of the Indian Penal Code, with the offence of belonging to a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery. The 21 appellants were all convicted by the Sessions Judge of that offence, and hence their present appeal. The accused, who was No. 15 before the Sessions Judge, was acquitted by him. The assessors were for acquitting accused Nos. 5, 12 and 20 out of the 22 persons indicted. But, as the learned Sessions Judge has pointed out, they were unable to give any reasons why these three accused persons, Nos. 5, 12 and 20, should be held to stand on any different footing from that occupied by the other accused excepting No. 15. It may be added that no attempt has been made by the learned Counsel here to suggest that the case of accused Nos. 5, 12 and 20 is in any way different from the case of the other appellants.

In examining the evidence upon which these appellants have been convicted, we start with this, that they are related to each other; that they are inhabitants of the villages of Rui in Satara and of Vadgaon, Karanje, Baburdi and Morgaon, in Poona, and that all belong to the tribe known as Bhamtas or Uchlas. Now this record shows, what is otherwise familiar learning to those acquainted with these districts, that the Bhamtas are a tribe of thieves. By that I do not suggest that they are to be convicted merely because they were born into a certain class of people, but I do suggest that their connection with this particular tribe is a fact in favour of the prosecution. This record shows that of recent years the Bhamtas have specialized in running train thefts where their methods are so distinctive that their handiwork can be recognized without difficulty by Police officers concerned in such investigations.

Mr. Branson for the appellants, who has said everything on behalf of his clients that ingenuity would suggest, has dealt with the case rather on its broad aspects than in minute detail. We think that that is the proper way in which the case should be approached, and we propose to follow the learned Counsel in that respect. For, it seems to us, no good purpose would be served by any attempt to analyse the evidence in its bearings against each individual accused, inasmuch as the evidence of identification and of association is clear and uniform against all the accused. By that we mean that the evidence is good against any one accused as it is against all the others; nor has there been any argument before us that the evidence is comparatively weak or inconclusive against any particular accused person.

In discussing the question as to the manner in which the evidence in such a case as this should be assessed, the learned Counsel has drawn our attention to several cases of which we need only refer to that which is latest in time, namley, Bonai v. Emperor (1). The passage to which Mr.

(1) 38 C. 403, 9 Ind. Cas. 555; 15 C. W. N. 461; 12 Cr. L. J. 97.

Branson more particularly referred is as follows (page 411):

"In cases where the other evidence has established association for purposes of habitually committing theft, evidence of previous convictions, whether for offences against property or for bad livelihood, has, we find, always been admitted, not as evidence of character, but as evidence of habit."

It seems to us that for the purposes of the present appeal, it is unnecessary that we should go a step further than the Calcutta Judges went in that case. At the same time, if the meaning of the passage which we have cited, is that no evidence of previous convictions is admissible until the prosecution have affirmatively established the association for the purpose of habitually committing theft, then we are doubtful whether we should be able to follow that ruling if the point arose for decision. For it appears to us, with great respect, that where the question is, as it is, under section 401, Indian Penal Code, whether a party of accused persons constituted a gang of persons associated for the purpose of habitual theft, evidence that each individual of that party is a convicted thief is relevant evidence for the purposes of that question. And whether that evidence is tendered before or after the prosecution have established the association, seems to us to be a matter of no particular moment. We understand that is the view which commended itself to this Court in the unreported Criminal Appeals Nos. 163, 207 of 1910.

Then, Mr. Branson was successful in pointing out two or three instances where matters, which were not admissible in evidence, have been admitted by the learned Sessions Judge. Of these matters, the only instance which, we think, calls for particular notice is the testimony of the witnesses Mahamadsha, Sheikh Faizalla and Maulabuksh valad Vazirkhan (Exhibits 293 and 294). The learned Counsel has contended that their testimony should not have been received upon the record inasmuch as they were examined in Calcutta in the absence of the accused who at that time were under arrest in Koregaon. The Government Pleader has admitted his inability to defend the admission of this evidence, and we must, therefore, lay it out of our consideration. Apart from that, we do not think that anyting has been admitted which, being inadmissible, is likely to have any effect in the decision to be pronounced.

It must be observed that the evidence in this case is cumulative, or to vary the simile, it converges from various points to the one conclusion which the prosecution seek to establish.

Speaking quite generally, the effect of the evidence which the prosecution have called is this: that these appellants, members of the Bhamta tribe as described, and residents in the villages of Satara and Poona, are found associated in remote parts of India, moving about in disguise as Marwari merchants, giving false names and carrying with them the usual implements of Bhamta gang-thieves, that is to say, special canvas bags for the receipt of stolen property, together with knives, scissors and packing needles, such as would be useful in first rifling and then repairing the bags in which the Indian Railway travellers are accustomed to carry about their moveable property.

So far, we think, we have said nothing which Counsel for the appellants has doubted or contested. And the point which we wish to make is that no explanation whatever is offered by these appellants as to their expatriation in those distant parts of India or the manner of their livelihood there.

[After discussing the evidence in detail, their Lordships proceeded:—]

It appears to us upon this evidence that the prosecution have very satisfactorily established that there was an association between these accused persons, probably including also other members of their tribe, and that the object of that association was to live by committing thefts principally in Railway trains.

If further support for this view were desired, it is, we think, afforded by the monotonous record of convictions which the accused's previous history supplies.

It appears to us that all this evidence, which I have done my best to summarise, leads to the irresistible conclusion that these accused persons were associated for no other purpose than to prey upon society by petty thieving. The only alteration which it seems to us desirable to make in the learned Sessions Judge's order is in regard to the sentence of transportation for life which he has passed upon the accused No. 22, Mari Parsu. As we have said, against this accused there is only one conviction of theft and that occured in March 1910. It appears very doubtful whether that conviction should be used for the purpose of calling in aid the provisions of section 75. But in any case, we think that this accused's history does not warrant the imposition of so severe a sentence. We, therefore, alter his sentence to one of seven years' rigorous imprisonment under section 401, Indian Penal Code, and in all other respects, we dismiss these appeals and confirm the convictions and sentences recorded by the learned Sessions Judge.

We wish to say in conclusion that we are much indebted to the learned Government Pleader for the impartial and thorough-going manner in which he has laid before the Court this somewhat difficult and complicated case.

We are also of opinion that the result of this case reflects very great credit on the Police Officers who were entrusted with the laborious task of its investigation Convictions and sentences with one exception confirmed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 498—Enticing away a married woman—Essential ingredients—Evidence—Proof of marriage—Statement of complainant.

The two essential ingredients of an offence under section 498 of the Penal Code are that the woman enticed away is the wife of the complainant and that the fact of marriage is known to the accused.

The mere statement of the complainant that the woman is his wife is not sufficient evidence of marriage.

Queen-Empress v. Dal Singh, 20 A. 166; Imperator v. Peters, 2 S. L. R. 22; 10 Cr. L. J. 235, followed.

Queen-Empress v. Subbarayan, 9 M. 9, distinguished.

Mr. P. V. McInerny, for the Appellant.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal, Mr. McInerny has taken the objection that there is no legal proof of the marriage; this objection must, I consider, be allowed.

Two essential ingredients of an offence under section 498, Indian Penal Code, are that the woman enticed away is the wife of the complainant, and that the fact of the marriage is known to the accused. In the judgment, these two points should have been clearly laid down for determination and decisions should have been given thereon. But both facts were assumed, and there is no finding or discussion on either. The judgment is clearly bad.

The Public Prosecutor, however, contends that the irregularity has caused no failure of justice for the evidence on record is sufficient to establish both the marriage, and the accused's knowledge of it. The following are the passages to which the Court has been referred as constituting proof of these points:—

Jiwa (complainant), Exhibit 1, "My marriage took place 30 or 35 years ago in my country." * * * "I have known Bechar, accused, from my youth before my marriage. He knew that Jumna was my wife."

Dhana, Exhibit 3, age 30, "I know Jumna. She is Jiwa's wife."

Dharamsey, Exhibit 6, age 23, "When he (complainant) went away, he left his wife in the house."

Makanji Exhibit 7, age 30, "I know Jumna who is Jiwa's wife."

Jetho, Exhibit 8, age 30, "I know Jiwa and his wife, Jumna."

Walji, Exhibit 9, age 25, "I know Jumna, who is Jiwa's wife."

Bhaga, Exhibit 10, age 60, "I know Jiwa and also his wife, Jumna." * * * "I have known Jiwa for four or five years."

Dhana, Exhibit 21, age 45, "Jiwa's wife was then here."

Now, it is clear from the above extracts that the only witness, who even purports to have any personal knowledge of the marriage, is complainant himself and his statement amounts to no more than an assertion on oath of the mixed proposition of law and fact which he had undertaken to prove. The statement of the other witnesses cannot, by themselves, be treated as proof that Jumna was wife of complainant (section 50, Evidence Act).

The Public Prosecutor has cited the case of Queen-Empress v. Subbarayan (1), where it was held that the statements of the husband, the wife herself, and the wife's mother, that the parties had been married so many years before, was sufficient proof of the marriage, there having been no cross-examination as to the fact or validity of the marriage. But, in the present case, we have only the statement of the complainant himself, and it was held, in Queen-Empress v. Dal Singh (2), that the Court should require some better evidence of the marriage than the mere statement of the complainant and the woman. In the case of Imperator v. Peters (3), Pratt, J. C., held that statements by the complainant and the woman's father that she was married to complainant, were not sufficient to comply with the strict rule of proof, even though the woman had herself given evidence and described herself as wife of the complainant.

(1) 9 Mad. 9.

EMPEROR v. CHHOTALAL BABAR.

I must, therefore, hold that the marriage has not been proved.

The Public Prosecutor suggests that there should be a remand, but I do not consider it necessary. The accused has already been in jail nearly two months, and it is admitted that it would be a long and difficult matter to prove a marriage that had taken place 35 years ago in Kathiawar.

I reverse the conviction, and acquit the appellant, and order him to be set at liberty.

Conviction reversed.

Accomplice—Evidence—Corroboration, nature of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 109, 467—Forgery—Abetment—Conspiracy—Fellow conspirator acquitted—Conviction of other conspirator.

Before a conviction can be sustained on the evidence of an accomplice, there must be corroboration in material particulars by means of independent testimony.

The degree of amount of corroboration required depends upon the facts of each case.

The position, connection and general conduct of an accused cannot be taken as affording sufficient corroboration; nor can the circumstances elicited in the accomplice's evidence be held in themselves as affording sufficient corroboration.

A. and B, who were partners, conspired to make a false khata. In furtherance of the conspiracy, B. went to a professional forger, C., who prepared the false khata.

A. and B. were both tried for abetment of forgery. B. was acquitted on the ground that the only evidence against him was the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. A. was convicted under sections 467, 109 of the Penal Code. On appeal, A. contended that as B. had been acquitted, the charge of conspiracy failed and A. was entitled to an acquittal:

Held, that the charge against A. was that he abetted C.'s offence of forging the khata, and, if that abetment is proved against A., he must be convicted of that charge, even although the prosecution were not successful in establishing the particular means or instrument selected by A. for the abetment of C.'s offence.

Appeal from conviction and sentence recorded by the Additional Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad.

FACTS:—Chhotalal Babar and his partner Ambalal Jethalal were tried at one trial on charges under sections 467 and 109 of the Penal Code. Ambalal was convicted of the offence.

Ambalal's appeal to the High Court was accepted by the following

JUDGMENT.

"CHANDAVARKAR, J.—Dealing with the appeal of Ambalal Jethalal, who was accused No. 2 in the Sessions Trial, we cannot agree with the learned Sessions Judge in the conclusion at which he has arrived, namely, that he is guilty, and the reasons that he has given for that conclusion.

The evidence as against the appellant rests solely upon the evidence of Somnath, the pardoned approver. His being the evidence of an accomplice, there must be corroboration in the material particulars by means of independent testimony before the conviction can be sustained. Such corroboration there is absolutely none in the present case. The learned Sessions Judge seems to have thought that there was corroboration afforded by the position, connection and general conduct of accused No. 2, the appellant before us. The learned Judge is right so far as a matter of law, that the degree of amount of corroboration required depends upon the facts of each case. But when he goes on to observe that in a case like the present, where the utmost secrecy must have been observed, the position, connection and the general conduct of accused No. 2 in doing Chhotalal's business afforded a sufficient corrobration, I think that view of the law cannot be accepted. If there was any secrecy, then, it only means that there is no corroboration by means of independent evidence; that we are left to conjecture so far as any evidence to corroborate Somnath is concerned, and that the prosecution has not been able to bring forward the evidence of circumstances by means of independent witnesses to support the story of Somnath. It is difficult, it seems to me, to understand what the learned Sessions Judge had definitely in mind when he thought that the very fact that the appellant worked in secrecy afforded independent corroboration. When we examine the evidence with reference to what the learned Sessions Judge calls the position, connection, and the general conduct, of accused No. 2, I find that there again there is nothing which fulfils the requirements of law so far as corroboration is concerned. All that is alleged and proved is that the appellant was a partner of Chhotalal, and that he used to visit Umreth. It is only upon that point that we have anything like independent testimony. But on the question whether the appellant visited Umreth for the purpose of getting the document, charged as forgery, there is no witness whatever beyond Somnath. The learned Government Pleader has been compelled to rest the case for the Crown upon circumstances elicited in the evidence of Somnath himself for the purpose of finding corroboration. But the learned Sessions Judge's judgment itself shows that practically he was resting his conclusions upon the testimony of Somnath while supposing that the circumstances elicited in Somnath's evidence afforded material corroboration. What the law requires is corroboration in respect of material particulars by means of independent testimony. In the present case, Somnath stands self-condemned. He is a notorious forger, and, being an accomplice, it would be dangerous to rest the conviction upon his testimony exclusively.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the conviction and sentence must be reversed and the accused directed to be set at liberty.

BATCHELOR, J.—I agree. It seems to me that in this case, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove two propositions, First, that a forgery was brought about in the manner alleged on behalf of the Crown; and, secondly, that the person, who instigated or brought about that forgery, was this particular individual, the present appellant.

As to the first proposition, I am quite ready to concede that it has been abundantly established. But that is no concern of the present appellant until some connection has been shown between him and the offence. It is here that, in my opinion, this prosecution fails. For, when the record is examined, it appears that the only evidence to connect the present appellant with the abetment of this forgery is the approver Somnath. And it is clear, both upon authority and upon the merest ground of common sense, that a man like Somnath has no claim whatever to the confidence of the Court unless his evidence can be materially corroborated aliunde. It was said that there was evidence to show that the present appellant was a partner of Chhotalal's, for whose benefit this forgery must be assumed to have been committed, and that the appellant was frequently in Umreth in the prosecution of his lawful business. I quite concede these two circumstances, but they appear to me to be far too remote and inconclusive to serve the turn of prosecution in this case. Upon the ground that the only real evidence against the present appellant is the statement of the approver Somnath, I agree that the conviction ought to be set aside."

A question arose as to whether the British Court had jurisdiction to try Chhotalal Babar. The High Court judgment on this point is printed as 14 Ind. Cas. 970, where it was decided that the British Court had jurisdiction to try Chhotalal.

Chhotalal was thereupon convicted of the offence.

He contended that as Ambalal had been acquitted, he was also entitled to acquittal on the principle of law that on a charge of conspiracy between any two persons, when one of them was acquitted, the other must also be acquitted.

The accused Chhotalal appealed to the High Court.

Mr. L. A. Shah, for the Accused.

Mr. G. S. Rao, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

EMPEROR v. CHHOTALAL BABAR.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—The appellant in this case, Chhotalal Babar, has been convicted under sections 467 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code of the abetment of the forgery of a valuable security, namely, a khata. The allegation is that employing the services of a professional forger, named Somnath, with whom he entered into communication through his partner and agent Ambalal, the appellant procured the preparation of a false khata intended to show that the daughter of a certain other man, named Ambalal, had been promised to the appellant in marriage.

On a separate appeal, which was preferred by the appellant's partner Ambalal, we were constrained to reverse Ambalal's conviction on the ground that it had been recorded solely on the uncorroborated evidence of the accomplice Somnath.

Mr. Shah for the appellant here has contended, in the first place, that his client is entitled to an acquittal inasmuch as the charge against him was one of conspiring with Ambalal, and Ambalal has, by the order of this Court; been acquitted, it follows from that, says the learned Pleader, that no conviction can be sustained against Ambalal's fellow-conspirator, the present appellant. It appears to me that whatever force that argument might have in England, where conspiracy is a substantive offence, it has no force in India, with respect to the particular charge upon which the appellant was indicted.

The charge against him was that he abetted Somnath's offence of forging a khata, and if that abtement is proved against the appellant, he must be convicted of that charge, even although the prosecution were not successful in establishing the particular means or instrument selected by the appellant for the abetment of Somnath's offence.

Next, it was contended by Mr. Shah, that inasmuch as this Court has reversed the conviction of Ambalal, the consideration of this appeal must proceed upon the footing of the total exclusion of the possibility that Ambalal may have been the agent deputed by the appellant to instigate Somnath to commit the forgery. It appears to me, however, that this argument overstates the matter. Ambalal was acquitted, as our judgment shows, in pursuance of the rule of parctice whereby the Courts hold it unsafe to record a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. Ambalal was undoubtedly entitled in law to that acquittal. But Ambalal is no longer an accused person before us, and the question of his conviction does not arise. The accused person before us is the present appellant, and, it seems to me, that we must consider all the evidence against him as it stands upon the record, and that in considering that evidence the Court is not bound to say that the prosecution of Chhotalal must fail by reason of the impossibility of the view that Ambalal was the deputed agent. The question whether Ambalal was or was not the deputed agent, will invite slightly different answers, accordingly as it is considered with reference to the conviction of Ambalal himself, or as a detail in the whole body of evidence tending to the conviction of another person.

When that whole body of evidence is in this case considered, it appears to me that we need have no hesitation in saying that the prosecution is by no means weakened owing to that part of its case which asserts the agency of Ambalal.

In regard to the merits of the case, I am of opinion that there can be no doubt of the appellant's guilt. Mr. Shah has not felt himself able to contest the forged character of this impugned document. We have it, therefore, that this khata was forged by Somnath, whose business in life was forgery. Somnath, therefore, had no private interest to serve in committing this forgery beyond earning the wages of him who had employed him. To ascertain who it was who employed him, it is reasonable to consider whose interest the forgery was made to serve. And there can be no doubt, and there has been no doubt, that the only individual whose interests were served by this particular forgery was the appellant Chhotalall. The inference arising from this circumstance is further strengthened by other parts of the evidence, and the result of all is, in my opinion, a clear conviction that the appellant is guilty of the offence charged against him. I think, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed.

CHANDAVARKAR, J.—I concur.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), ss. 111, 112 —Partition—Question of proprietary title which ought to and might have been raised—Res judicata—Jurisdiction.

A party to a Civil suit cannot raise a question of proprietary title which he ought to and might have raised in partition proceedings under the Land Revenue Act.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur, dated 19th April 1910.

The Hon'ble Dr. Sunder Lal (with him Dr. Satish Chandra Banerji and Mr. Govind Prashad), for the Appellants.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought under the following circumstances. Inderdeo Rai and others applied for partition of Mahal Sherpur which included 57 bighas, 14 biswas and 14 dhurs of land, which is the subject-matter of the present suit. The plaintiffs in the present suit, or those whom they represent, made an application also for partition and asked that the 57 bighas, 14 biswas and 14 dhurs might be made into a separate mahal, claiming that this property belonged to them absolutely. The Assistant Collector entertained these applications and as a result, there were partition proceedings before him which involved a partition of the property in dispute and other property. The Assistant Collector proceeded to make an order which was in the following terms: "In view of the above, I think representatives of Gopi Rai and Sheopal Rai should remain in possession as they are of these 58 bighas and the plot should be included as Mauza Jagadana of Sahdeo Rai and others. But the entry in the khewat against these 58 bighas should continue in the names of all the other co-sharers along with Sahdeo Rai and others as it is in other villages. The other co-sharers must get lands of similar quality from Sahdeo Rai and others at the time of partition in lieu of these 58 bighas of Mauza Judagana of Nagdilpur from the shares of Sahdeo Rai and others according to law." An appeal against this order was preferred by the party of the plaintiffs in this suit to the District Judge, who held that no question of proprietary title was raised and, therefore, no appeal lay to him. On second appeal to this Court, the decree of the District Judge was confirmed and the judgment proceeds in the following words:—"In the true sense of the word, there was no question of proprietary title raised at all." It may, perhaps, be urged that although the learned Assistant Collector did not proceed in the manner laid down by section 111 of the Land Revenue Act, he did in fact entertain the question of proprietary title. However that may be, it is now too late to contend that a question of proprietary title was raised having regard to the decree of this Court just now quoted. It is satisfactory to know that the real question between the parties, viz., whether or not the party of the plaintiffs had been in adverse possession of the property in dispute, was heard out on the merits before the Collector and the Commissioner. The plaintiffs-appellants urge that this question of proprietary title has never been decided and that, therefore, this present suit is maintainable. On behalf of the defendants, it is contended that having regard to the fact that partiton proceedings involving the partition of this property had been instituted in the Revenue Court, no suit could be instituted in the Civil Court unless it came within the provisions of section 111 or section 112 of the Land Revenue Act. It is clear that the present suit is not a suit coming within the provisions of either of these sections. We think that the result of the decree of the High Court to which we have referred is a decision that the party of the plaintiffs in the partition proceedings did not raise the question of title. If this view is correct, it is clear that the party of the plaintiffs cannot now raise a question which they ought to and might have raised in the partition proceedings. It may appear a somewhat hard case upon the plaintiffs; at the same time, we are glad to say, after hearing the appeal very fully and the long history of the litigation which commenced in the year 1893, that no real injustice has been done and that in the end the partition proceedings in the Revenue Court will work no injustice to any of the parties. We think that it would be a very unfortunate result if we had to allow the present appeal which would have the effect of re-opening the entire partition proceedings and re-embarking a very large number of persons on a fresh sea of litigation.

We dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Easement—Right of way—Indivisibility—Passage common to two houses—Partition of houses—Presumption of law—Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Maynkha—Easements Act (V of 1882)—Appellate Court bound to decide points raised.

Both according to the Mitakshara and the Mayukha, rights of way and rights to well and water belonging to a joint family are indivisible. If there is no evidence that at partition of the family estate, such rights were divided, the law will hold that they continued to retain their indivisible character having regard to the nature of the rights in question.

In the absence of anything to show that on the partition of a joint estate, a certain passage was allotted to either one party or the other exclusively, the presumption is that it continued to be joint and undivided even after the partition. This is a presumption of Hindu Law and can only be rebutted by clear proof that the passage was not reserved as joint but was divided and allotted to one of the parties exclusively as his share.

If two houses were common and a certain right of way belonged to the parties, the passage being common then, under the Easements Act, it must be presumed, in the absence of any express agreement between the parties, that at partition, the passage was reserved for common enjoyment.

An Appellate Court is bound to consider and dispose of a point distinctly raised by the parties and dealt with by the Court of first instance and not abandoned at the hearing before the Appellate Court.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Broach, Appeal 101 of 1908, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Broach, in Civil Suit No. 375 of 1907.

Mr. L. A. Shah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was brought by the present appellant for a perpetual injunction to restrain the respondent from interfering with his right of way over a certain passage.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit looked at the question of the plaintiff's right in two aspects, first, as a right by way of implied reservation, secondly, as a right by way either of easement or prescription. On both these points, he came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had established his right to the passage in question. Accordingly a decree as prayed for was made.

But in appeal, the learned District Judge has held that the appellant-plaintiff has failed to prove that he has used as of right the passage in dispute for the statutory period required for an easement or prescriptive right.

It is contended in support of this second appeal that the learned District Judge has not applied himself to the question of implied reservation to which the learned Subordinate Judge had very carefully addressed himself. That contention of the appellant's Pleader must be allowed.

It is urged by Mr. Ratanlal, for the respondent, that the plaint and the pleadings did not raise a title based on implied reservation. The plaint and the pleadings show it is not so. The plaintiff's case all along has been that at one time the plaintiff's and defendant's houses were commonly enjoyed by them; that this passage which is now in dispute was also a common way for the members of the family. It was upon that basis that the Subordinate Judge dealt with the case. And if the case of a right by way of implied reservation was distinctly raised by the parties, and dealt with by the Court of first instance, the Appellate Court was bound to consider it and dispose of it unless the plaintiff had at the hearing of the appeal abandoned it, expressly or impliedly. There is nothing on the record of the lower Appellate Court to show that it was abandoned.

No doubt from the fact that the District Judge has dealt with the plaintiff's case as it concerned the right of easement or prescription, it may be inferred that that was the only case relied upon by the appellant in resisting the appeal in the lower Court. But that inference would be obviously out of place here, because the main facts found by the learned District Judge of themselves are sufficient in law to raise the question of a right by way of implied reservation. And those facts must be presumed to have been found by the Judge on argument by both or either of the parties.

Now, what are those facts found by the Judge on the evidence ?

He finds that the plaintff's and defendant's houses belonged originally to a common owner, their grandfather Vasantrai, whose sons divided the properties, that the plaintiff admits that the right of way was not expressly reserved by his father, when the partition was effected; and that the partition took place in Samvat 1914, i. e., A. D. 1858.

These facts are sufficient in law to raise the presumption that the passage in dispute was reserved as the common or joint property of the parties at the time of partition. That is a presumption of Hindu law. In the absence of anything to show that at the partition the passage was allotted to either one party or the other exclusively, the presumption is, that it continued joint and undivided even after the partition. That presumption of Hindu law must be rebutted by clear proof by the party who alleges that the passage was not reserved as joint but was divided and allotted to him exclusively as his share. This presumption of law has not been borne in mind by the learned District Judge in the Court below. Whether according to the Mitakshara or the Vyavahara Mayukha, rights of way and rights to wells and water belonging to a joint family are indivisible ; and if there is no evidence that at a partition of the family estate they were divided, the law will hold that they continued to retain the character of indivisibility attached to them by law, having regard to the nature of the rights in question (Vyavahara Mayukha: Mandlik's Edition, page 70, lines 13 to 15, and page 71, lines 11 and 12).

If that is so, then the burden of proof lay upon the respondent to show that the appellant-plaintiff did not possess the right claimed, or having possessed at one time, i. e., at the time of partition, he has since lost it, either by the adverse possession of the respondent or in some other way recognized by law. So also under the Easements Act, the appellant's right is clear. If these two houses were common, and the right of way belonged to the parties, and the passage was common, then it must be presumed, in the absence of any express agreement between the parties, that at the partition the passage was reserved for common enjoyment.

Therefore, from whichever point of view we look at the question, whether from the point of view of Hindu Law, or the law as laid dow in the Easements Act, the plaintiff's right is prima facie established. And the question is whether the respondent has discharged the onus which lay upon him. Now, under the new Code of Civil Procedure, where the Appellate Court has omitted to decide any question of fact, which arises upon the appeal, and which is necessary for the settlement of the dispute between the parties, this Court sitting in second appeal has jurisdiction to dispose of the question of fact for itself. Dealing with this question of fact, we think, the Subordinate Judge's conclusion must be accepted. He has pointed out circumstances which show that this passage has been used as a way and that both the defendant and the plaintiff have been enjoying the right. It is unnecessary to go into the reasons which the learned Subordinate Judge has given after considering the evidence upon the record, but it is sufficient to say that this Court accepts his appreciation of the evidence.

The District Judge's decree must be reversed and the Subordinate Judge's decree restored with costs both of this second appeal and of the appeal in the lower Court on the respondent.

Decree reversed.

A valid award ordinarily operates to merge and extinguish all claims embraced in the submission. After the award has been made, the submission and the award furnish the only basis by which the rights of the parties can be determined, and constitute a bar to any action on the original cause of action.

Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Beharylal Bisak, 33 C. 881; 4 C. L. J. 162; Krishna Panda v. Balaram Panda, 19 M. 290 and Laldas v. Bai Lala, 11 Bom. L. R. 20; 1 Ind. Cas. 105; 5 M. L. T. 226, relied upon.

In order that a person, who was a party to a submission and award, may sue on the original cause of action, he must first have the award set aside, if the award is not a nullity but is only voidable at the instance of the party, and the suit to set aside the award must be brought within the period of three years under Article 91 of the Limitation Act.

Rees v. Walters, 16 M. & W. 253, 4 D. and L. 567, referred to.

Fraud or dishonesty on the part of arbitrator is not sufficient to vitiate his award as a nullity.

When an arbitrator has jurisdiction to make an award, fraud or dishonesty on his part does not deprive him of such jurisdiction; such conduct merely amounts to misconduct and may afford good cause for a competent Court to set aside the award.

Where a party has omitted to take steps to get an award set aside within the prescribed period of limitation, he cannot be allowed to object to the award on the ground of fraud or dishonesty of the arbitrator or his failure to decide all the matters in dispute.

Malkarjun v. Narhari, 25 B. 337 at p. 347; 27 I. A. 216; 5 C. W. N. 10; 10 M. L. J. 368; 2 Bom. L. R. 927, referred to.

An arbitrator is not bound to determine a matter not notified as a matter in difference or which is merely a collateral question, though it may be necessary to dispose of it with a view to deciding the main dispute.

Rees v. Walters, 16 M. & W. 263; 4 D. and L. 567 and Keene and Atkinson, (1847) April 16 Exch, relied upon.

In order to deprive an award of its binding effect, it is not enough that it was not enforced or that even both parties objected to it, but there must be positive evidence that both parties agreed that the former state of things should be restored.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant brought a suit against his four brothers (respondents) for partition of the family property. This claim is disputed by respondents Nos. 1 and 2. The main defence set up was that the suit is barred by an award passed on the 14th April 1903 by three arbitrators (of whom respondent No. 2 was one) to whom the parties had submitted their differences regarding the partition by an agreed reference, dated 11th March 1903; and that so far the plaintiff sought to set aside that award, the suit is time-barred under Article 91 of the Limitation Act. The lower Court, after a full consideration of the reported decisions bearing on the point, held that (1) plaintiff's claim to partition had merged into the submission to arbitration and the award, so that the present claim could not lie unless and until the award was set aside, and (2) as plaintiff had omitted to sue to set aside the award within the period of three years allowed by Article 91 of the Limitation Act, he could not now challenge or ignore its operation or effect. The first class Sub-Judge, accordingly, rejected his claim with costs.

The appellant appeals on various grounds, of which the only one argued may be summarized as follows:—the lower Court should have found (1) that the award was absolutely null and void; (2) that it had never been acted upon and (3) that in any case, the setting aside of it was merely ancillary to the claim of partition, which was the main and the only relief sought, so that Article 91 of the Limitation Act imposes no bar to the suit.

Taking the last point first, numerous decisions have been referred to, which we have duly considered. Many, however, including most of those relied on by appellant's Pleader, are cases of instruments, not executed by the plaintiff or any person through whom he claims, but by a third party, or of benami deeds, not intended to be operative and of a fraudulent nature. In such cases, there is no doubt that the plaintiff is not bound to sue to set aside the instrument, and Article 91 does not operate to restrict the period of limitation otherwise available. Here what the plaintiff wants is, as was said in Muhammed Baqar v. Mango Lal (1), merely "a declaration that the shadow cast upon his title may be dispersed," which can properly be treated as incidental to the main relief asked. But we agree with the general rule, deduced from the decisions of the Privy Council, etc., by Woodroffe, J., in Harihar Oja v. Dasarathi Misra (2), that "there can be no doubt that when a person seeks to recover property against an instrument executed by himself or one under whom he claims, he must first obtain the cancellation of the instrument, and that the three years' rule enacted by Article 91 applies to any suit brought by such person." As there stated, "the reason why a party seeking to recover property against his own instrument must show that it is voidable or void, as for instance for fraud, is that as long as an instrument creating a later title is not invalid, his former title cannot prevail," and it is accordingly essential for him to sue to set aside such instrument before he can rely on his former title.

In the present case, it is true that the instrument in the plaintiff's way is not a deed of assignment or other transfer executed by himself, but is a private award. This award was, however, made as a consequence of a reference to arbitration, to which he was a consenting party; and the general rule mentioned above applies a fortiori in such a case. For, as ruled in Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Beharylal Basak (3), a valid award ordinarily operates to merge and extinguish all claims embraced in the submission and after it has been made, the submission and award furnish the only basis by which the rights of the parties can be determined, and constitute a bar to any action on the original demand: see also the cases of Krishna Panda v. Balaram Panda (4) and Laldasjibhai v. Bai Lala (5). The view taken by the lower Court on this point was, therefore, in our opinion, correct.

It remains to consider the question whether the award was a mere nullity so as to need no setting aside, in which case, of course, neither the award nor Article 91 will be a bar to the plaintiff's suit. Two grounds were urged for so treating it, viz., (1) alleged fraud and dishonesty on the part of one of the arbitrators (viz., respondent No. 2) in making the award, and (2) alleged omission of the arbitrators to decide all the matters referred to them for determination. The first, however, clearly affords no good ground for treating the award as a mere nullity. The arbitrators admittedly had jurisdiction, and fraud or dishonesty on the part of an arbitrator does not destroy such jurisdicton, but merely amounts to misconduct on his part, which may afford good cause for a competent Court setting it aside. And the plaintiff, having omitted to take steps to get it set aside within the prescribed period of limitation, cannot now be allowed to object to the award on this ground. In other words, the general rule already referred to operates to bar this plea. The second ground might also be held to be one which the plaintiff is precluded from urging for the same reason. But in any case it is clearly not substantiated. Even admitting that, if a private award does not extend to all matters submitted to the arbitrator, it is wholly void, there does not appear to be any real omission on the part of the arbitrators to decide any of the matters referred to them. It was stated that item 6 of the property specified in the submission to arbitration [page 34 (b)] had not been dealt with by the arbitrators, so far as regards a portion of the sale-proceeds referred to (Cf. pages 52, 54). But there is a distinct award as regards "the saving out of the sale-proceeds" in question in para. 6 of the award [page 34 (e)] and respondent No. 2 explains that the remaining money was not partitioned, as it had been spent (which is not disputed) and all the brothers told him that the money had been used for joint purposes (pp. 8, 15). Whether the latter statement be true or not, the omission to deal with the spent portion of the sale-proceeds is not one which can in any way be held to invalidate the award. The arbitrators had, [to use the language of Lord Hobhouse in Mallarjun v. Narhari (6)], "jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right" on the point, whether such portion had to be accounted for by any of the parties or not.

This clearly falls within the authority given to the arbitrators by the submission to decide "what, which and how much (property) has to be divided and how and in what manner it should be divided," and there is nothing left undecided as regards these sale-proceeds, so as to bring the case within the authorities regarding the invalidity of an award for want of finality. In all such cases, there is a clear omission either to decide a difference referred to arbitration at all or to decide it in a manner which finally determines it. Thus, in the leading case of Randall v. Randall (7), the omission was to ascertain the rent to be paid by the plaintiff, which was a point expressly referred to the arbitrators. Similarly in Dandekar v. Dandekars (8), there was an omission to determine one of the principal subjects of dispute, viz., to make a division of certain fields. Again, in Hewitt v. Hewitt (9) and Ross v. Boards (10), there was a failure to determine finally the point referred. On the other hand, an arbitrator is not bound to determine a matter not notified as a matter in difference or which is merely a collateral question, though it may be necessary to dispose of it with a view to deciding the main dispute, Rees v. Walters (11) and Keene and Atkinson (12) cited in Russell on Arbitration, 7th Edition, page 263.

The other cases of alleged omission on the part of the arbitrators to determine matters referred to them merely amount to an omission on their part to take into account certain properties, values or monies in making their award; and they are nothing more than alleged mistakes on their part which, for the reasons already given, do not affect the jurisdiction of the arbitrators or the validity of the award.

The last point is whether the award has not been acted upon, as alleged by appellant. On this point, we see no reason to differ from the view taken by both the Bombay and Madras High Courts that, in order to deprive an award of its binding effect, it is not enough that it was not enforced or that even both parties objected to it, but there must be positive evidence that both parties agreed that the former state of things should be restored; Laldas v. Bailal (5) and Krishna Panda v. Balaram Panda (4). In this case, there is no such evidence.

On the contrary, the evidence shows that the award has been carried out, at any rate, in regard to defendant No. 4 making a private stair-case to his house instead of using a passage of defendant No. 2 as he had previously done [pages 12, 16, 18 and 34 (d)]. This objection, therefore, affords no ground for treating the award as nullity.

It is true there is no finding by the Sub-Judge on the questions whether the award was a nullity or had not been acted on, but admittedly evidence was recorded on issue 4, which covered these points (see paras. 2 and 3 of the memo. of appeal) and the evidence is sufficient to enable us to decide them, without a remand, under Order XLI, rule 24 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Execution of decree—Limitation—Twelve years' period to commence from the date when decree is capible of execution.

Before the execution of a decree can be held barred under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it must be shown that the decree was in all its parts ripe for execution on the date from which the period of twelve years is to be computed.

The execution and application contemplated by the section relate to a decree which is executable on the date of the decree in respect of the application made and execution sought, and 'the order for execution' contemplated by the provisions of the section refers to an order which the Court could have made and enforced in obedience to the terms of the decree.

A decree was passed on 14th December 1892 and provided, inter alia, that if there should be 'any deficit or any just and legal obstruction of whatever nature' to the mortgaged property being sold, the decree-holder should recover the deficiency or whatever might be due from the judgment-debtor personally and from his other property.

There was default in the payment of the decretal money. A part of the mortgaged property was sold. But as the proceeds of the sale were not sufficient to satisfy the full amount of the debt, the decree-holder was about to bring to sale the rest of the mortgaged property when the Collector intervened in 1908, and had the impending sale stopped on the ground that it was vatan property

On the 19th of December 1910, the decree-holder applied to have the personal remedy enforced against the judgment-debtor:

Held, that the application of 19th December 1910, was not barred under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, as the 12 years' period must be counted from 1908.

JUDGMENT.—In holding the execution of the decree in the darkhast before us barred under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the lower Court has overlooked the important consideration that the decree contemplated by the section should have been in all its parts ripe for execution on the date from which the twelve years' period of limitation is computed.

The decree in the present case was passed on the 14th of December 1892 and the present darkhast was presented on the 19th of December 1910. The decree consisted of four parts. In the first place, it directed that its holders should be put in possession of certain land, mortgaged to them by judgment-debtors, and that the former should enjoy the profits of the land for twenty years in satisfaction of the amount due on the mortgage. The second part ordered the judgment-debtors to pay to the decree-holders a certain amount of money annually in the nature of cash allowance. The third part directed that if in any year the judgment-debtors should fail to make the payment, the decree-holders should bring to sale the mortgaged land and get the money debt satisfied out of the sale-proceeds. Lastly—and this is the part of the decree with which we are now concerned for the purposes of the twelve years' limitation under section 48—the decree provided that if there should be "any deficit or any just and legal obstruction of whatever nature" to the mortgaged property being sold, the decree-holders should recover the deficiency or whatever might be due in respect of the cash allowance from the judgment-debtors "personally and from their other property."

The judgment-debtors made default in the payment of the cash allowance in 1893 with the result that the decree-holders, in compliance with the terms of the third part of the decree, brought the mortgaged property to sale under an order of the Court in execution. A part of the land was sold; but as the proceeds of the sale were not sufficient to satisfy the full amount of the debt, they were about to bring to sale the rest of the mortgaged property when the Collector intervened and had the impending sale stopped on the ground that it was vatan property.

It was at this point—in the year 1903—that the decree became, for the first time, capable of execution in respect of the personal remedy given to the decree-holders in the fourth and last part. Until then, in respect of that part and that remedy, the decree was merely ancillary and provisional. The decree-holders could not, till that point of time, make any application for execution which it was in the power of the Court to grant, because till then there was no decree ripe for execution, so far as the personal remedy was concerned.

When section 48 of the Code provides that "where an application to execute a decree, not being a decree granting an injunction, has been made, no order for execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the decree sought to be executed," the execution and application contemplated relate to a decree which is executable at that date in respect of the application made and execution sought, and the "order for the execution" contemplated by the provisions of the section refers to an order which the Court could have made and enforced in obedience to the terms of the decree. This construction is supported by the ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Muhammad Suleman

Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (1), on the interpretation of Article 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877. The 1st paragraph of that Article provided for the execution of the decree three years' limitation "from the date of the decree". It was held that the paragragh must necessarily apply only where there is a decree or order which can at its date be executed.

In the present case, the decree-holders were not in a position to make any application for the execution of the decree against the judgment-debtors personally until there had been an arrest of the enforcement of the remedy given to them by the third part of the decree. Nor was the Court competent to grant the personal remedy until that arrest. When that contingency happened, the personal decree, which had been till then provisional and ancillary, became effective, and the application to enforce the personal remedy took the place of, as having been ancillary to, the previous proceedings in execution under the third part of the decree, rendered abortive by the Collector's order under the Vatan Act: Rahim Ali Khan v. Phul Chand (2).

On these grounds, the decree appealed from must be reversed and the darkhast remitted to the Court below to be disposed of on the merits according to law. The respondents must pay to the appellants the costs of this appeal. Other costs of the darkhast to abide the result.

Decree reversed.

The rule of damdupat, which is nothing more than a rule of limitation having a religious origin, is not abrogated by the Transfer of Property Act or by Civil Procedure Code, Order XXIV, rules 2 and 4. A mortgagor is, therefore, entitled to the benefit of the rule.

Surya Narainsingh v. Jogendra Narain Roy Chowdhury, 20 C. 360; Jeevanbai v. Manordas Lachmandas, 12 Bom. L. R. 992; 8 Ind. Cas. 619; 35 B. 199, relied upon.

Madhwa Sidhanta Onakini Nidhi v. Venkataramanajulu Naidu, 23 M. 662, dissented from.

The words "interest on mortgage" refer to the rate of interest provided by the mortgage, if it be a rate to which no valid legal objection can be taken.

The rule of damdupat applies to interest after decree.

Ramchandra Mankeshwar v. Bhimrav Ravji, 1 B. 577 at p. 580, Ram Kanye Adhicarry v. Cally Churn Dey, 21 C. 340, followed.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants claim advantage of the rule of "Damdupat." Plaintiffs, while not disputing that the rule applies in ordinary cases to debts between Hindus in this Province, contend that under Order XXXIV, rules 2 and 4, they are entitled to interest as stipulated in the bond, in spite of the rule of "Damdupat." Reliance is placed on the case of Madhwa Sidhanta Onakini Nidhi v. Venkataramanjulu Naidu (1), where it was held that the "Damdupat" rule is inapplicable to cases of mortgages governed by the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Judges, in that case, argued that under sections 86 and 87 of Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagee is entitled to interest as contracted for, and that the general rule of law laid down in that Act must be held to abrogate the special rule of law obtaining among Hindus. The words of section 86 relied on are:—"If the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall make a decree, ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage." But, surely, no greater force can be attached to these words than was allowed by the Court in the case of Surya Narainsingh v. Jogendra Narain Roy Chowdhury (2), wherein the Judges expressed the opinion that "Section 86 binds the Court to give a decree at the rate of interest provided by the mortgage if it be a rate to which no valid legal objection can be taken," that is to say, the mortgagee is, prima facie, entitled to enforce the strict terms of his contract, but the defendant is not debarred from showing that he is legally entitled to relief against them. The rule of "Damdupat" is nothing more than a rule of limitation [Ramconnoy Audicarry v. Johur Lall Dutt (3)], having a religious origin, obtaining among Hindus; and, in my opinion, section 86 of the Transfer of Property Act and rule 2 of Order XXXIV cannot be fairly construed so as to abrogate this rule. In Jeevanbai v. Manordas Lachmandas (4), it was held that the Transfer of Property Act had not affected the application of the rule of "Damdupat" in the case of a Hindu mortgagor, and there is no reported case from this side of India supporting the view expressed by the Madras High Court. I hold, therefore, that the rule applies.

It is further contended for plaintiffs that the rule does not, at any rate, apply to interest after date of decree; but on this point, I feel bound to follow the decisions in Ramchandra Mankeshwar v. Bhimrav Ravji (5) and Ram Kanye Audhicarry v. Cally Churn Dey (6) and to hold that the rule does apply to such interest. Plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to Rs. 1,500 as interest and no more.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 24, 25, 28 —Claims on forward contracts—Contingent debts—Proof in insolvency—Creditor's affidavits—Duty of official Receiver.

Claims in respect of forward contracts are demands in the nature of unliquidated damages arising out of contract. They are contingent debts capable of being fairly estimated and can be proved, under the Insolvency Act, before the due dates for the performance of the contracts have arrived.

Hardy v. Fothergill, 13 A. C. 351 at p. 358; 58 L. J. Q. B. 44; 59 L. T. 273; 37 W. R. 177; 53 J. P. 36, referred to.

Where different creditors file affidavits before the Official Receiver in proof of such debts, it is his duty to inquire into the matter and to determine a uniform rate for the purpose of making a fair estimate or valuation of these debts. The creditors' affidavits should not be accepted without question, as the affidavits can only disclose the chance of liability, and are nothing but the creditor's estimate and opinion as to the present value of the debt. A creditor's estimate is no part of the proof of such a debt.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, for the Applicant.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Insolvents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Messrs. Forbes, Forbes, Campbell & Co. against an order of the Official Receiver rejecting proof of their debt and refusing to enter it in the schedule of creditors and debts of the insolvent firm of Mossaji Ismailji Lotia.

The adjudication order was made on the 29th March and the property of insolvents was vested in the Official Receiver.

Several of the creditors had made forward contracts with the insolvents for the sale of sugar and of these the appellants were creditors for the largest sum. They tendered proof by affidavit on the 2nd June and assessed damages at the rates at which they could on the 26th May have sold the sugar for delivery on the contract dates.

The Official Receiver called a meeting of creditors on the 5th July at which some of the creditors suggested that the contracts should be sold and damages assessed accordingly, while Mr. Rupchand for the insolvents contended that the damages should be assessed either in that way or by the rates prevailing at the date of breach. No rate, however, was fixed and nothing was effected beyond a definite intimation which the Official Receiver gave to the creditors that he would not accept delivery on behalf of the insolvents.

The Official Receiver appears to have been under the impression that he could not fix the rate because he had not been authorized under section 20 (c) to (i) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. He applied to the Court for these powers and they were conferred upon him on the 19th July.

By that date sugar had begun to rise in price and one of the creditors, Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co., who had re sold at the lower rates of April, May and June, represented that the appellants should be required to re-sell or that the higher rate of the day should be considered in assessing their damages.

The Official Receiver communicated on this subject with Messrs. Forbes, Forbes, Campbell & Co., but they consistently took up the position that they had rescinded the contracts on the 5th July and that their damages should be assessed at the rates of that day.

Ultimately, the Official Receiver admitted proof and entered in the schedule the debts of the other contracting firms, i. e., Messrs Graham, Volkart, Ralli and Sassoon—but as to Forbes, gave them the option of either re-selling and having their damages assessed on the basis of such re-sales or of waiting till the dates of delivery so as to have actual damages calculated.

Now, the Official Receiver was in error in thinking that he could not fix the rate for damages without being empowered under section 20 (c) to (i). The only clauses which could be imagined to apply are paras. (c) and (h). Para. (c) refers to power to carry on the business of the insolvent so far as it may be necessary for the beneficial winding up of the estate. The Official Receiver was not exercising that power, for when he intimated that he would not take delivery, he elected not to carry on that business. Para. (h) refers to the compromise of debts, claims and liabilities on such terms as may be agreed upon. But this power is, under the terms of the section, to be exercised for the purpose of realizing the property of the insolvents. It refers, therefore, to compromise with persons who are under a liability to the insolvents' estate—and it is doubtful if it refers to creditors whose claims would be decided either by inclusion in the schedule for the purpose of dividend or by composition under section 27. But I need not discuss this point further, for, as I shall presently show, the Official Receiver had jurisdiction to decide the matter without resorting to a compromise.

The claims of the firms who held forward contracts were demands in the nature of unliquidated damages arising out of contract. The Act admits such claims—for section 28 (2) only excludes those not arising out of contract or breach of trust. Again, these claims are contingent debts—that is, they are contingent not only on non-performance by the Receiver, but also on the rates at the due dates being lower than the contract rates. Contingent debts are proveable under the Act subject only to the proviso to section 24 (1) that they are not incapable of being fairly estimated.

The Official Receiver has authority under section 52 (b) to frame schedules and to admit or reject proofs of creditors. He, therefore, had jurisdiction to say of a debt whether it can be fairly estimated or not—and if it could be fairly estimated, he had jurisdiction, and it was his duty, to make such estimate. The jurisdiction is expressly conferred on the Official Receiver by the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, section 46 (4). Compare also section 37 of the English Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

The Official Receiver failed to exercise this jurisdiction and I think also that he erred in treating the affidavits of the other contracting firms as proof of their debts. Under section 25, a debt may be proved by an affidavit containing an account supported if possible by vouchers. But this evidence could only amount to proof in respect of debts that are certain. Here the affidavits could only disclose the chance of a liability—but as to the amount or present value of the debt there was nothing but the creditors' estimate. That is merely the creditors' opinion and it has, therefore, been held that a creditor's estimate is no part of the proof—see in Re Dodds, Ex parte Pritchard (1). The Official Receiver, therefore, instead of accepting the affidavits of the other creditors without question, should have applied his mind to the matter and, on the basis of those affidavits, should have determined a uniform rate for the purpose of making a fair estimate or valuation of the contingent debts.

Mr. Rupchand for the insolvents contends that the appellants are only entitled to get such actual damages as may accrue to them when the due dates arrive. This is directly opposed to his contention before the Official Receiver on the 5th July and it does not consist with his raising no objection to the rates allowed to Messrs. Graham, Volkart, Sassoon and Ralli. These debts have been valued at various rates prevailing at various dates in February, April, May and June. Moreover, the contention is manifestly opposed to the policy of the Act. The object of the Act is that all debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, should be proved and the insolvent discharged in respect of them. If contingent debts could not be proved until the event on which they were contingent arrived, some debts could never be proved at all. For instance, the claim of a life annuitant would depend for its value on the life of the claimant. He, therefore, according to Mr. Rupchand's contention, could not claim at all until he was dead.

No doubt, there are cases in which the admission of contingent debts to proof may work a hardship on some and confer an unfair benefit on others. This was referred to by the Earl of Selbourne in Haray v. Fothergill (2) and I read his remarks:—

"For the principle of the old bankrupt laws, which did not admit to proof any claims for liabilites contingent at the time of bankruptcy, much might perhaps be said. It might be a hardship upon the creditors, to whom debts were then due, that a merely possible future liability, which might never have matured into a debt at all, should be valued and admitted to proof, and to participation in dividends. In most cases, if any substantial dividend were paid, this would be a benefit to the person interested in the performance of the contract under which such liability would arise if the contingency happened; but there might also be cases in which it would be a hardship upon him to be compelled to prove such a claim, so valued, at a time when the estate of the bankrupt might be inadquate to pay any substantial dividend, instead of waiting for the occurrence of the contingency (if it ever should occur) and then taking his legal remedies against such property as the debtor might at that time possess, whether previously bankrupt or not. But the Legislature, for whatever reason, has gone at least far enough to exclude from the consideration of the present question a priori arguments of that kind."

So here we have to carry out the Act and not to criticise its policy. Some of the firms, e. g., Sassoon and Volkart, re-sold. I would observe that they did this before the rescission on the 5th July and did so at their own risk for the Official Receiver might possibly have claimed delivery. The insolvents authorized Forbes to re-sell the day before they filed their petition. This authority was of no effect after the adjudication order was made; and I do not find that the Official Receiver authorized a re-sale at any time prior to the rescission on the 5th July. But even if he had, such re sale would in no way assist in the valuation of the debt for the daily rates are well known. And after rescission, I do not understand how the Official Receiver or any one else can dictate to Forbes what they should do with their sugar.

I have dealt now with the legal aspect of the case and have disposed of the arguments adduced in support of the order. My conclusion is that on the 5th July when the Receiver intimated that he would not accept delivery, he should have proceeded to make a fair estimate of the claim of the appellants. If he had done so, I have no doubt he would have taken as his basis the rates of that day. I shall take the same basis without regard to the rise of rates since then, for the delay is attributable to the action of an officer of the Court and the maxim applies that an act of the Court shall prejudice no man. But having elected to keep the sugar, the appellants cannot be allowed brokerage or commission.

I accordingly vary the order of the Receiver and direct him to estimate the claim on this basis and to enter the debt so estimated in the Schedule.

I allow the appeal with costs. Costs to come out of the estate.

Appeal allowed.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 2 (2)—Agriculturist—Minor son of agriculturist—Earning livelihood by agriculture.

MATHRADASS v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

The minor son of an agriculturist is not an agriculturist within the meaning of the definition in section 2 clause (2) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

Dependence for livelihood upon another who is an agriculturist is not the same thing as earning livelihood for oneself by agriculture. To earn livelihood by agriculture is to obtain the means of livelihood by it.

Dwarkojirav Baburaw v. Balkrishna Bhalchandra, 19 B. 255, followed.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Ahmednagar, in Appeal No. 94 of 1909, confirming that passed by the Subordinate Judge of Shevagaon, in Civil Suit No. 215 of 1908.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. A. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The minors concerned in this case, it is found, were not agriculturists at the time of the suit. But the Courts below have given them the benefit of the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act under the second definition of section 2, clause (2), of the Act. According to that section, we must see what the definition of 'agriculturist' was at the time the liability was incurred. That definition was the same in 1893 that it is now, and, therefore, we have to see whether the minors concerned, either by themselves, or by their servants, or by their tenants, "earned their livelihood" wholly or principally by agriculture. It is found as a fact by the learned District Judge that at the time the liability was incurred, these were minors depending for their support on their father who was an agriculturist at that time, and, therefore, their income, if they can be said to have had an income, was chiefly derived from agriculture. That was because they depended upon their father for their livelihood. But dependence for livelihood upon another who is an agriculturist is not the same thing as earning livelihood for oneself by agriculture. To earn livelihood by agriculture is to obtain the means of livelihood by it: Dwarkojiraw Baburaw v. Balkrishna Bhalchandra (1). Upon the ground that there is no evidence whatever to show that the minors earned their livelihood by agriculture at the time the liability was incurred, the decree must be reversed and the case sent back to the Subordinate Judge to be dealt with on the merits according to law with reference to the observations in this judgment.

MATHRADASS RAMDASS—APPELLANT

versus

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—RESPONDENT.

Practice—Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court Rules, 23, 24, 27—Remand order—Inclusion of Pleader's fees in costs—Failure to file certificate of fee—Review of taxation after success in lower Court—"Successful party", meaning of.

Under Rule 27 of Rules of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind, no application for review of taxation of costs is allowable unless made before the decree is signed.

When a case is remanded for fresh decision and costs of appeal are directed to be costs in the cause, the lower Court when passing its decree has no power to alter the order of the Appellate Court as to costs and to allow costs not shown in the order of the Appellate Court.

The expression "successful party" in rule 23 of the rules of Court means the party who, as a result of the Court's judgment, is entitled to formulate a claim for costs against other party; it does not include a party obtaining success in proceedings before another Court.

Where the final incidence of the burden of costs is left for the decision of the lower Court, as in the case of remand, a party desiring his Pleader's fees to be included in the costs must file the usual certificate of fees in the Appellate Court before the decree of that Court is signed.

Application for review of taxation of costs.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Appellant.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Tekchand Oodhavdas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, this Court reversed the order of the lower Court dismissing the suit, and remanded it for trial; the order as to costs was "costs of this appeal to be costs in the cause." Appellant submitted a bill of costs including Pleader's fee accompanied by the usual certificate, in accordance with rules 23 and 24 of Chapter VII. Respondent filed no bill and no certificate. Pursuing the ordinary practice of this Court, the costs of both sides were taxed and entered in the decree, but in the case of the respondent, they were taxed on the materials supplied by the record, and no Pleader's fee having been certified, none was allowed. On remand, the lower Court dismissed the suit with costs, including those reserved as costs in the cause by the Appellate Court. Respondent filed an application praying that the Court would "allow him Rs. 50 on account of Pleader's fee for the Appellate Court and include the same in the decree," but the Court held that it had no power to alter the Appellate Court's decree and to allow costs not shown therein. Respondent now applies to have the taxation reviewed.

There can be no doubt that this order of the lower Court was correct. This is clear from the terms of Order XLI, rule 35, Civil Procedure Code, and the point was discussed and settled as far back as 1870 in the case of Nubo Kristo Mookerjee v. Parbutty Churn Bhuttacharjee (1).

To the present application for review of taxation, rule 27 of this Court seems to afford a complete answer—for, under that rule, no application for review of taxation is allowed unless made before the decree is signed.

But Mr. Tekchand contends that, under rule 23, it is only the successful party who is bound to submit a bill of costs, and that, therefore, (1) he infringed no rule by omitting to file a bill when the Court made the adverse order of remand, and (2) having won in the lower Court, he is entitled, as a successful party, to file a bill of costs now.

But it is not sought to penalize the respondent for infringing a rule; it is merely contended that he failed to take advantage of an opportunity. Though rule 23 makes it obligatory on a successful party to submit his bill, it is always open to the unsuccessful party to present a bill also if he wish any costs not appearing on the Court record to be included in the decree. Nor can "successful party" be given so wide a construction as to include success in proceedings before another Court. The expression obviously means the party who, as a result of the Court's judgment, is entitled to formulate a claim for costs against another party. Where the final incidence of the burden of costs is left for the decision of the lower Court, each party will be well advised to submit his bill for the question of the amount of each party's costs in appeal is conclusively determined by the decree of the Appellate Court.

We dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed.

When once the period of 12 years prescribed by section 48, Civil Procedure Code, has begun to run from the date of the decree, such period must be computed from that day.

Where a decree-holder, who is not under any disability, obtains a decree and thereafter dies leaving a minor son as his heir, the minority of the son cannot arrest the running of the period of 12 years prescribed by section 48, Civil Procedure Code, which must be computed from the date of the decree irrespective of the son's minority.

JUDGMENT.—We are indebted to each of the Pleaders for appearing in this Reference as amicus curiæ. Mr. Nilkanth has placed before us all the available authorities on the point and argued the Reference in support of the plaintiff. But we are of opinion that our answer to the Reference must be that the claim is barred by the law of limitation prescribed in section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We agree with the Subordinate Judge in the view he has taken, namely, that the decree having been obtained by the plaintiff's father and time having once begun to run under section 9 of the Limitation Act, no subsequent disability, that is, the minority of the plaintiff, could arrest it. Once the limitation began to run from the date of the decree, the twelve years' period must be computed from that day. The point is practically decided by this Court in Jivraj v. Babaji (1). With this answer, the Reference must be returned to the Subordinate Judge.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 6—Jurisdiction—Insolvency petition by debtor arrested or imprisoned—"Or", construction of.

A debtor, who has been arrested or imprisoned in execution of a decree, may present an insolvency petition to the Court having jurisdiction either in the local area where he is in custody or where he resides or carries on business.

The word 'or' in section 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is used in the sense of giving the debtor an alternative choice. It does not restrict the debtor to present his insolvency petition only to the Court within whose jurisdiction he is in custody.

Appeal against an order of the Joint Judge, Sukkur-Larkana.

Mr. Isarsing Hazarising, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—We consider that where a debtor has been arrested, or imprisoned, he is not limited in the presentation of his insolvency petition to a Court having jurisdiction in the local area where he is in custody.

The word "or" ordinarily connects a series of words, marks alternatives and gives choice of either alternative. The words "if he has been arrested or imprisoned" between "or" and "where he is in custody" in the last line of section 6 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, merely limit or explain the application of the last alternative. We see no reason to suppose that the word has not been used in its ordinary sense through the sub-sections.

We cannot accept the construction placed on the section by the lower Court without giving to the word where, last used, a disjunctive sense, a sense quite different to that in which it is obviously twice used earlier in the section. Were the word intended to be used in a disjunctive sense, we should expect it to mark the commencement of a fresh sentence. In this case there is no fresh sentence. Had the Legislature intended that the word should be interpreted in a disjunctive sense, we should have expected a much clearer indication of such intention.

We reverse the order of the lower Court and direct that the petition be disposed of according to law. Costs to be costs in the insolvency proceedings.

Order set aside.

A.'s one-third interest in certain salt-pans was leased to B., for a period of three years at Rs. 500 a year during A.'s minority by her guardians and co-sharer, who owned the remaining two-thirds share.

On attaining majority, A. leased her share for two years more to B. on a rental of Rs. 1,000 a year.

A. sued B. to recover the rent of the last two years at the rate of Rs. 1,000 a year and Rs. 653 as rent due on the previous lease.

The rent-deed was not registered but B. admitted A.'s ownership of the salt-pan and also his tenancy under her and her co-sharer; B., however, alleged that he had been in possession from the beginning under a lease for five years and not three years:

(3) that A. could only recover the money as for use and occupation for the two years of the tenancy and as the amount claimed by her was not shown to be excessive, she was entitled to it.

The lease of a salt-pan is not illegal merely because the sanction of the Collector of Salt Revenue has not been obtained thereto.

Per Batchelor, J.—Receipts for rent granted by a landlord are admissible in evidence, not as proving the terms of the contract of letting, but as proving from the conduct of the parties what would be a fair rent for the admitted tenancy.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge of Thana, in Appeal No. 152 of 1910, reversing that passed by the Joint Subordinate Judge at Thana, in Civil Suit No. 182 of 1909.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. Robertson, with him Mr. D. A. Khare, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHANDAVARKAR, J.—The plaintiff (who is respondent in this second appeal) alleged in her plaint that the salt-pan in dispute, in which she had interest to the extent of one-third, had been leased away during her minority to the appellants for a period of three years on a rental of Rs. 500 a year by her guardians and one Dharman, who owned the remaining two-thirds share, that on the expiry of that period, she, having obtained the age of majority, let her interest for two years to the appellants on a rental of Rs. 1,000 a year. She sought to recover the rent of those two years at that rate and also Rs. 653 as rent due on the previous lease.

The appellants in their written statement admitted the respondent's ownership of the salt-pan and also their tenancy under her and Dharman, but they contended that they had been in possession from the beginning under a lease for five years, not three years as alleged in the plaint.

Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act requiring that "a lease of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument," the respondent could not be allowed to rely on the lease set up by her, because it was not registered: Ardesir Bejonji Surti v. Syed Sirdar Ali Khan (1). Nor could she be allowed to give oral evidence of that lease (section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act).

But the appellants having admitted in their written statement the ownership of the respondent and that they were in as her tenants, proof of the relation of landlord and tenant became unnecessary. "A Court in general has to try the questions on which the parties are at issue, not those on which they are agreed," and "admissions which have been deliberately made for the purposes of the suit, whether in the pleading or by agreement, will act as an estoppel to the admission of any evidence contradicting them." Burjorji Cursetji Panthaki v. Muncherji Kuverji (2).

The only question then at issue, was the amount of rent payable. So far as the agreement set up by either party was concerned, it was inadmissible in evidence and no oral evidence could be given of it. The respondent could only recover as for use and occupation for the two years of the tenancy admitted.

We have evidence in the case to show that at the beginning of the two years' tenancy, admitted by the appellants, one merchant was ready to take the salt-pan on a higher rent than Rs. 5,000, which they had paid till then; that another merchant was willing to pay a rent of Rs. 7,000 per annum, and that the appellants were paying at the date of the suit Rs. 6,100. The lower Appellate Court has believed this evidence, and the rent claimed in the plaint and awarded by that Court cannot be regarded as excessive for the appellant's use and occupation of the salt-pan.

Two other points were urged before us in support of the appeal—one that the lease of the salt-pan was illegal because it had not the sanction of the Collector of Salt Revenue, and the other that the report of the guardians of the plaintiff made to the District Judge was inadmissible. We agree with the lower Courts that the lease was not illegal, and that the report was admissible.

The decree is confirmed with costs.

BATCHELOR, J.—I agree. In my opinion the receipts issued by the plaintiff for payments made to her were rightly admitted in evidence, and, if that is so, the decree under appeal must be affirmed. It seems to me that these receipts are admissible, not as proving the terms of the contract of letting, but as proving from the conduct of the parties, what would be a fair rent for the admitted tenancy. Reference may also be made to illustration (e) of section 91, Evidence Act.

(2) 5 B. 143 at p. 152.

Decree confirmed.

XX, r. 6—Defendant dying after close of hearing but before judgment—Execution of decree—Power of execution Court to decline to execute decree passed without jurisdiction—Power to consider question of jurisdiction.

A Court has no jurisdiction to make a decree against or in favour of a person deceased. Such a decree is void and incapable of execution.

Imdad Ali v. Jagan Lal, 17 A. 478 and Vishvanath Danzanoba v. Lallu Kabla, 11 Bom. L. R. 1070, 4 Ind. Cas. 137, followed.

The only exception to the rule is the case of a defendant dying between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncement of judgment; in such an event, the Court may deliver judgment nunc pro tunc.

A decree passed without jurisdiction is incapable of execution and the Court to which such decree is transferred for execution is competent to decline to execute it.

The Court charged with the execution of a decree can consider the question whether the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to pass it unless the decree itself precludes that question.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas, for Defendant No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for execution of decree passed by the Court of the first class Munsif at Lyallpur.

The decree has been transferred to this Court for execution under section 40, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Harchandrai for the first judgment-debtor's representative, Teckchand, objects that the first judgment-debtor died before the decree was passed. The decree is dated the 21st April 1908 and the first judgment-debtor or rather the 1st defendant died on the 4th January 1903. He urges that the decree as against him is void.

Mr. Kalumal argues that the Court of execution cannot question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. The rule relied upon by Mr. Kalumal was first laid down by the Bombay High Court in Chagalal v. Trueman (1). In that case, the Court of execution thought the cause of action on the hundi, which was the subject of the suit, arose in Poona and not in Nasirabad as held by the Court which passed the decree. But the question was not one of jurisdiction, for the trying Court had jurisdiction to decide where the cause of action arose and even if it came to an erroneous decision, that did not affect its jurisdiction or competence to pass the decree.

In the next case Kasturshet Javershet v. Rama Kanhoji (2), the decree was a decree passed by a Court of Small Causes against a defendant who afterwards claimed to be an agriculturist. Here, again, no question of jurisdiction was involved, for it was open to the defendant to waive his status; as he had not pleaded in the Court of Small Causes that he was an agriculturist, that Court had jurisdiction to make a decree against him. In Chintaman Vithoba v. Chintaman Bajaji Deb (3), the objections raised referred to the authority of the trustee who was party to the suit to represent the estate. This did not affect jurisdiction. The Court may have erred in holding that the trustee did represent the estate, but that would be an error within jurisdiction for the Court has jurisdiction to decide right as well as to decide wrong: Malkarjun v. Narhari (4). The rule laid down in that case was that the Court of execution could not question the validity of the decree, and that I understand to mean the legality of the decree and not the competence or jurisdiction of the Court which made the decree. Batty, J., uses the word 'jurisdiction' in Trimbakrao v. Balwantrao (5). But the sentence in which the word is used is an obiter dictum. The Privy Council state the rule very clearly in The Maharaja of Bhartpur v Rani Kanno Dei (6).—"As there is no inconsistency, the duty of the executing Court is, as the High Court rightly points out, to carry the orders of the decree into effect, as being conclusive between the parties, whether it may or may not be disputable upon a point of law." These words do not include the case of a decree which is one which the Court is not competent to pass. Such a decree is not a decree at all and is, therefore, not susceptible of execution. This appears to have been the view of Farran, J., in Haji Musa Ahmed v. Purmanand Nursey (7), for he said: "If this Court were asked to execute the decree of a Mofussil Court directing land in Bombay to be delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff, or of a Mofussil Small Cause Court ordering the payment of such a sum as Rupees one lakh, it would rightfully, I consider, refuse the application." In Imdad Ali v. Jagan Lal (8), execution was sought against the representative of a defendant who had died before the decree was passed. It was held that the decree was void and incapable of execution. The Court said:—

(1) 7 B. 481.
(2) 10 B. 65.
(3) 22 B. 475.

"There can be no doubt, in our opinion, that the Court charged with the execution of a decree can consider the question as to whether the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to pass it, unless the decree itself precludes that question."

This I take to be good law—and the last clause would cover such a case as that of Chogalal v. Truemon (1), for where the Court has decided that it has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit—that question is not to be re-opened in execution. In Vishvanathe Danzanoba v. Lallu Kabla (9), it was held that the Court has no jurisdiction to make a decree against or in favour of a person deceased; and an execution application based on such a decree was dismissed.

Order XXII, rule 6, however, makes an exception in the case of a defendant dying between the conclusion of the hearing and pronouncing of judgment for in such an event the Court may deliver judgment nunc pro tunc.

I accordingly adjourn this matter till 15th November to give the opponent an opportunity of producing a copy of the diary of the suit to show to what stage the suit had progressed by the 4th January 1908.

The execution application as against defendant No. 1 is dismissed with costs there being no valid decree against him.

Fresh notice to issue as against defendant No. 2.

Musammat HARDEI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, and O. XXII, r. 9—Hindu Law—Daughter's estate—Joint owners, effect of one suing for his share—Cause of action—Representation of estate.

A widow with two daughters, H. and S., mortgaged the house left by her husband to the appellant, the deed of mortgage being attested by S.

On her death, H. sued for possession of half the house and was successful. S. then sued for her half share but she died during the pendency of the suit. Upon her death, H. sued the appellant for the remaining half share. The appellant contended that the suit was not maintainable in view of the fact that H. had sued only for a half share when she ought to have sued for the whole and that in the second litigation, S. represented the whole estate, and consequently, H. was now bound by the result of that litigation.

Held, (1) that the right to sue for the half share of S. accrued to H. only after the death of S. and that when S. sued for her half share, she did not represent the whole estate so as to bind H.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated 17th February 1911, reversing that of the Officiating Munsif of Sitapur, dated 18th August 1910.

Mr. H. C. Dutt, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows. One Jia Lal, who owned a house and a shop, died leaving a widow, Musammat Radha, and two daughters, Musammat Hardei and Musammat Sitala. The widow, Musammat Radha, came into possession of her husband's property with the estate of a Hindu widow and while she was still alive, she mortgaged the property to one Budhu Chaudhri. The date of this mortgage was the 10th November 1899 and it is admitted that Musammat Sitala, one of the daughters, was an attesting witness to the mortgage. When Musammat Radha died, a suit was brought by her daughter, Musammat Hardei, claiming joint possession of the property with the mortgagee on the ground that the mortgage-deed was not for various reasons binding upon her. The result of this litigation was that Musammat Hardei got a decree for possession to the extent of her share in the property. After this, the other daughter, Musammat Sitala, filed a similar suit. This suit was dismissed in the Court of first instance and an appeal was filed during the pendency of which Musammat Sitala died. After her death, Musammat Sitala's son, one Ganga, was brought on the record as the legal representative of his mother. The case was fought out to this Court and the result of this litigation was that Sitala's suit was dismissed. After this, Musammat Hardei brought a suit against the mortgagee claiming the interest in the mortgaged property which had belonged to her sister, Sitala and it is this suit which has given rise to the present appeal. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim of Musammat Hardei on the ground that at the time when Musammat Sitala died during the pendency of her appeal, it was the duty of Hardei to have herself brought on the record as the legal representative of her sister and carry on the litigation. The Munsif was of opinion that having failed to do so, she was debarred from instituting the present suit under the provisions of Order XXII, rule 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In appeal, this decision was reversed by the District Judge and now the decree of the District Judge is attacked in this Court on the ground that the Munsif's decision was correct and should not have been disturbed. It is also contended here that even if the suit of Musammat Hardei be not bad for the reasons given by the learned Munsif, it was nevertheless not maintainable by reason of the provisions of Order II, rule 2. On this point, the argument is that as Musammat Hardei, when she brought her suit against Budhu Chaudhri for joint possession of his share, failed to make a claim in respect of the entire property, she is not entitled now to sue for that portion of the property which she omitted to claim in the previous litigation. These are the only points which are put forward for decision and after considering the argument of the learned Counsel and the facts of the case, I am of opinion that the decision of the learned Judge should be maintained. It is, no doubt, correct to say, as has been said by the appellant's learned Counsel, that when these two sisters Musammats Hardei and Sitala succeeded to the property on their mother's death, they took an estate in joint tenancy and there can be no dispute that the estate being of this nature; on the death of one of the sisters, her interest would pass by survivorship to the other. The position of the sisters in this case was the same as that of two widows who succeed jointly to the estate of their deceased husband. The nature of that estate is well described in Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th Edition, paragraph 554. The learned author says:—"Where several widows hold an estate jointly, or where one holds as manager for the others, each has a right to her proportionate share of the produce of the property, and of the benefits derivable from its enjoyment. And the widows may be placed in possession of separate portions of the property, either by agreement among themselves, or by the decree of Court, where from the nature of the property, or from the conduct of the co-widows, such a separate possession appears to be the only effectual mode of securing to each the full enjoyment of her rights. But no partition can be effected between them, whether by consent or by adverse decree, which could convert the joint estate into an estate in severalty, and put an end to the right of survivorship." Now it may have been that when Hardei brought her first suit against this mortgagee, she could have made her sister a party to the case and brought a suit for recovery of the entire property in which both the sisters were joint owners. That we know was not done. At the same time, we have to take it that the Courts on that occasion gave Musammat Hardei a decree for joint possession with the mortgagee to the extent of her share. There seems to have been one reason at any rate on which the procedure of Musammat Hardei in that case might be held to be justified. It has been stated that her sister Musammat Sitala was an attesting witness to the mortgage executed in favor of Budhu Chaudhri by her mother, Musammat Radha. That fact is some evidence of consent on the part of Sitala to the mortgage transaction and it would probably have been very difficult for her to join as plaintiff in any suit against Budhu Chaudhri in which of necessity she would have had to raise the question of the validity of the mortgage transaction to which she herself had been a consenting party. In any case, it seems to me from the statement of the law which has been laid down above that the Court may in proper cases award one of the co-widows or one of two daughters such separate possession as appears to be necessary in order to secure her the full enjoyment of her rights. I am not prepared, therefore, to hold that it is a good plea that the present suit of Musammat Hardei is not maintainable merely because she omitted to make a claim in the first instance for the whole of the property. Obviously, she could not have made such a claim on her own behalf. She would have had to join either as co-plaintiff or as pro forma defendant her own sister Sitala, who was a joint owner with herself; and, in the circumstances already set out, this does not appear to have been possible. Then, it is argued that Musammat Hardei is bound by the decree passed against Musammat Sitala on the ground that the latter represented the estate and that, therefore, a decree obtained against her is binding on Musammat Hardei. I am unable to allow this argument to prevail. I do not see how Musammat Sitala, who was entitled only to a share in the estate of her deceased father, can be said to represent the whole estate; nor, again, can I see how it can be said that Musammat Hardei in any way represents her deceased sister so as to be bound by any litigation affecting the latter. Musammat Hardei has become entitled to her sister's interest in the property by right of survivorship. That right came into existence only on the death of Musammat Sitala and I can see no reason why Musammat Hardei is not entitled to enforce it. As for Order XXII, rule 9, that appears to me to have nothing whatever to do with the matter. The cause of action which Musammat Hardei is putting forward in this suit was not the cause of action which had been put forward by her sister Sitala. These are the only points advanced in support of this appeal. I decide them against the appellant. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Right to sue—Minor—Guardian—Contract by guardian—Suit on such contract.

It is open to a minor to either affirm or disaffirm contracts entered into by his guardian but not binding on him.

At the same time, it is the right of the guardian protecting the interests of the minor to sue on such contracts on his behalf.

When such a suit is brought, it is the duty of the Court to entertain it and dispose of it according to law and not on grounds of expediency, real or supposed. If the Court refuses to give relief on the ground that the suit can be brought by the minor after he has arrived at the age of majority, then the minor's interest may be seriously prejudiced by reason of important evidence disappearing by the time the suit is brought.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Kanara, in Appeal No. 170 of 1909, reversing that passed by the Subordinate Judge of Kumta, in Civil Suit No. 210 of 1908.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The learned District Judge has clearly erred in law in holding that because it is competent for the minor either to disaffirm or to affirm the contract when he arrives at the age of majority, therefore, it is advisable to dismiss the present suit. The District Judge allows that, as a matter of law, the suit must be entertained, but on the grounds mentioned, he has non-suited the plaintiff. It is true that it is open to the minor to either affirm or disaffirm a contract entered into by his guardian but not binding upon him, but at the same time it is the right of the guardian protecting the interests of the minor to sue on such contracts on his behalf; when such a suit is brought, it is the duty of the Court to entertain it and dispose of it according to law and not on grounds of expediency, real or supposed. If the Court refuses to give relief on the ground that the suit can be brought by the minor after he has arrived at the age of majority, then the minor's interests may be seriously prejudiced by reason of important evidence disappearing by the time the suit is brought. In any case, the law allowing such suits to be brought on the minor's behalf, we must reverse the decree and remand the appeal for disposal by the District Court according to law.

The appellant must have his costs of this appeal.

Other costs to be costs in the appeal in the lower Court.

Decree reversed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 23, 24, 65—Illegal contract—Part of consideration being stifling of criminal prosecution—Whole contract illegal—"Discovered to be void"—Restitution by party to illegal transaction.

The expression "discovered to be void" in section 65 of the Contract Act is appropriate only to cases where the agreement is void by reason of some fact not known to the parties at the time of making it.

Where the agreement is void for illegality, no suit for restitution will lie.

Dayabhai Tribhovandas v. Lakhmichand Panachand, 9 B. 358; Ismailji Yusufali v. Raghunath Lachiram, 11 Bom. L. R. 748; 33 B. 636; 3 Ind. Cas. 779, followed.

Jijibhai Laldas v. Nagji Gulab, 11 Bom. L. R. 693; 3 Ind. Cas. 761, not followed.

No relief can be obtained on a contract which is tainted with illegality. The reason for the rule is that the Court will not lend itself in any way to assist a person who has taken part in an illegal transaction.

A. agreed, in consideration of the withdrawal by B. of a suit against A., to suffer an award to be proved as to payment of money and also to procure that one C. should drop an application for sanction to prosecute B. for perjury. A. performed his part of the agreement but B. failed to withdraw the suit. A. thereupon sued to recover the benefits conferred on B. by the agreement:

Held, (1) that the whole agreement was illegal as A. could not ignore the illegal part of the agreement;

(2) that no relief could be granted to A. on the illegal contract.

Appeal against the decision of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Sind.

Mr. Rup Chand Bilaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' trustees under the Will of Shewaram alleged that they had entered into a contract with the defendant whereby they were to suffer an award in defendant's favour of Rs. 2,125 in lieu of a claim to stables under the Will and for interest at 6 per cent. per annum on his legacy and the defendant in consideration for these benefits should withdraw a suit that he had filed for the removal of the plaintiffs from their office of trustees. They further alleged that the defendant had fraudulently omitted to carry out his part of the agreement and they sued to recover the benefits conferred on the defendant by the agreement.

The defendant in his written statement denied the agreement as pleaded by the plaintiffs and alleged that the agreement actually entered into was void as being contrary to public policy.

It is significant that in spite of this denial, the plaintiffs offered no oral evidence in support of the agreement. They evidently wished to put the defendant in the disadvantageous position of having to allege the illegal purpose of the agreement. They, however, put in the judgment of this Court in First Appeal No. 15 of 1906, which related to the same agreement. This judgment was adopted by the lower Court as proof of the agreement and the finding of the lower Court on this point is not questioned before us. The agreement, therefore, was as recited in that judgment that plaintiffs should, in consideration of the withdrawal of the suit against them, not only suffer the award to be proved as to payment of money, but also procure that one Khimibai should drop an application for sanction to prosecute the defendant for perjury.

Now, the plaintiffs cannot ignore this illegal part of the agreement, for to do so would be to set up a new agreement and one which was never entered into. Nor can they obtain any relief on a contract which is tainted with illegality, for in such a case the maxim applies that in pari delicto potior est conditio defendantis. The finding of the lower Court appears to assume that the parties were not in pari delicto. It is difficult to see what grounds there can be for this assumption. Both parties must have known that it was illegal to stifle a prosecution and it is not suggested that the parties were not treating on equal terms.

Mr. Hirdaram argues that as no illegal consideration was to proceed from the defendant, there is no objection to confirming the agreement. This argument ignores the principle on which the rule of law is based. The reason for the rule is that the Court will not lend itself in any way to assist a person who has taken part in an illegal transaction. Here the plaintiffs have not only taken part in an illegal transaction, but have actually carried out the illegal promise.

The next contention is, that plaintiffs are entitled to compensation under section 65 of the Indian Contract Act. There are some remarks of Sir Basil Scott, Chief Justice, in Jijibhai Laldas v. Nagji Gulab (1), which imply that the section applies to a contract which is void for illegality. We are, however, unable to put this construction on the section. It was decided in Dayabhai Tribhovandas v. Lakhmichand Panachand (2) that the section did not apply to a contract of wager; and, as remaked by Pollock in his commentary, the expression "discovered to be void" in section 65 is appropriate only to cases where the agreement is void by reason of some fact not known to the parties at the time of making it. As, for instance, in The Secretary of State v. Seth Jeshingbhai Hathi Sang (3), an agreement to pay quit rent was held to be void by reason of a mistake both of Government and the Inamdars that the latter were superior holders of certain vanta lands; and the Inamdars were given a refund of quit rent under section 65 of the Contract Act. But where the agreement is void for illegality, no suit for restitution will lie. See, for instance, Ismalji Yusufali v. Raghunath Lachiram Marwadi (4). One of the parties to an agreement which was illegal under the Salt Act had made a deposit of Rs. 1,000 with the other party. His suit to recover this deposit was dismissed as the agreement was illegal.

So here the plaintiffs cannot succeed on an agreement which is illegal and their suit must fail. At the same time, we concur with the remarks of the lower Court as to the conduct of the defendant. He has taken advantage of plaintiffs' natural anxiety to avoid litigation and has, as the Judge says, played them a very dirty trick. We shall not allow him his costs.

We reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. Exch party to bear his own costs.

Suit dismissed.

Res judicata—Rent suit—Scope of issue—Incidents of tenancy—Not relating to claim for particular year— Raikumat—Legally recoverable if payable under custom

BECHA RAM SAHU v. CHAMRU URAON.

—Decision that raikumat payable, whether res judicata.

The decision in a rent suit may operate as res judicata, where it is upon a question as to the incidents of the tenancy, not merely in relation to the claim for that particular year, but from a wider point of view.

Kali Kumar v. Bidhu Bhushan, 10 Ind. Cas. 382; 16 C. L. J. 89, Joy Kali v. Hemangini, 10 Ind. Cas. 363 and Padmanund Singh v. Rodhe Singh, 9 C. W. N. 469, relied upon.

Orjoon Sahoo v. Anund Singh, 10 W. R. 257 and Woomesh Chandra Maitra v. Barada Das Maitra, 28 C. 17, referred to.

Radha Prosad Singh v. Bal Kowar Koeri, 17 C. 725, explained.

Raikumat is legally recoverable if it is payable under a custom.

Bhudhna Orawan Mahtoon v. Juggessur Doyal Singh, 24 W. R. 4, relied upon.

Therefore, a decision that raikumat was payable, in a previous rent suit, involved, by implication at any rate, a decision that the raikumat claimed was payable under a custom; and the decision, being upon a mixed question of fact and law, operates as res judicata.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for rent. The sole point in controversy between the parties is, whether the claim for recovery of raikumats is barred by the doctrine of res judicata. It appears that in a previous suit for rent against some of the present defendants, a claim was put forward by the plaintiff for the recovery of raikumats. The claim was resisted by the defendants and an issue was raised whether the defendants were liable to pay any raikumat. The Court came to the conclusion that raikumats were payable and made a decree accordingly. In the present litigation, the raikumats have been claimed again and the claim has been resisted. The Court of first instance allowed the claim but that decree has been reversed by the Judicial Commissioner on the authority of the decision in Orjoon Sahoo v. Anund Singh (1). In support of the appeal, it has been contended that the decision in a suit for rent may operate as res judicata and that the answer to the question whether the decision in a particular case does or does not operate as res judicata depends upon the scope of the issue raised and the determination thereon. In our opinion, there is no room for controversy that this contention is well founded. The cases of Kali Kumar v Bidhu Bhushan (2); Joy Kali v. Hemangini (3) and Raja Padmanand Singh v. Radhe Singh (4) support the proposition that, if in a suit for rent a question has been raised as to the incidents of the tenancy, not merely in relation to the claim for that particular year, but from a wider point of view, the decision thereon does operate as res judicata. The case of Orjoon Sahoo v. Anund Singh (1) is not opposed to this view. Nor is the case of Woomesh Chandra Maitra v. Baroda Das Maitra (5) an authority for the contrary proposition. In the case last mentioned, it was found that the question of the true character of certain sum claimed as rent was not raised in the previous litigation between the parties. In the subsequent suit, the question was raised and when it was contended that the question was res judicata, it was held that as there had been no previous adjudication, the earlier decision did not operate as res judicata. Nor could the doctrine of constructive res judicata apply, because the subject-matters of the two suits were different. Similar remarks apply to the case of Ricketts v. Raneswar Malia (6). It may be conceded that there are isolated observations in the decision of Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., in the case of Radha Prosad Singh v. Bal Kowar Koeri (7), which may lend some apparent support to the contention that a judicial determination that a particular sum claimed as abwab is not payable because it is an abwab, does not operate as res judicata. It is difficult to believe, however, that the learned Chief Justice could have intended to lay down any such sweeping proposition and unquestionably it does not follow from the decision of the Judicial Committee in Tilukhdhari Singh v. Chulhan Mahton (8), to which he made reference. In the case before us, as we have already explained, the claim for recovery of raikumats was disputed in the previous suit. Now, raikumat is legally recoverable if it is payable under a custom as is clear from the decision in the case of Bhuzhna Orawan Mahtoon v. Juggessur Doyal Singh (9). The decision, therefore, in the earlier suit that raikumat was payable involved, by implication at any rate, a decision that the raikumat claimed was payable under a custom; even if the decision be assumed to have been erroneous, it was a decision upon a mixed question of fact and law, and operates as res judicata. Aghore Nath v. Kamini Debi (10). Consequently, it is not open to such of the defendants, as were parties to the previous litigation, to contest the claim of the plaintiff in the present suit on the ground that a raikumat is not leviable under the law. No doubt, as regards the other defendants who were not parties to the previous litigations, it was open to the Judicial Commissioner to find, as he has found upon the evidence, that raikumat is not payable; but that determination is obviously of no benefit to the other defendants, who are bound by the decision in the previous suit. There is no anomaly involved in this position, because these defendants are in occupation of separate parcels, and a joint suit has been brought against them only by reason of the special provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. In fact, the suit is really in the nature of a composite suit for recovery of rent and raikumat against different defendants for different parcels of land.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Judicial Commissioner varied and a decree made for raikumat against those defendants only who were parties to the previous litigation. As regards the defendants who were not parties to the previous litigation, the decision of the Judicial Commissioner will stand confirmed. There will be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed partly.
